Farewell To Lieut. Hodgson

An interesting event took place at the Armouries last night when the officers of the Regiment assembled to say farewell to Lieut. J. F. Hodgson, who is leaving the city for Lethbridge, after a connection of some six or seven years with the 57th Regiment. Lieut Hodgson has been most popular with his fellow officers, and they took advantage of the occasion last night to present him with a handsome gold-headed cane, the presentation being made by Lt.-Col. Clegg, on behalf of the officers of the Regiment. Speeches were made by the senior officers present, expressing regret at the departure of Lieut. Hodgson and expressing appreciation of his services in connection with the Regiment and with the Collegiate Cadet Corps.

Second Autopsy

BOSTON, MASS., OCT. 25.—A second autopsy was made to-day on the body of Avis Linnell.

At the same time, the mystery surrounding her death was deepened when a search of the girl's bathrobe failed to disclose any vial or paper which might have contained the cyanide of potassium which the medical authorities declare positively caused her death.

The second autopsy to-day was the third time the girl's body has been examined. The first was performed after the finding of her body in the bathroom in the Y.W.C.A. The second examination was made at midnight last night, when the girl's coffin, brought back from the grave at Hyannis, was opened and the bathrobe searched.

THIRD EXAMINATION

The third examination was made when the second autopsy was performed, this morning, only after Police Captain Ainslee Armstrong, head of the Bureau of Criminal Investigation, had demanded it. Armstrong asserted emphatically he was not satisfied with the haphazard manner in which the first autopsy had been made.

What this second autopsy will reveal is not yet known. All the internal organs of the girl were removed and probably will be sent to the laboratory at Harvard for a quantitative as well as a qualitative analysis, so that the chemists may ascertain exactly how much cyanide she took, and of what grade it was.

The midnight opening of the casket was gruesome. Under the glare of the electric lights in the city morgue, Medical Examiner Leary and Dr. Kendricks, his assistant, took the bathrobe from the coffin and examined it carefully. Although they declined to tell what had been disclosed, it was learned from other sources that no poison container was found.

A BAFFLING QUESTION

How the girl could have disposed of the bottle or paper which contained the cyanide of potassium is a question that has completely baffled the police, and they admit to-day it is a point in their chain of evidence against Dr. Richeson that is materially weak.

The police had hoped to find a vial or paper in the girl's bathrobe and to establish that such a bottle had been in the possession of Dr. Richeson. In this way the police hoped to establish positively that Richeson was the girl's murderer.

In that, however, they were foiled. The police are, therefore, advancing a new theory, that the poison was given to Miss Linnell in a gelatine capsule. They say the person who gave Miss Linnell the drug could easily have opened a quinine capsule, refilled it with powdered cyanide, and given it to the girl. This, they say would explain the absence of a bottle or paper. The police say that this capsule theory may even account for the mysterious length of time it took the cyanide to kill the girl. Cyanide is instantaneously fatal, but the police say it may have taken the capsule some time to dissolve after she swallowed it.

DEFENCE OUTWITTED

The midnight opening of the casket was done to prevent the defence from securing an injunction. Richeson's attorneys had applied to Judge Murray for an injunction, and Judge Murray had agreed to hand down a decision at nine o'clock this morning. The State thereupon hastened the examination and autopsy to forestall such a legal move.

District Attorney Pelletier announced to-day that he had engaged four medical experts to assist Examiner Leary in the second autopsy and the various medical phases of the case. They are: Dr. William F. Whitney, medico-legal expert chemist, Harvard; Dr. Charles Sedgewick Minor, professor of embryology, Harvard; Dr. Alfred W. Balch, Tufts College, and Dr. R. L. Emerson, chemist and author.

In Municipal Court to-day Philip R. Dunbar, of counsel for the defence, demanded that the defence be permitted to have witnesses present at the second autopsy to-day. If evidence is submitted from any further examination held without such a witness, the defence will protest against its admissability, Dunbar declared.

FIVE APPLES A DAY

Every man, woman and child in the United States should eat five apples a day this winter, according to an appeal from the growers. Five apples a day for each of 90,000,000 people would mean 450,000,000 apples; but the country's orchards are perfectly capable of standing the strain. The United States government has forecasted a crop at least 25 per cent in excess of last year's crop of 14,000,000 barrels; but as a matter of fact, the big apple shippers of this city do not hesitate to assert that fully 20,000,000 barrels will be disposed of, leaving out of consideration thousands of bushels of apples used for drying, for preserving, and for cider, and those left on the trees or ground to waste.

It is the farmers of the country—that is to say, the apple farmers—who have set up the plea for every person to eat five apples a day. They base their plea on two considerations. In the first place, they unselfishly state, eating five apples a day will be very beneficial to everybody. In the second place, such a steady consumption of fruit will be extremely useful to the apple industry. It will probably mean that there will be no leftovers in the storage warehouses. Five apples a day for each of 90,000,000 people for a whole winter would mean that there would be nothing left of the eating-apple crop.

Such a campaign of apple eating would help the farmers, they say, more than would a federal commission to inquire into means of promoting apple consumption or the happiness of farmers' wives. Furthermore, they argue, the institution of the custom of eating five apples a day would do away with all necessity of organizing a national health board, such as has been proposed. There wouldn't be any sick people for the health board to take care of. You see, apples are good for the digestion, and good digestion means health and long life, and so—well, it is too simple a proposition to need more elaborate explanation. Eat five apples a day, that is all that is necessary.

There are several things that the farmers have forgotten to explain in their appeal to the public, however. They haven't specified when the five apples should be consumed, whether one should have a Northern Spy before breakfast and a Baldwin after dinner, or vice versa; whether one should eat a Greening just before retiring or gnaw gingerly at a Russet. Now, these are important questions to one who contemplates getting the apple habit, and the farmers who are responsible for appealing to the country to forget the tariff on woolens and foodstuffs and come to the aid of the apple industry should make haste to repair their oversight.

There is another thing, too, that is not altogether satisfactory in contemplating the apple habit. While the price of apples has gone down somewhat this season, the dealers do not hesitate to say that the ultimate consumer, who will be the principal victim of the habit, must pay from $5 to $8 a barrel for really good apples. This goes to show that the tendency of the apple industry has been identical with that of all the other industries, infant and grown-up.

The best scheme would appear to be for persons planning to acquire the apple habit to band together and purchase their fruit at wholesale, a proceeding which would cut the price practically in half. Apples can readily be purchased at wholesale rate in the upper tiers of counties in this state. Indeed, New York is one of the greatest orchard states, the tract of country between Rochester and Oswego producing about 3,000,000 barrels of the finest apples put on the market.—New York Evening Post.

You Will Need a New RUG or so This Fall

Why Not a Fine Seamless Axminster?

Of Scotch origin--these rugs exhibit some of the staunch endurance which goes with the Scottish character. Yet their appearance is elegant in the extreme. Woven without a seam, they have a distinction all their own.

Deep or delicate tints—pronounced or inobstructive patterns offer a wide scope for individual selection.

And each piece bears a price of extreme moderation for a floor-covering of such high quality, and extraordinary beauty of design and colouring.

THE WIDOW'S MITE

A merged exemplification of that well-known Biblical story. "The Widow's Mite," was witnessed on George street yesterday afternoon by a few people. The two characters in the touching episode was a blind man seeking alms, and an aged widow lady, whose care worn face and furrowed brow, shaded with silvery hair, indicated that life with her had not been a bed of roses. Seating herself on the window ledge beside the blind man, she fumbled with the knot of a soiled handkerchief, taking therefrom a coin, while he dropped into the beggar's cup, and with a cheery goodbye, her face lit up with a radiant smile as she went on her way rejoicing.

MILK UP IN LINDSAY

(Lindsay Post.)

As announced a few days ago the milk vendors doing business in Lindsay will, after Nov. 1st, advance the price of milk to seven cents a quart.

Tuesday the Post was phoned to by a resident who keeps a cow, who stated the milkmen were being criticised strongly by some citizens for making the advance. It was pointed out by the citizens in question that there was no money made in selling milk at six cents a quart. There was a great scarcity of feed and with hay selling at $16 per ton, very little was left for the milk vendors. Then there were other items of expense besides the feed for the cattle and it was also pointed out that the residents of Peterborough, Fenelon Falls and other centres were paying more for their milk than Lindsay citizens. In fact in some towns it was selling at 8c. a quart.

Lecture To-night

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"YES," said the lady-who-always-knows somehow, "she is a very good optimist about other people's troubles."

Did you ever meet that kind of an optimist?

Of course you have.

For some of him or her is to be found in every community.

The dressmaker telephones you that she has found she can't possibly get your gown done in time for the wedding. It is the first new "best dress" you have had for four years and you have been looking forward to appearing in it as quite an event. Yearning for warm human sympathy you foolishly tell the other people's optimist about it and she gives you instead the cold comfort of vicarious optimism—

"Oh, well, you'll have it for the next wedding (an indeterminately distant event.) And anyhow your blue dress looks very well. (You have worn that gown to every formal event since you were married.) Besides no one will be looking at you at a wedding, anyhow so it doesn't matter. Everyone looks at the bride."

Or you are suffering agonies from rheumatism in your hand and whenever she sees you, instead of sympathizing with your pain, she works herself up into a frenzy of thankfulness that it was your left and not your right hand.

There is a pathetic little woman in my acquaintance who was left all alone in the world many years ago by the death of her only daughter and her husband. Since then she has supported herself by "accommodating"—and in her case the work she does really more than justifies the word for there are many, many households where people say, "We don't know what we should have done in such and such a time of trouble if it hadn't been for Mrs. S."

This woman was telling me about her bereavement one day and she ended by saying, "Well, Miss Ruth, I dont' suppose it's Christian for me to feel so badly. Miss Bemis, she always tells me I ought to remember that because of my bereavement I have been placed so that I could help a great many people in time of need, and that I ought to think of that when I'm tempted to feel unresigned."

Now, as it happens, Miss Bemis herself has recently lost through illness a very comfortable berth which she held for many years and has been obliged to take up somewhat the same sort of work that Mrs. S. has done for so many years. And strange to say, her appreciation of the opportunity to be of service is swallowed up in a resentment and unresignation that is painful to come in contact with.

I think it's all too frequently the case that the optimist about other people's troubles is a pessimist about his own.

No, of course we dont' like the person who always has some pessimistic thing to say about our troubles and always looks on the dark side of things.

What we do like is the man or woman who can mix sympathy and encouragement in just the right proporion to make a good cordial for our drooping spirits.

We don't like to have our troubles magnified, but still less do we like to have them made light of.

Most of us at least.

Jumped From Train

BELLEVILLE, OCT. 23.—A man who left Toronto last night on the 10.30 express, and was ticketed for Port Hope, was carried past his destination, and was awakened when the brakeman announced Belleville. He jumped from the train a mile west of the station, and although search was made only a hat besprinkled with blood was found.

Speaking of the affair the Belleville Intelligencer says:

On Saturday night a man fairly well dressed got on board the fast train which was due here at 1.45 on Sunday morning. He had a ticket for Port Hope, but owing to the fact that he fell asleep he did not get off at his place of destination or at Cobourg, the next stopping place of the train before it reaches the city. The man was, however, awake before the train arrived here and heard the brakeman call out "Belleville." When near the Moira street crossing, just west of the G. T. R. bridge the man jumped from the train when it was going at a fair rate of speed. The affair was reported when the train stopped at the station, and some parties went back to the spot, expecting to find a corpse. However, all they found was a hat. Although a diligent search was made no trace of the man was found. His identity is unknown. Port Hope Guide.

Convicts Strike

NEW YORK, OCT. 21.—The formation of a prisoners' union within the walls of Sing Sing, whose members are banded together to put a finish to the airy and offensive manners of their keepers, has resulted in two strikes of convicts within the last two days. In consequence, nearly 250 men spent that time locked up in their cells.

For some time the keepers at Sing Sing have been having trouble with the men, and have noticed signs of an insurrection. The first declaration of war, however, did not come till Thursday morning, when two men in the shoeshop were taken out of the ranks of the toilers and sent to their cells for insolence to their keepers. At once the other eighty odd shoemakers announced that they would not strike a tap until their two fellow workers were brought back, and they held out till the two men were released and put back at work.

The 156 husky bad men who knit socks and underwear walked into the knitting department yesterday morning and stood at attention before their machines, as if ready to fall to the minute the power was turned on, but no power came because some one had cut the wires which transmit the current from the dynamos. The machines were out of commission for the day, and the knitters spent the time in their cells. The men say that the foreman, Edward Durby, makes them work too hard, and they declare that the "lockout" will continue until a new foreman is appointed.

Said Good-bye To The Cadets

Yesterday afternoon, in the Armouries, Mr. Hodgson reviewed the Collegiate Cadet Corps, prior to his departure for the West. After the battalion had marched past in column and quarter-column, and had been formed into line, Cadet Major Mowat, on behalf of the Cadets, expressed their regret at his departure and their wishes for his future success. He then called for three cheers for Mr. Hodgson, which were given with much enthusiasm. In reply, Mr. Hodgson referred to his connection with the Corps of seven years, and reviewed its growth from a single company to its present status as an organized battalion.

Two More Children

E. Montgomery, from near Burleigh, who was charged with neglecting his children, appeared before Magistrate Edmison in the County Court this morning, a bright little boy of 7 and a little girl of 13 years of age, were transferred to the Children's Aid Society. Mr. F. D. Kerr appeared for Montgomery, while Mr. E. N. Goodwill appeared for the Children's Aid Society. High County Constable Cochrane visited the home of the children some time ago, and reported finding them in a desolate state. Their home was a little, log huse, through the roof of which the rain poured during a storm, and which was found to be in a desolate and filthy condition. According to information received, Montgomery, while at work in the woods, skidding logs etc., had the little girl help him with the work, and this was considered by the court to be an abuse, as well as a neglect.

A UNIQUE WINDOW

That the art of window dressing has reached a high stage of perfection in this city, manifests itself in a manner that speaks well for the ability and painstaking care of those who have charge of the work. Conclusive evidence of what can be accomplished along the lines of successful window dressing can be seen by a visit to the window of the Peterborough Hardware Company. Here you will see a deviation from the old orthodox style of displaying "stock in trade" alone. The use of some of nature's products has been resorted to, with the result that the ensemble is at once both unique and attractive.

The stock in trade of the window consists of knives and forks, carving pieces, etc., in the centre of which is a table bearing a large pumpkin and other products of the vegetable kingdom. The whole is surmounted by a large pumpkin cut in "Jack o' Lantern" style in which is cunningly concealed an electric flash light and when seen at night, presents a very striking effect.

THE MOOSE AND THE LILY PAD

The moose's love for the lily pad that floats on the surface of the northern lakes makes him appear reckless and unafraid. In summer, even in September, the fishermen often cut him off from the shore, drive him into deep water and have fun with him. Sometimes, when the moose reaches shoal water and gets his hind feet on the bottom, he has fun with the fisherman, smashes his canoe and makes him swim for his life.

However, after the shooting season opens the moose becomes more cautious.

There are thousands of moose around Lake Temagami. At North Bay you change from the Grand Trunk to the Temiskaming and Northern Ontario and get off at Temagami Station.

A GOOD WANT AD.

Is, of course, one which will bring the greatest number of replies or answers. It is a law that increased demand makes certain the quickest sale.

The Want Ad. is the briefest kind of an ad that is ever written, and hence, in its brevity there must be wit-wisdom. The Want Ad. can only interest the reader on the basis of his interest. Each reader is interested in each and all of the five essentials to every Want Ad. These essentials, in the order of their importance, are, first, the names of the article or thing advertised; second, the quality of the article or the kind of thing advertised; third, the price of the article or thing advertised; fourth, the address, (phone, or street number) of the advertiser, and, fifth, the name of the advertiser.

When the above essentials are fully and truthfully stated in the Want Ad., the best results are obtained; but in proportion to the number of these essentials omitted from the Ad., does the advertiser curtail the results to his ad. Each Want ad. is an opportunity; look for them in The Examiner. Phone 57.

Many Changes

The Peterborough Optical Institute has undergone various changes recently, both internally and externally. The reception and examination rooms and workrooms have all been enlarged, while the walls of each have been repapered with soft brown tints of green. The illuminated sign has also been renovated.

Mr. Browett has made many additions to his furnishings and instruments; amongst some of the latest additions are: a modern refracting chair for the use of optometrists in making examinations of eyes, manufactured by the Kirstein Co. of Rochester; a prisoptometer, for estimating the focal powers of the eyes, with double prisms by means of which it is able to discern the difference between the focal powers at different angles or meridians of the eyes. A Cross retinoscope, which together with the De Zlug luminous Retinoscope (for estimating the sight of the eye independent of the use of charts or test lenses) and the Loring Ophtalmoscope are instruments which are now used in making an examination of the eye. The examination room is 22 ft. by 6 ft. and can be darkened for part of the examination.

The Institute also contains a modern adjusting table, manufactured by the Globe Optical Co. of Boston, with tools and appliances necessary for the rapid and effectual adjustment of eye glass mounting and spectacle frames. This table has a bevel plate top and trays in which are kept the glasses which have been made up to prescription for various patients. At the time of writing these trays held no less than thirty-four pairs of glasses.

OBITUARY

MRS. GEORGE FITZGERALD.

In the death last evening at five o'clock, of Mrs. George W. Fitzgerald, of London street, a universally known resident is lost to the city. Her illness only commenced on Saturday and the end, coming so suddenly, was a severe blow to her relatives. Death was due to pneumonia.

The deceased, who was sixty-one years of age, was born in the township of Smith, and was married there to Mr. Fitzgerald, who, for a great many years, carried on the farming industry. Mr. Fitzgerald was for a number of years warden of the County of Peterborough, and eventually was appointed Government Inspector of Fisheries and Game, the territory under his jurisdiction extending from Napanee to North Bay. Eight years ago the family came to reside in Peterborough, where Mr. Fitzgerald passed away in January last.

Mrs. Fitzgerald was a lady whose sincere and sympathetic disposition made her beloved of all those who were fortunate enough to know her, and the relatives have the sympathy of a wide circle of friends.

The deceased lady is survived by four daughters, Mrs. Nelson J. Allen, Sask., Mrs. McConkey, city, Mrs. Hanna of Montreal, and Miss Edna at home, and four sons, Clarence of Vancouver, Percy, Walter and Alex all at home. Three brothers also mourn her loss, in the persons of James of Jamestown, Porter of Macklin, Sask., and Christopher, and one sister, Mrs. Brookhouser of Erie.

The funeral will take place to-morrow afternoon. Service at the house at 2.30, after which the funeral cortege will proceed to the Little Lake cemetery for interment. The Rev. J. R. Webb will officiate.

There it Goes Again.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—The "great platform meeting" mentioned in your column by John Carlisle, was the meeting of the British Association at Oxford, in 1860, at which Darwin's theory of the Origin of Species was under discussion. The famous questions concerning monkey ancestry were flippantly and personally addressed by His Lordship the Bishop of Oxford to Professor Huxley. In reply, on this point, Huxley first explained that the suggestion was of descent through thousands of generations, from a common ancestor, and then went on to this effect. "But if this question is treated not as a matter for the calm investigation of science, but as a matter of sentiment and if I am asked whether I would choose to be descended from the poor animal of low intelligence and stooping gait, who grins and chatters as we pass, or from a man endowed with great ability, and splendid position, who should use these gifts to discredit and crush humble seekers after truth, I hesitate what answer to make." The Bishop's silence throughout the remainder of that meeting and forever afterwards, on the subject of monkey-grandparents, though fully appreciated by the members of the British Association, will probably never be understood by such persons as your correspondent of Oct. 24th.

The account of this famous meeting, as given in the lives of Huxley and of Darwin, is intersting in many ways.

Reader.

THE KINGDOM OF GOD.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Few people to-day look for the coming of the King, in the same sense in which Jesus taught when in the flesh. Many Scriptures, referring to the first appearance of Christ, at the present already fulfilled, are held by even learned men to refer to the second advent.

The Jews looked for a king to set up an earthly kingdom, and make their nation rule the whole universe, as had been done in times past by Babylonia, Medo-Persia, Greece, and was then being ruled by Rome. They knew the first prophecy at the gate of Paradise, which gave the seed of woman power over sin. However, they failed to recognize its fulfilment in the angel's words to Joseph: "And she shall bring forth a son, and thou shalt call his name Jesus; for it is he that shall save His people from their sins." Mat. 1:21. Neither did they understand the sign spoken of in Isaiah 1:14, "Therefore, the Lord himself will give you a sign; a Virgin shall bring forth a son, and shall call his name Immanuel." Immanuel meaning "God with us." People then sought a sign, as many now, of this promised kingdom, which the Jewish teachers of that day thought as many teachers of to-day, a literal kingdom. One established under political and physical conditions, as other kingdoms, except they would be the masters. Even the mother of Zebedee's children came worshipping Jesus, asking that her two sons, James and John should hold the two most important positions in his kingdom. Jesus answered, "Ye know not what ye ask." Later, Jesus explained to the Disciples that if any would be great, he should be their minister; if any would be chief, he should be their servant; that in His kingdom it should not be as with the princes of the Gentiles. (See Mat. 20, 20-22. Even three years of teaching failed to reveal to the disciples the true nature of the Saviour's kingdom. Much less did the religionists of that day understand the angels' words to Mary: "The Lord God shall give unto Him the throne of his father, David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob for ever, and of His kingdom there shell be no end." —Luke 1:32, 33.

The rulers could tell Herod all about the prophecies concerning this Governor they were looking for, that he should be born in Bethlehem of Judea; that He should rule Israel. Mat. 2:6. With all this they were not convinced by the Shepherd's testimony of the great light that shone about them; the angel's words: "Unto you is born a Saviour," and the song of the Heavenly host: "Glory to God in the highest, and on earth, peace, good will toward man." Luke 2:10-14.

Much less did they heed John the Baptist's public preaching: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Mat. 3:2.

Dear reader, notice nineteen hundred years ago the "Kingdom of Heaven" at hand, also that it was without end. Because the nature of the kingdom Jesus preached did not meet the Jews' expectations of a literal, earthly kingdom they crucified Him; ever after they have been a disappointed, scattered people. At the trial, Jesus plainly told Pilate: "My Kingdom is not of this world." John 18:36.

With the Crucified One in the tomb with a Roman guard, and a Roman seal on the massive stone before the door, the rulers rejoiced. He was conquered. But, lo and behold, "He arose, as He said." Death was conquered; was swallowed up in victory. The promises Jesus made us of the resurrection of our bodies were here verified by his vivid example. Not only death alone, but sin, also was conquered. Praise God! No wonder John marveled and exclaimed: "Behold the Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world." Away back there the "Seed of Woman conquered sin," from which every child of God is saved. Not saved from sin in a future age; no one knowing how, or where, but through the power of God, by regeneration, in this present evil world. Please read these few short scriptures: Tit. 2:11, 12; John, 1:12; 1 John 3:3, 5.

Let Daniel Testify.

The vision of Daniel of the image with head of gold, breast of silver, thighs of brass, legs of iron, and feet of clay. Babylonia, Medo-Persia, Greece, Rome; they had no reference to any other time than the ministry of Christ in the days of Augustus Caesar. "In the days of these kings (kingdoms) shall the God of Heaven set up a kingdom, which shall never be destroyed, but shall break in pieces and consume all these kingdoms, and it shall stand for ever. Dan. 2:44. Each of these four kingdoms ruled the world one after the other, Rome being last; Augustus Caesar ruling over three millions of people, during whose reign God linked himself with humanity through woman and established His Kingdom. "The law and the prophets were until John; from that time the gospel of the Kingdom of God is preached, and every man entereth violently into it." Luke 16:16.

Christ's gospel was the stone cut out of the mountain, without hands (of divine origin) that break in pieces the iron, the brass, the clay, the silver, and the gold. The Gospel overcame Paganism by the testimony of the blood of the Lamb; thus breaking these nations before they left the field of action. Jesus' blood cleanses His true followers of carnality, all are brethren and live at peace; national, race, and colour differences vanish; Jesus' love is enthroned in each heart. These people gathered from all nations, are the subjects in the Kingdom of God, ruled and guided by the Spirit of God, and in obedience to the laws laid down in the Word. In this sense, constituting a kingdom, having laws and subjects, being the fifth and ruling the whole world, and shall never be destroyed. When Jesus comes again it will be to gather his elect and punish the wicked, not to reign in the earth, but the saved will continue to reign with Him, even after mortality has put on immortality.

Jesus looked back to this same prophecy of Daniel's when He was preaching in Galilee, while John the Baptist was in Prison, "The time is fulfilled and the Kingdom of God is at hand; repent ye and believe in the Gospel."

Thieves Rampant In Lindsay

(Lindsay Post)

Thieves are rampant in Lindsay! Twice this week Kent street stores have been broken into, entrances being effected by the rear.

Tuesday night the hardware store of Mr. J. G. Edwards Co., was burglarized and two guns and cartridges to fit were taken. One of the guns was a 22, while the other was a 38.55, Marlin make. The thief or thieves, gained entrance to the store by breaking a window at the rear. From appearances a rock must have been hurled at the window, which would make quite a loud report.

Whoever the thieves were, or whatever might have been their purpose, they were not after money, as neither of the merchants mentioned above, missed any cash from the till. It is quite probable that a couple of young fellows wanted to go for a hunt and took this means of getting the necessary provisions, guns and cartridges.

Chief of Police Chilton has made a thorough examination of the store and no doubt will apprehend the thieves before many days.

COMETS VISIBLE

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL., OCT. 26.—Six comets, two of them bright enough to be seen with the naked eye, are now within the neighbourhood of the sun, according to the reports from Lick Observatory, University of California.

Of the two brightest, one is visible just after sunset, north of the sunset point. It has a bright head and a tail about seven degrees long. It will remain visible for several days.

The second comet is said to be even brighter than Halley's. It was discovered by Dr. Brooks last July. It had last night a tail of twenty degrees in length. It should be looked for in the morning just before five o'clock, northeast of Venus, the morning star.

Blacklisters Fined

A number of heavy fines were imposed at this morning's session of the police court. The victims were all local men but one. A man who lives a few miles north of the city, was fined $5.75 for being drunk and disorderly. The fine was made forthwith and as he did not have the money he will have to remain in gaol until the necessary change is produced, or until he has served the usual ten days.

The License Inspector laid a charge against a man for being drunk, while on the black list, with the result that the man was fined $10 and costs, amounting in all to $12.60. Another man was arraigned for supplying liquor to a blacklister, with the result that this victim had to reluctantly part with $27.60.

A blacklister from the above list, was put in the box to divulge where he got his beverage, but he refused to do this, further than to maintain that he secured it in Port Hope on Civic Holiday and since then had it hidden away. That he did not touch it since then, according to his story, is due to the fact that he hid it so securely when he was drunk that he was unable to find it until the 18th instant, when he immediately went off on a spree, and consumed the contents of the four bottles he bought while in Port Hope.

MR. SANFORD DODGE IN "THE RIGHT OF WAY"

As Charley Steele, the criminal lawyer, in "The Right of Way," Mr. Sanford Dodge has a very congenial role, one that embraces the whole gamut of the serious drama. From his first entrance as the sophisticated, critical, questioning lawyer to the last act where he gives his life, not to save his friend, but his enemy, he is artistic, consistent and convincing. During this time he is obliged to pass through and depict the experiences and heart beats of a lifetime composed of the vicissitudes brought about by an inquiring mind and a checkered career.

In the first act Charley Steele is the brilliant, aristocratic lawyer, with a tendency toward infidelity and although he has been kind and thoughtufl to a degree, towards others and has always been generous and considerate towards friends, one by one they repudiate him, even his own wife is anxious to leave him, and as he says himself, he is a moral poison. He determines to get away from it all, and in order to do so, he goes to the Cote Darion, a river tavern, where, he is told some of the rivermen threaten his life because of his attentions to the girl Suzon, who is the pretty bar maid there. He find the ruffians there, already angry and sullen, and provoking them again and again with the keen shafts of his wit and satire, much the same as the toreador torments the infuriated animals in a Mexican bull ring, they finally rush upon him and in the unequal fight that follows, Charley is struck on the head with a heavy bottle. He is then taken by Joe Portugais, the man he saved from the gallows, and carried to his cabin in the heart of the Vadrome mountains, 200 miles down the river.

The second act shows Charley three years later at Portugais' cabin in the mountains. He is practically well, physically and his mind is extremely active, but his memory of the past is obliterated. A great surgeon from Paris is visiting his brother, the cure of the parish. Charley has fallen in love with Rosalie, the belle of the little village, not remembering that he is already married and she falls deeply in love with him. The surgeon offers to perform an operation which, he believes, will restore Charley's memory, but Steele at first says he does not wish it, but some people see him who have known him in the past and they accuse him of so many things that after a strong scene in which he vainly tries to remember, he says: "Tell the surgeon I am ready. I wish to know the past."

In the third act he recovers his memory after the surgeon's operation, only to realize that although he loves Rosalie, he has a wife living. The people of the parish hear about him and his past and denounce him as a seducer and infidel and the most bitter one of all, the fanatical tailor, attempts his life. In the face of all this he takes Rosalie in his arms, saying, that for their happiness, they have "The Right of Way," and that he will keep her in spite of all the world.

In the last act the church is set on fire, and in order to rescue the man who has tried to injure him, Charley inhales the flames which cause his death. Greater love hath no man than he who gives up his own life for his friend. How much nobler was Charley Steele when he gave his life for his enemy.

Through every situation, every exaction, every demand of this interesting, complex trying role, Mr. Dodge proves himself equal to the occasion and his portrayal is one, once seen can never be forgotten.

TO WIPE OUT COWETA

COWETA, OKLA., OCT. 23.—Prepared to meet with volleys of lead, 300 armed negroes, who are known to be encamped not far from the edge of the town, and only awaiting reinforcements of 500 negroes from Red Bird Okla., before beginning an attempt to wipe out Coweta and all its white inhabitants, 250 white men waited tensely during the early hours this morning for the attack. The battle may begin any minute.

During the forenoon, the citizens were reinforced by a company of the National Guard, who arrived on a special train, and the soldiers with rifles loaded and bayonets fixed, immediately began to patrol the main street.

The negroes, aroused by the lynching of one of their race, who had killed one man and injured two others, have sworn dire vengeance. Emissaries have spread the call to arms among the black men for miles around, and long distance telephone messages tell of large bands of negroes marching towards here from every direction.

Should the attack begin before reinforcements reach here, the white portion of the population may be slaughtered and the town wiped off the map, for the negroes already outnumbered the whites and are better armed. There is hope, however, that Company F, Oklahoma National Guard, and large forces of white men under command of the Sheriffs of Muskogee and Wagoner Counties, will reach here before the fight begins.

Not a white man in Coweta closed his eyes last night. Every man was on guard. The excitement is intense. In barricaded homes, women and children waited in fear.

THE START OF THE WAR

The race war began when a negro named Ruse pushed a white woman off a sidewalk. A white man promptly whipped the negro. Ruse obtained a knife and started out to "get" his assailant.

When Marshal Hart attempted to disarm Ruse, he was shot. Ed. Suddeth, another negro, opened fire on those who had come to the assistance of the marshal and killed City Attorney J. D. Beavers. He also wounded Carmen Oliver and Stellar Thompson.

A mob of white men quickly surrounded Suddeth and hanged him to a water tank. Before life was extinct, he was cut down and taken to the city jail.

When the local officials started to move Suddeth to another town, the mob again gathered and riddled the negro with bullets.

"What's that?" he cried, paling.

"The barometer falling," answered a wag.

"Lord help us!" he moaned as he staggered away to his cabin.

THE BIG FIGHT IS ON

United States Officials Determined to Settle the Steel Trust

STEEL MEN READY

Trenton, N.J., Oct. 27.—The Government's long-planned suit to break up the so-called "steel trust," was begun here yesterday in the United States Circuit Court. It is the most sweeping anti-trust action ever brought by the Department of Justice.

The Government asks not only for the dissolution of the U. S. Steel Corporation, but for the dissolution of all constituent or subsidiary companies which are alleged to have combined in violation of the Sherman law to "maintain, or attempt to maintain, a monopoly of the steel business." There are 36 subsidiary corporations named as defendants.

J. Pierpont Morgan, John D. Rockefeller, Andrew Carnegie, Charles M. Schwab, George W. Perkins, E. H. Gary, John D. Rockefeller, jr., Henry C. Frick, Charles Steele, James Gayley, W. H. Moore, Edmund C. Converse, Percival Roberts, jr., Daniel G. Reid, Norman B. Ream, P. A. B. Widener and William J. Palmer are named individually as defendants.

The Steel Corporation lease of the Great Northern Railway's ore properties, which the directors of the steel company yesterday formally decided to cancel, is alleged to be illegal. The Government acknowledges that it was advised of the Steel Corporation's intention in this respect, but states that under the terms of the lease no cancellation would be effective until Jan. 1, 1915, and there is no limit upon the amount of ore that can be taken out in the meantime.

The Steel Corporation's acquisition of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. during the panic of 1908 is declared illegal and scathingly criticized. The petition declares that E. H. Gary and Henry C. Frick misled former President Roosevelt when they told him "that but little benefit will come to the Steel Corporation from the purchase."

Interlocking directorates through which those in power in the Steel Corporation held positions of influence on the directorates of other powerful corporations, are referred to as "a method more refined, more euphemious, but nevertheless more effective than pools."

The bill goes on to allege the formation of illegal pools known as the "Steel Plate Association, the Structural Steel Association, the Steel Rail Combination, the Wire Rope Combination, the Rubber-Covered Wire Combination, the Horse Shoe Manufacturers' Association, the Underground Power Cable Combination, the Weatherproof and Magnate Wire Combination, the Land Encased Rubber Cable Combination, and the Bare Copper Wire Combination." These are alleged to have been illegal agreements to suppress competition and fix prices in the commodities indicated by their names.

It was not generally supposed that action against the giant corporation was so near at hand. Many believed that the attitude taken by the corporation's officials in recent public statements probably accelerated the carefully-laid plans. The former secretary of war's retention as special counsel became known for the first time yesterday, when the bill was filed.

Will Fight For Its Life.

New York, Oct. 27.—The U. S. Steel Corporation is prepared to fight for its existence. The announcement took the steel men completely by surprise, and they declined to make any comment for the time being. The attitude of the corporation is set forth clearly, however, in a statement which it issued a month ago. In that statement it proclaimed its belief that it was within the law. It declared over the signature of J. P. Morgan that it would not dissolve voluntarily.

Word of the dissolution suit did not reach Wall Street until almost an hour after the close of the stock market for the day, so that its effect upon securities has not been registered. The steel shares were heavy all through the session. The pressure against the stock was attributed to many rumors of pending unfavorable developments following the directors' meeting. Brokers made preparations to place orders in the London market, which opens before the beginning of trading on the New York Exchange this morning.

Saw a Strange Man.

Indianapolis, Ind., Oct. 27.—That a man holding a handkerchief to his face as if to hide his features was seen to emerge from an alley in the rear of the apartment house in which Dr. Helen Knabe lived alone, at 2 o'clock last Tuesday morning, about the hour at which the physician met her death by a knife blow, was the newest lead that had developed yesterday in the police investigation.

A White Girl's Burden.

Toronto, Oct. 27.—For fattening upon the earnings of a girl who says that, were she rid of the load of supporting him, she could and would support herself at honest work, John Jackson, in whose blood there is a strain of color, was sent to the Central Prison for six months yesterday from Police Court.

Factory for Niagara Falls.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 27.—To arrange for the opening of the Canadian branch of the Beaver Manufacturing Co., Birmingham, England, in the city, Samuel Cattell, who will manage the local plant, arrived here yesterday. Aluminum novelties will be manufactured.

Canada Good Enough.

Ottawa, Oct. 27.—The Dominion Government has declined the request of the railway that part of the preventive office of the Customs Department be transferred from Windsor to Detroit so that goods may be examined in transit without unloading at Windsor. The officers will do their work on Canadian territory as formerly.

Just a Stock Exchange Canard.

St. Petersburg, Oct. 27.—There is no truth whatever in the reports circulated abroad of an attempt on the lives of the Emperor and Empress. They are declared officially to have been circulated for the purpose of influencing the market.

Eight Years For Abduction.

Winnipeg, Oct. 27.—George Brown, who abducted Gladys Price, the Snowflake school teacher for one night, was yesterday sentenced at Morden to eight years in the penitentiary. He pleaded guilty.

Opened S. A. Temple.

Brockville, Oct. 27.—The new Salvation Army Temple, erected in Brockville at a cost of almost $10,000, was formally opened last night by Commissioner Rees of Toronto. The chief executive officer was accompanied by Col. Pugmire, Brigadier Hargraves and others. Hon. G. P. Graham presided at the function, and was supported by Senator Derbyshire, Mayor Patterson and other prominent citizens.

Sir Robert Hart's Successor.

London, Oct. 27.—A Pekin despatch to The Times confirms the appointment of Francis Arthur Aglen, deputy inspector general of the Imperial Maritime Customs, China, as the successor of the late Sir Robert Hart.

OXO IN CUBES

EVERY mother should remember these two points about OXO Cubes.
An OXO Cube, in a glass of hot milk, increases the food value of milk enormously—and greatly assists digestion.
An OXO Cube, spread on bread and butter, increases the food value of bread and butter enormously.
OXO Cubes are foods in themselves, and add to the value of other foods by helping digestion.

YIELDS TO THE PEOPLE

Chinese Cabinet Promptly Fires the Unpopular Minister

FOO CHOW HAS FALLEN

Pekin, Oct. 27.—The throne yesterday surrendered to the Tzu Cheng Yuan, China's National Assembly, and in compliance with the demands of the assembly dismissed Sheng Hsuan Huai, Minister of Posts and Communications; ordered Prince Ching, the President of the Cabinet, before a board of inquiry, where he doubtless will be severely dealt with, released from custody the President of the Sze Chuen provincial assembly and other leaders in the riots at Chengtu, and, in fact, agreed to all that the assembly asked, with lack of dignity inconceivable to western observers.

A year ago the throne treated the National Assembly at times almost with contumacy. The Ministers refused to appear before the Assembly, and the budget and other bills submitted to the Assembly for consideration were later put aside for others more suitable to the Palace of the Grand Councillors. Until even a month ago the throne, defiant of the people, issued edicts embodying drastic measures, one in September against the anti-foreign railway agitators in Sze Chuen.

Now, the first resolution of the newly-convened Assembly, carrying consequences of irremediable character, has been granted without a single day's consideration. Sheng Hsuan Huai has been stripped of his ranks, Prince Ching, the Prime Minister, and Natung and Hsu Shih Chang, vice-Prime Ministers, as well as several viceroys, who only obeyed the throne's commands, have been handed over to an inferior board, while the members of the Provincial Assembly, who provoked the uprisings in Sze Chuen, have been released from prison.

Prince Ching was not dismissed from the Premiership, but it is not doubted that the Assembly, now having control of the Government, will cause him to retire at an early date.

The appointment of Tang Shao Yi to succeed Sheng Hsuan Huai is believed to forecast the appointment of Yuan Shi Kai to the second office in the Cabinet, if not to the Premiership.

With the prospect of Yuan Shi Kai, who is a Chinaman, leading the country, now ruled by the National Assembly, it is evident that the Manchus mean to offer to the people complete and immediate constitutional government in return for cessation of hostilities. It is reported that Yuan is already negotiating with the rebels. Members of the legations, who are old in experience in Chinese affairs, would not be surprised if the revolution terminated on these lines, practically without further fighting.

Changing Fortunes of War.

Pekin, Oct. 27.—The Official Gazette announces that General Yin Chang, commander of the Imperial troops, has telegraphed that two rebel regiments on Oct. 23 attacked Santao Kiao, 15 miles distant from Wuchang. The Government troops repelled the rebels. On Monday the rebels, using four guns, forced the third brigade of Imperialists to retire and occupied Tsao Chi Chong. On Tuesday there was some scattered skirmishing, during which some rebels were captured and others defeated.

According to the consular reports yesterday the southern provinces are comparatively quiet. Canton and other rebel centres are reported remarkably peaceful.

Foo Chow Has Fallen.

Shanghai, Oct. 27.—Chinese official telegrams report that Foo Chow has fallen and that the customs have been seized by the rebels.

A despatch from Hankow says that in an engagement Tuesday, chiefly artillery, the rebels were driven back, but the Imperialists failed to follow up their success.

Foo Chow is one of the treaty ports and capital of the Province of Fokien. Inclusive of Nantai, a large suburb and European quarter, the population is estimated at 700,000.

British Sailors Were In It.

Berlin, Oct. 27.—A detailed report of the fighting at Hankow, Oct. 12, received here states that the British gunboat "Thistle" and the American gunboat "Helena" participated.

Will Speak In New York.

New York, Oct. 27.—The annual banquet of the Canadian Club of New York will be held at the Hotel Astor on Monday evening, Nov. 13. The new Cabinet at Ottawa will be represented by Hon. George E. Foster. Among other Canadian speakers will be Prof. Falconer, president of Toronto University, Right Rev. Frederick Courtney, former Bishop of Nova Scotia, and C. P. Branbin, of Montreal, a lawyer, and next to Sir Wilfrid Laurier, perhaps the oldest orator of the Province of Quebec. John Hayes Ham mond will be one of the American speakers.

French Warship In Danger.

Toulon, France, Oct. 27.—An alarming outbreak of fire occurred yesterday on board the French battleship Justice, a sister ship of the Liberte, which was blown up on Sept. 25. The fire is believed to have been due to a short circuit. A shower of sparks fell in dangerous proximity to the magazines, and the commander of the battleship immediately ordered the forward magazines flooded. The fire was not under control and no great damage resulted.

A W.C.T.U. Resolve.

Sherbrooke, Que., Oct. 27.—The W.C.T.U. delegates adopted this resolution: "That we set ourselves against all that is debasing or demoralizing in dress, reading, or entertainment, maintaining that high standard in home life, in social intercourse, or society at large."

Dr. Milligan In Ottawa.

Ottawa, Oct. 27.—Rev. Dr. Milligan, Toronto, who has crossed the Atlantic forty-seven times, is here on his way to Toronto. He has been in Europe since June. He says he will probably shortly publish a "Memorial Volume of Sermons," and other works.

TO CLEAR HIS GUN

This is the Reason McRae Gives For Firing It Off

ILL TREATMENT ALLEGED

Cornwall, Oct. 27.—As far as the evidence went, the trial of F. D. McRae, ex-Reeve of Lancaster Township, charged with the murder of William Shaw, the Carp druggist, ended last evening, and by mutual agreement the addressing of counsel and the charge of Mr. Justice Sutherland were deferred till this morning.

The accused, F. D. McRae, was the last witness. He denied most emphatically that he was excited at the time he fired the rifle, although he had previously been under considerable excitement. He also brought in rather new evidence, to the effect that his brother, D. C. McRae, had asked him, "Farquhar, where is your rifle? This Magee party is armed, and we have no protection," or something to that effect.

In re-charging his rifle a particle of the old shell had jammed in the breach and thus prevented the proper adjustment of the new cartridge. When he arrived in front of his brother's house the Magee party, in their automobile, were going over the rise of ground on the highway, some distance away. In his anxiety to get rid of the cartridge, as he intended leaving the rifle at D. C. McRae's for the latter's protection, he had finally discharged the rifle. He did not kneel down and did not aim at anybody.

He had gone to the woodshed to get an axe, but instead of wishing to detain the Magee party, as stated by some witness, wished to drive them away. After discharging the rifle the witness had put it inside the gate of his brother's residence. He did not know that any person had been shot till he was arrested the next day by Constable John Uren.

Under a very severe cross-examination by Mr. Blackstock, the witness denied telling Rosser where the shot gun was, as when he shot at a crow a few days earlier the gun was at D. C. McRae's. He had not asked anyone to go for his rifle, and his only object was to frighten the intruders.

The first witness of the afternoon session was Miss Davidson, who for eight months was a companion to Mrs. Dr. Magee. She testified to the ill-treatment of Mrs. Magee by her husband. On one occasion she escaped downstairs with her clothes nearly torn off. The doctor had threatened to smash his wife's face.

Mrs. James McRae, daughter-in-law of D. C. McRae, corroborated the evidence of D. C. McRae as to the attack and the drawing of a gun by Uren. She was alongside of Farquhar when the shot was fired, and was positive that he had not used the expression "Protestant hound," nor had aimed the rifle. The Magee party was already over the hill, and their shoulders and the back of the auto only were visible when the shot was fired. She believed that he discharged the gun to get rid of the jammed cartridge.

Wireless Around Empire.

London, Oct. 27.—(C.A.P. Cable.)—An early announcement may be expected to the effect that negotiations have been concluded between the Postoffice Department and the Marconi company for the erection of a chain of wireless telegraph stations round the world, linking up the British dominions and giving Great Britain an independent system of telegraphic communication with any part of the globe.

Connection with the western hemisphere will be affected by means of the station already existing at Glace Bay, and it is proposed to establish another station at Montreal to communicate direct with the West Indies, where all the islands will be connected by short distance stations.

From Glace Bay it will be possible to communicate direct with Vancouver, where a large power station is to be established which will provide direct communication with Hong Kong.

Bombarded With Stones.

Berlin, Ont., Oct. 27.—John Beits, aged 26, and Frederick Ross, 17, were arrested in Doon Village six miles from this place early yesterday morning charged with doing wilful damage to property of their employer, Aaron Good, a farmer, as well as endangering the lives of his family.

During the past week approximately twenty-five panes of glass were broken, and the walls and furniture of Good's residence were badly damaged with stones.

It is intimated that there will be sensational evidence at the trial.

The Duke at St. Kitt's.

St. Catharines, Oct. 27.—His Grace the Duke of Sutherland arrived at Port Dalhousie Wednesday night. Yesterday morning he, Viscount and Lady Castlereigh, the Marquis of Stafford, son of the duke, and Sir Henry Pellatt, were taken on the special car "Ongiara" over the N., St. C. and T. Railway to Niagara Falls, where they spent the day. They returned last night and left Port Dalhousie for Kingston.

REVERSE FOR ITALIANS.

Malta, Oct. 27.—The Italian reverse at Tripoli on Oct. 23, according to steamship passengers who have just arrived here, amounted almost to a rout. An Italian outpost during a reconnaissance encountered a Turkish outpost, which retreated. The Italians followed and found themselves suddenly attacked on all sides.

Three companies of Bersaglieri (light infantry) were totally annihilated. Several officers were made prisoners and mutilated and hanged by irregulars.

The return of the remainder of the Italian force, carrying a great number of wounded—said by some of the passengers to be seven hundred—caused intense excitement among the Arab population of Tripoli. The Arabs attempted to revolt, firing many shots and wounding many Italians. The attempt was soon quelled and hundreds of Mussulmans were arrested and shot. The passengers say that when they left Tripoli the town was still seething with excitement.

Fear Massacre.

London, Oct. 27.—Four hundred Italians were killed or wounded in the fighting around Tripoli on Monday and Tuesday, but all newspaper correspondent were forbidden to communicate the extent of the casualties, according to a news agency despatch received here yesterday from Tripoli, which escaped Italian censorship by being filed at Valetta.

The situation at Tripoli, the despatch adds, is serious. European residents fear a massacre, as a holy war has been proclaimed by the natives of Tripoli and Benghazi.

Plan Advance Into Interior.

Rome (via the Frontier), Oct. 27.—Reports received here yesterday from Tripoli say that Gen. Caneva, commander of the Italian army of occupation, has completed an elaborate plan for an advance into the Tripolitan interior. The movement will be made through the formation of a chain of forts so strongly fortified as to make them impregnable to the enemy.

Each fort will be provided with field artillery and with cavalry for scouting service. In addition each garrison can easily be reinforced from the neighboring forts as all the posts are to be connected by telegraph.

Arabs Repulsed.

Tripoli, Oct. 27.—The Arabs yesterday made a violent attack against the Italian positions between Ei Mesri and Roameliana. They were repulsed with heavy loss. The Italian casualties were only a few wounded.

"The Gun Runner"

By ARTHUR STRINGER

McKinnon heard the guttering yelp of triumph, the unreasoning and vapid snarl of success, of the ship's master who had re-established his disputed mastership.

CHAPTER XXIII.
THE RECAPTURED KEY

McKinnon turned from the quiet and horror-stricken figure of Alicia, huddled back on his berth-end, and contemplated what was left of his broken and dismantled apparatus. He felt like a child in an open boat, without oars, approaching an inevitable Niagara.

Then he turned back to the girl. There was no message of consolation he could bring to her. It came slowly home to him how hopeless the entire future stretched before them. A great hatred for the ship on which he stood grew up in him. His spirit revolted against the horrors it had housed, against the ordeals through which it had thrust a tender and innocent life, against the enigmatic perils with which it was still to threaten that life and his own.

Then he grew calmer-thoughted. He began to grope and probe about for explanations that would sustain her. But the task was a fruitless one. There was nothing to say. Instinctively, as he stooped over her, he touched her hand and murmured, "I'm sorry." He was a man of action always before one of emotion. But he had to swallow hard ,to clear the lump from his throat as he spoke.

He stroked the passive hand that lay on his pillow, with the rough timidity with which a seaman might stroke a tired and captured bird. Then he drew back his berth-curtain and lifted his electric fan from its shelf, placing it on the operating-table so that the current of air from its whirring wings might blow in to where she rested. Then he locked and bolted and doubly secured his cabin door.

"Is it hopeless?" she asked at last, without turning her face to him. She struggled to ask it casually, but the bitter listlessness of her voice translated every tone and word of that question into the notes of utter tragedy.

"No, it's not hopeless," he said combatively, aggressively, for her station. We have international rights sake alone. "This is a De Forest common to all wireless operation. We can stand on those rights. We can hold this room until help of some sort arrives."

It was foolish, he knew, even as he uttered it. They could be driven out, or starved out, or baked out, in a singleday. Yet as he kept up the pleasant fiction, he was infinitely glad of her presence there. He needed her, not because she could buoy him up to meet implacable adversities, but to compel him to sustain himself for her sake.

"We can attach a power-wire to that cabin door-handle, so that no one dare touch it. We can run a wire to——"

His voice trailed off and went out, like a burnt fuse. The change that had come over him was so sudden that the woman turned and sat up.

"Wait!" he called, in a voice so high-pitched it sounded what was almost a treble note. "Wait!"

He stood rooted to the spot for a moment, petrified by the new thought that had come to him.

"It's not hopeless!" he cried exultingly.

"What is it?" asked the other, confronting him.

"It can be done! The models! My telephony models! They carry what is practically a responder!"

The woman watched him, wide-eyed, for he was down on the floor, on his knees, before the box of models, lifting out strange and delicate bits of machinery—machinery for which she had always felt a certain fear and aloofness, since the quiet evening he had spoken to her of high-frequency oscillations and audions and ionising gases.

"I tell you I can make it work!" he exulted.

"Work?" she echoed.

"It'll take time, it'll take scheming, but I can do it! I can have the whole thing rigged up by daylight. By morning I can be sending and receiving again!"

He was on his feet by this time, trying to explain it to her.

"My key's gone, you see; but that doesn't make it hopeless. I can adjust a piece of heavy copper wire to my rear binding-post here. Then I can take the other end of that wire and touch it at the contact point here where my key used to strike. I can spell out the Morse that way, word by word. We'll be able to talk! We'll be able to send out our message!"

"Yes, it's true!"

"Quite true?"

"Every word of it, or I don't know wireless!"

"That means we can call the Princeton!"

"We'll be still closer by morning. I'll be ready and waiting by the time their operator is at his key. And by noon we ought to pick up Guariqui, if we passed the Toajiras Light over three hours ago—no, before that, any time after sunrise!"

"If they are still sending!" said the woman.

"They must be sending," said McKinnon ,as he bent over his mysterious instruments. "They must be, or the Princeton would never have been calling them the way she was."

"Then I must help you in some way!"

"No, you must rest. This is work I have to do alone. You are worn out; you must have rest. You must sleep if you can."

"And you?" she asked.

"Oh, I'll be working this out. There'll be no sleeping in this place, you know, once I start to send!"

"But I meant that you need rest," she explained.

He could even laugh now, although his laughter was both brief and preoccupied.

"Rest!" he cried. "I'm good for two days without a drop of it, once I've got things going the way I'm trying to make them go."

She watched the white electric light of the drop-globe pour down on his bent and constantly shifting head. She could see the little black stain of dried blood on his temple. She could also see the sweat running down the side of his face, between his cheek-bone and his ear. For some inexplicable reason, she gave a throaty and inarticulate little gasp of gratitude.

"What is it?" he asked, looking up quickly.

"Nothing!" she answered, turning away her head so that he would not see a foolish tear or two in her eyes.

"I said things would go our way—and they will!" he declared, ruminatively. "Once we get this message out, we'll have three hundred American bluejackets up in Guariqui inside of two days!"

"And Ganley?" she asked.

"Oh, Ganley will be about again, and very much alive by that time!"

"But what will he do—what could he do, if we reach Puerto Locombia before the Princeton?"

He sat back, deep in troubled thought.

"That is the one thing I don't know, I can't tell. He's hinted at some trump card he's got up his sleeve—but he's given no inkling of what it is."

"Then we can only wait?"

"Yes, we can only wait!"

Then the tightened jaw-tendons relaxed into his quick and conciliating smile. "But why should we waste thought on things like that?" he cried, with his forced yet valiant laugh. "We're going to have a banana train filled with machine guns climbing up through those hills and every rebel in Locombia under cover inside of three days!"

Alicia Boynton did not answer him as he stooped and studied and worked. But she sat there, with her hands clasped loosely together, gratefully and softly watching the aureole of light that the swinging electric made about the wireless-operator's head.

CHAPTER XXIV.
THE CALL FOR HELP

Things did not go McKinnon's way as easily as he had expected, or had bravely pretended to expect. The first gray tinge of morning, deepening slowly to pearl, showed along the eastern skyline before he had completed his task.

He sat back with a sigh of relief; he sat back like a god who had wearied of creation, looking on his work and seeing that it was good. The gray and pearl along the skyline had by this time turned to pale rose, and slender pencils of light were showing through the chinks in his cabin shutter.

Alicia Boynton was still asleep on his narrow berth. So narrow was her resting-place, and so quiet her breathing, that it seemed to him as though she were lying in a coffin. She had dropped off into that sleep of utter weariness against her will. She had resolved to be with him and hear him every moment of his labour, but the intriguing claims of the body had dethroned her volition.

And now, as he gazed down at her flower-like and tranquil face, he dreaded to waken her. He felt touched, as he watched the quiet throb of the pulse in her blue-veined temple where the dark and heavily massed brown hair had fallen back, with a sense of mystery before the ancient miracle of sleep. He wondered where her escaped spirit had gone to; it seemed nothing more than the quiescent shell of her, the empty husk of her, that he stood and watched.

A wayward sense of loneliness, of desertion, crept over him, and he turned about, not ungratefully, to listen to the familiar swish of deck-hose and thump of holy-stone as the early awakened deck-crew washed down the decks. It was commonplace enough, that swish of sea-water and thump of mumbling workers. But at the moment there was something wordlessly companionable in it to the listening McKinnon. It reminded him that the everyday trivialities, the orderly actualities that sustain the machinery of life, must always go on, no matter how close may brood the spirit of outer tragedy. It reminded him, too, that it was morning, and that the hour of his ultimate trial had arrived.

He swung his door open, and looked out along the deck. He beheld a windless sea, and a blood-red tropical sun mounting up above its rim, where dull orange paled into dark azure. On his face he could feel the sea air, still fresh and balmy. There seemed something Edenic in its limpidity, something unearthly in its over-exquisite and unvoluptuous softness. It seemed to ethereal ize life, to beautify even the tainted and sordid bulk of wood and steel and steam that forged ever forward across its universal curve of azure peace. The sea itself, as he stood there watching it, assumed strange and quickly altering tints. Along some slight wind-riffle it became claret-coloured and turquoise and violet. The lacework edge of some wandering current left it royal with floating purple, shot through, in spots, with flushing ruby-red that held all the fire of a housand cinnamon-garnets. In other places some miracle of refracted light made the softly undulatory surface a bosom of breathing quicksilver. Then a point's shift in the sun's altitude merged and darkened the silver into the pale blue of forget-me-nots, deepening it still again into dully lustrous maroon and lapis-lazuli, streaking it with lilac and apple-green, leaving it as varied and mystic as the breast-plate of an Hebraic high priest.

McKinnon took a deep breath of that soft and balmy air, and felt that life was still beautiful. He felt that there were still great hopes to be thankful for, great hazards to be gladly faced, great ends to be attained.

Then his thoughts came down to more material things, as he looked about and beheld a dirty-jacketed and heavy-eyed steward carrying a pewter coffee pot and a tray of fruit and toast and eggs along the deck to the captain's stateroom, but who veered about to the wireless-room door, at a sign from McKinnon.

"Couldn't you leave that with me?" asked the operator.

"It's the captain's," said the steward, moving impassively on.

"Wait!" said McKinnon, taking a bill from his pocket. "Your captain's not even awake yet. And you could have a second trayful up to him in ten minutes."

The heavy-eyed steward willingly enough surrendered his burden when McKinnon thrust the banknote into his hand, and went shuffling below-stairs again, to replace the coffee-pot ad replenish the tray.

McKinnon closed and locked his cabin door, before he set down the breakfast thus caught on the wing. When he looked up he saw Alicia Boynton regarding him with wide-open and vaguely wondering eyes. He felt glad that he had escaped the brutality of waking her to the troubled world that still encompassed them.

"What is it?" she asked.

"It's your breakfast," he said, with studied cheeriness. "You're going to eat it while I start to send."

"Then you can send?" she asked. Her world of reality seemed slow in coming back to her.

"I've got to go to the engine-room first," he explained, "to see about my power."

"What must I do" she asked.

"Lock this door when I go out, and don't open it; don't open it for Captain Yandel himself, until you hear me knock three times."

She had made her hurried toilet by the time he was back, but the coffee and eggs remained untouched. McKinnon, at the still open door, could see that the brief tropical morning had already merged into open day. He could see, too, that they had drawn closer in to the Locombian coast. Along the south-west lay a broken blue line of mountains, remote and lonely looking. They seemed to him, under their high-arching sky of abysmal blue, like some forlorn and ragged rampart of a world's end. Still nearer stretched the alluvial plains and the low, flat line of swampland, broken here and there by clumps of palms, along the higher spots where the ground-swell of the emerald-tinted shallows broke in blinding white on the coral beaches.

Between the toppling peaks of the Cordilleras and the littoral mangrove swamps hung a crawling and miasmal fog, curling and feeling its way inward, like a snake trying to escape the heel of the hot sun. McKinnon's flesh tingled and crept a little as he looked on it, for it disquieted and overawed him, that land of crawling mists and blazing light and flaming heat. The thought of its overcrowded and self-strangling vegetation, of its ceaseless and sinister and over-exuberant life, depressed him. He was glad enough to shut and lock his door on it all.

"You haven't eaten?" he said, as his eye fell on the untouched breakfast.

"I don't think I could," she protested.

"But you must!" he declared; and she found to her wonder, that his note of authority held something vaguely appealing and consoling to her.

"I couldn't until I knew you were sending again!"

He thought over that statement, for the situation had its difficulties.

"Not a word, not a dot, goes out until we've had our breakfast," was his ultimatum. He knew that she needed nourishment. He also knew that it would be unwise to bank too strongly on his untested apparatus. And he knew that defeat, if defeat it was, would be a crushing one. So he ate ,though it was more to encourage her than to appease his own hunger. And when their frugal meal was finished, he looked at his watch with speculative and half-closed eyes. Then he gave a deep sigh and turned to his operating-table.

"Time's up!" was all he said.

The girl, sitting on the berth-edge, saw his hand go up to the switch-board; she saw the lever come down on the contact pins, one by one, and heard the hum and drone of the wakened dynamo. She saw his rubber-muffled fingers catch up the piece of heavy insulated copper wire which had been attached to the dismantled binding-post, and the flash of blue flame that exploded from knob to knob across the spark-gap as he completed his circuit by touching his wire-end to the contact-point of his improvised key. She saw his intently inclined head as he sat listening with his phones pressed close over his ears, and the strong-sinewed yet still oddly boyish-looking face beaded with minute drops of perspiration.

His preoccupied left hand went out to his tuner ,and still he sat there over his reconstructed responder, waiting. The only sound in the cabin was the continuous whir of the electric fan on its unpainted pine shelf. The minutes dragged slowly away. The silence became nerve-torturing, piling up like a wave that refuses to break and fall.

"It's useless, cried the girl.

"Wait!" he commanded.

He leaned forward, slowly, until his breastbone pressed against the edge of the table. Then came a moment or two of unbroken quietness.

"I've got them!" he whispered.

But still again the silence was unbroken as the man with the glimmering steel band across his head sat crooked up like a schoolboy over a slate, listening. His hand went out to the lever-heads in the numeral-lined slots of his tuning-box, as he paused to tune up to the wave-pitch of some as yet undecipherable message. His half-closed eyes opened and widened, and he was suddenly springing for the switch-handle of his starting-box again.

"I've got them," he cried exultingly, as he turned to his key. "I've got to make one hold back, if I can reach him. If not, I've got to tune him out!"

His voice was cut off by the familiar spit and flash of the huge blue spark, and a thin ozonic cloud filled the closed room, strangely like the smell of summer air after a thunder storm. The rapt and wistful eyes of the woman watched him as he worked, touched into wonder before the inscrutable, humbled into momentary amazement by the unfathomable mystery of Hertzian waves.

"Thank God!" he cried, "it's Guariqui!"

"Guariqui!" echoed the woman.

He silenced her sharply, for he had his ear at his phone again, and was once more working nervously over his tuning-box.

Sciatica
AND Lumbago

Suffered for Twenty-five Years and Could Get No Relief

Now Tells of the Wonderful Results Obtained by the Use of

Dr. Chase's Nerve Food

Sciatica, neuralgia and sciatic rheumatism are the result of a run-down nervous system. For this reason all treatments must necessarily fail which do not build up the nervous system.

Mr. Collins suffered for twenty-five years and never was able to obtain satisfactory treatment until he began the use of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. While the Nerve Food forms new blood and restores the exhausted nervous system, the Kidney-Liver Pills invigorate the action of kidneys, liver and bowels.

Mr. W. T. Collins, Morpeth, Ont., writes: "It affords me pleasure to be able to speak favourably of two of Dr. Chase's medicines—the Nerve Food and Kidney-Liver Pills. I had been a sufferer for twenty-five years from sciatica, lumbago and neuralgia and tried almost all the medicines I could hear of, without one particle of benefit, until I commenced to use Dr. Chase's. I noticed an improvement before I had used two boxes, and the benefits obtained by continued use have been wonderful. I have so much confidence in these two medicines that I have recommended them to dozens of my friends, and I have yet to hear of a single case in which they failed to give satisfaction."

Dr. Chase's medicines are for sale by all dealers, or Edmanson, Bates & Co., Limited, Toronto.

"Superb Tonic and Body Builder"

"This wonderful medicine has no equal for keeping the system healthy and strong so as to ward off disease and old age," says Mrs. W. Frederickson, one of our patients.

"I can say with truth that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is the best medicine that was ever put on the market, for old and young alike. It positively rejuvenates the aged and keeps the young strong and vigorous. It is the most superb system and tonic builder for the human family that was ever produced, because of its purity and sublime quality; its equal has not been made. It has made me strong and quite well, which I was not when I commenced to use it. I earnestly and heartily recommend it to all, as it prolongs life. I hope this will influence many to use Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey and become strong and well."—Mrs. W. Frederickson, 2119 Indiana Ave., Chicago, Ill.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"I see Rose has her company manner on."

"Yes; that's the only thing I don't like about Rose. She will put on that terribly sweet manner when she goes out anywhere. I do hate affectation."

So do I. I like anyone who is always the same.—always natural. It is so silly to pretend to be nicer than you are just because there are a lot of people around."

I wonder if the two girls who criticized Rose so glibly would also decry anyone because she put on better clothes for an evening gathering, than she would wear about the same in the morning or down town shopping.

I can't really believe that they would.

And yet wouldn't that be just as logical as criticizing Rose because she has a pretty company manner, as well as pretty company clothes?

The reason I speak of this is because I have so often heard, not only Rose but many other girls like her, disparaged for putting themselves out in order to be especially gracious and entertaining and cordial in company.

The critics call this affected. They sneer with an evident sense of superiority at the "company manner" and pride themselves on the fact that they never put themselves out to please anyone but are always just the same.

Now I can't see any reason for pride in that, any more than one would have reason for self-gratulation in the fact that one never put oneself out to dress prettily for special occasions.

Of course, if Rose were disagreeable and ungracious at home and with her intimates, and then put on an extremely gracious manner in company, there would be reason to complain. Just as it would not be desirable to go around looking like a slattern all day and then dress gorgeously for company in the evening.

But Rose's home manners are just as pleasant, if not so dressy as her company manners.

And anyway I think one's quarrel in such a case ought to be with the disagreeable manner or the slatternliness, not with the gracious manner or the pretty clothes.

Why, I wonder, by the way, do we always say "put on" of anything nice? Why don't we say that people "put on" their disagreeable ways and then lapse back into their natural amiable selves instead of always the other way around?

To return to the main road, I think anyone who calls a pretty company manner affected is herself affecting an overdone dislike of affectation.

Myself I can't see anything affected or to be criticized in anyone who wears the simple and plain but attractive clothes of pleasant family manners in the family and dresses up in the special gown of company manners for special occasions.

Can you?

AN AIRY ROOM

From Farm and Dairy.

Miss T. Bagnall, N.D.D., Macdonald College, Que.

An airy and well cleaned room with an even temperature that can be maintained from 60 to 65 degrees F. is necessary for the best results. The influence of heat and cold on the texture, flavor and yield of cheese is very important. If the temperature of the room is too high, the yield will not be so large and the quality of the cheese will be impoverished owing to a loss of fat, while on the other hand should the temperature fall much below 60 degrees F., the draining process will be retarded, resulting in a bitter flavor in the cheese, instead of the clean, nutty flavor that is desirable.

Cream containing 15 per cent. butter fat is sufficiently rich for this cream. It may be taken from the separator at this thickness, or else richer cream may be brought to the above fat content by adding skim-milk. As a rule, four gallons of milk testing 3.7 per cent. butter-fat, will be found to give one gallon of cream containing 15 per cent. butter-fat.

A little fresh buttermilk or clean sour skim-milk, will make a good starter. Rennet may be used in either the extract or tablet form. Where only small quantities are used, the tablets are best, as they are more easily obtained fresh in small quantities, and they keep better. Rather less should be used than is recommended in the directions for junket as for this cheese a soft curd is wanted, which will take from two to three hours to coagulate. Rennet tablets may be procured at most drug stores. For salting use pure dairy salt, which will dissolve readily.

APPARATUS NECESSARY

Ordinary white enamel pails, holding from two to three gallons each are very suitable for holding the cream. A thermometer is an absolute necessity where uniformity in cheese-making is required. Those made of glass only are best.

Draining cloths, of either huckaback, or fine linen towels, about 30 inches square, should be used. A texture not too coarse nor too fine is necessary to allow of easy drainage without loss of fat. When rennet extract is used, it is well to invest in a small drachm glass for measuring the rennet. These glasses may be had from any chemist, graded to show the number of drops. They cost 25c each. A drainage table, either a table or sink with a slope is required, from which the whey can readily escape while the cheese is pressing between boards.

A cream cheese mould, which may be round, square or oblong gives the cheese a more uniform appearance, and makes it more marketable. Should the cheese be required for the home table it can be made up into balls with the butter paddles. A perforated skimmer is necessary for ladling the curd from the pails into the cloths.

Ordinary white butter muslin is used for wrapping the cheese. One yard muslin, 36 inches wide, will cut into 40 pieces, each five inches square, which is the correct size for the round cream cheese mould.

Grease proof parchment paper will be required to wrap the cheese in if it is to be sent to market. It can be obtained from any dairy supply house. Cardboard packages can be had from any of the folding box manufacturers, and cost from $3 to $5 a thousand.

AGE FOR MARKETING

Cream cheese is best eaten fresh. Its weight being four ounces only, it will naturally dry up very easily. They should not be sold over a week old, and they should be on the market in three days from the day of starting their manufacture.

Pay by test has been discussed at every district meeting for five years, but so far only 112 factories in Western Ontario pay for milk in this way.—Frank Herns, London, Ont.

Dairy authorities should agree on some common system of testing. Pay by test will not make the progress it should while we have various systems advocated.—Geo. H. Barr.

We get an increased yield of cheese from milk rich in fat. We can encourage the production of rich milk by pay by test.—W. Waddell, Middlesex Co., Ont.

Canadian cheese does not sell for as much on the English market as the home made article. The inferior quality of the Canadian is due in part to the poorer milk from which the cheese is made. Fat content does make a difference in cheese quality and pay by test would lead to a better quality cheese.—I. W. Steinhoff, Perth Co., Ont.

A WEAK HEART

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood-forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use flood the system with rich, red, vitalizing blood. This is Nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to ensure lasting benefits.

SPECTACLES FOR HENS

From Farm and Dairy.

Spectacles for hens surely sound like a fairy tale, yet they are among the queer poultry inventions described in a recent Scientific American. These spectacles are not designed to cure astigmatism or near-sightedness in the hen, but to protect their eyes from other fowls that might peck at them.

To cure a hen of egg-eating, an inventor has devised an egg connected with an electric battery, and placed in such a position that the hen, in order to get at the egg, must stand on a metal plate, which at once closes the circuit. One shock will either cure or electrocute the hen.

TO GIVE THEM EXERCISE

"Several inventors have schemes to compel chickens to exercise. The old-fashioned method of making hens exercise is to scatter their food in straw, but the newer methods involve modified gymnasium apparatus, and are much more spectacular. Of course the hens do not willingly take gymnasium exercise, but they can be compelled to do it while eating. The principle is the same in a score of inventions. For instance, there is a treadmill which may be adjusted according to the weight and agility of the fowl. By going fast enough, the bird eventually reaches the food, but must keep going in order to remain near the food. The inventor has failed to provide an attachment for utilizing the waste energy in pumping water."

Another amusing device is to prevent chickens from scratching. It is in the form of a spring attached to the chicken's leg in such a way as not only to keep her from scratching, but to propel her forward out of the forbidden ground in case she persists in trying to scratch.

Hens provided with any or all of these devices, would surely be "a great deal more trouble to themselves" than just plain unadorned hens.

INTERESTING EXPERIMENT

From Farm and Dairy.

Believing that Oregon farmers can add materially to their poultry profits by keeping the birds pastured for a time on the waste grain of the stubble fields, Prof. James Dryden, of the Oregon Agricultural College, has inaugurated an interesting experiment near Moro.

In a colony of 10 canvas tents he has housed 500 white Plymouth Rocks, and will keep them there six weeks, keeping accurate record of the weights and gains made. Movable fences are used, and the tents are on frames, which in turn are on runners, so that they can be moved readily as fast as the chickens clean up the waste grain on one part of the field and need new foraging ground.

"The point is to determine how much poultry flesh we can make from the waste grain on a given area with a given number of birds in any certain space of time, at the least expense," said Prof. Dryden, discussing the experiment. "In going through the Portland markets I was struck with the poor quality of the chickens sent in there by the farmers of the state. They were so largely bone, with very little meat on them.

"I believe that these birds could be kept a little longer to good advantage financially, if the farmers would put them out on the stubble fields, where there are always quantities of waste grain to be picked up. I am sure there could be added a pound or two apiece, in good solid flesh, to the weight of each bird, bringing a much better price, and that with almost no financial outlay. We are feeding nothing but a little animal food—beef scrap from the slaughter houses—and this would not be necessary if there were grasshoppers and other bugs in the fields."

Strong Healthy Women

If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

It Makes Weak Women Strong. It Makes Sick Women Well.

Honest druggists do not offer substitutes, and urge them upon you as "just as good." Accept no secret nostrum in place of this non-secret remedy. It contains not a drop of alcohol and not a grain of habit-forming or injurious drugs. Is a pure glycerin extract of healing, native American roots.

"Superb Tonic and Body Builder"

"This wonderful medicine has no equal for keeping the system healthy and strong so as to ward off disease and old age," says Mrs. W. Frederickson, one of our patients.

"I can say with truth that Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey is the best medicine that was ever put on the market, for old and young alike. It positively rejuvenates the aged and keeps the young strong and vigorous. It is the most superb system and tonic builder for the human family that was ever produced, because of its purity and sublime quality; its equal has not been made. It has made me strong and quite well, which I was not when I commenced to use it. I earnestly and heartily recommend it to all, as it prolongs life. I hope this will influence many to use Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey and become strong and well."—Mrs. W. Frederickson, 2119 Indiana Ave., Chicago, Ill.

Duffy's Pure Malt Whiskey

is one of the greatest tonic stimulants known to medical science, has been an unfailing remedy for more than fifty years, building up the body and restoring the tissues to their naturally healthy condition. For overworked men, delicate women and sickly children it is a guarantee of health and happiness.

All liquor dealers, or direct, a large bottle. Medical booklet and doctor's advice sent free on request.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"I see Rose has her company manner on."

"Yes; that's the only thing I don't like about Rose. She will put on that terribly sweet manner when she goes out anywhere. I do hate affectation."

So do I. I like anyone who is always the same,—always natural. It is so silly to pretend to be nicer than you are just because there are a lot of people around."

I wonder if the two girls who criticized Rose so glibly would also decry anyone because she put on better clothes for an evening gathering, than she would wear about the same in the morning or down town shopping.

I can't really believe that they would.

And yet wouldn't that be just as logical as criticizing Rose because she has a pretty company manner, as well as pretty company clothes?

The reason I speak of this is because I have so often heard, not only Rose but many other girls like her, disparaged for putting themselves out in order to be especially gracious and entertaining and cordial in company.

The critics call this affected. They sneer with an evident sense of superiority at the "company manner" and pride themselves on the fact that they never put themselves out to please anyone but are always just the same.

Now I can't see any reason for pride in that, any more than one would have reason for self-gratulation in the fact that one never put oneself out to dress prettily for special occasions.

Of course, if Rose were disagreeable and ungracious at home and with her intimates, and then put on an extremely gracious manner in company, there would be reason to complain. Just as it would not be desirable to go around looking like a slattern all day and then dress gorgeously for company in the evening.

But Rose's home manners are just as pleasant, if not so dressy as her company manners.

And anyway I think one's quarrel in such a case ought to be with the disagreeable manner or the slatternliness, not with the gracious manner or the pretty clothes.

Why, I wonder, by the way, do we always say "put on" of anything nice? Why don't we say that people "put on" their disagreeable ways and then lapse back into their natural amiable selves instead of always the other way around?

To return to the main road, I think anyone who calls a pretty company manner affected is herself affecting an overdone dislike of affectation.

Myself I can't see anything affected or to be criticized in anyone who wears the simple and plain but attractive clothes of pleasant family manners in the family and dresses up in the special gown of company manners for special occasions.

Can you?

AN AIRY ROOM

From Farm and Dairy.

Miss T. Bagnall, N.D.D., Macdonald College, Que.

An airy and well cleaned room with an even temperature that can be maintained from 60 to 65 degrees F. is necessary for the best results. The influence of heat and cold on the texture, flavor and yield of cheese is very important. If the temperature of the room is too high, the yield will not be so large and the quality of the cheese will be impoverished owing to a loss of fat, while on the other hand should the temperature fall much below 60 degrees F., the draining process will be retarded, resulting in a bitter flavor in the cheese, instead of the clean, nutty flavor that is desirable.

Cream containing 15 per cent. butter fat is sufficiently rich for this cream. It may be taken from the separator at this thickness, or else richer cream may be brought to the above fat content by adding skim-milk. As a rule, four gallons of milk testing 3.7 per cent. butter-fat, will be found to give one gallon of cream containing 15 per cent. butter-fat.

A little fresh buttermilk or clean sour skim-milk, will make a good starter. Rennet may be used in either the extract or tablet form. Where only small quantities are used, the tablets are best, as they are more easily obtained fresh in small quantities, and they keep better. Rather less should be used than is recommended in the directions for junketas for this cheese a soft curd is wanted, which will take from two to three hours to coagulate. Rennet tablets may be procured at most drug stores. For salting use pure dairy salt, which will dissolve readily.

Ordinary white enamel pails, holding from two to three gallons each are very suitable for holding the cream. A thermometer is an absolute necessity where uniformity in cheese-making is required. Those made of glass only are best.

Draining cloths, of either huckaback, or fine linen towels, about 30 inches square, should be used. A texture not too coarse nor too fine is necessary to allow of easy drainage without loss of fat. When rennet extract is used, it is well to invest in a small drachm glass for measuring the rennet. These glasses may be had from any chemist, graded to show the number of drops. They cost 25c each. A drainage table, either a table or sink with a slope is required, from which the whey can readily escape while the cheese is pressing between boards.

A cream cheese mould, which may be round, square or oblong gives the cheese a more uniform appearance, and makes it more marketable. Should the cheese be required for the home table it can be made up into balls with the butter paddles. A perforated skimmer is necessary for ladling the curd from the pails into the cloths.

Ordinary white butter muslin is used for wrapping the cheese. One yard muslin, 36 inches wide, will cut into 40 pieces, each five inches square, which is the correct size for the round cream cheese mould.

Grease proof parchment paper will be required to wrap the cheese in if it is to be sent to market. It can be obtained from any dairy supply house. Cardboard packages can be had from any of the folding box manufacturers, and cost from $3 to $5 a thousand.

AGE FOR MARKETING

Cream cheese is best eaten fresh. Its weight being four ounces only, it will naturally dry up very easily. They should not be sold over a week old, and they should be on the market in three days from the day of starting their manufacture.

Pay by test has been discussed at every district meeting for five years, but so far only 112 factories in Western Ontario pay for milk in this way. —Frank Herns, London, Ont.

Dairy authorities should agree on some common system of testing. Pay by test will not make the 'progress it should while we have various systems advocated.—Geo. H. Barr.

We get an increased yield of cheese from milk rich in fat. We can encourage the production of rich milk by pay by test.—W. Waddell, Middlesex Co., Ont.

Canadian cheese does not sell for as much on the English market as the home made article. The inferior quality of the Canadian is due in part to the poorer milk from which the cheese is made. Fat content does make a difference in cheese quality and pay by test would lead to a better quality cheese.—I. W. Steinhoff, Perth Co., Ont.

A WEAK HEART

When the heart is weak or irregular in action, when the blood is thin and watery, remember the blood-forming qualities of Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and by its use flood the system with rich, red, vitalising blood. This is Nature's way of curing weakness and disease. It is the only way to ensure lasting benefit.

SPECTACLES FOR HENS

From Farm and Dairy.

Spectacles for hens surely sound like a fairy tale, yet they are among the queer poultry inventions described in a recent Scientific American. These spectacles are not designed to cure astigmatism or near-sightedness in the hen, but to protect their eyes from other fowls that might peck at them.

To cure a hen of egg-eating, an inventor has devised an egg connected with an electric battery, and placed in such a position that the hen, in order to get at the egg, must stand on a metal plate, which at once closes the circuit. One shock will either cure or electrocute the hen.

TO GIVE THEM EXERCISE

"Several inventors have schemes to compel chickens to exercise. The old-fashioned method of making hens exercise is to scatter their food in straw, but the newer methods involve modified gymnasium apparatus, and are much more spectacular. Of course the hens do not willingly take gymnasium exercise, but they can be compelled to do it while eating. The principle is the same in a score of inventions. For instance, there is a treadmill which may be adjusted according to the weight and agility of the fowl. By going fast enough, the bird eventually reaches the food, but must keep going in order to remain near the food. The inventor has failed to provide an attachment for utilizing the waste energy in pumping water."

Another amusing device is to prevent chickens from scratching. It is in the form of a spring attached to the chicken's leg in such a way as not only to keep her from scratching, but to propel her forward out of the forbidden ground in case she persists in trying to scratch.

Hens provided with any or all of these devices, would surely be "a great deal more trouble to themselves" than just plain unadorned hens.

INTERESTING EXPERIMENT

From Farm and Dairy.

Believing that Oregon farmers can add materially to their poultry profits by keeping the birds pastured for a time on the waste grain of the stubble fields, Prof. James Dryden, of the Oregon Agricultural College, has inaugurated an interesting experiment near Moro.

In a colony of 10 canvas tents he has housed 500 white Plymouth Rocks, and will keep them there six weeks, keeping accurate record of the weights and gains made. Movable fences are used, and the tents are on frames, which in turn are on runners, so that they can be moved readily as fast as the chickens clean up the waste grain on one part of the field and need new foraging ground.

"The point is to determine how much poultry flesh we can make from the waste grain on a given area with a given number of birds in any certain space of time, at the least expense," said Prof. Dryden, discussing the experiment. "In going through the Portland markets I was struck with the poor quality of the chickens sent in there by the farmers of the state. They were so largely bone, with very little meat on them.

"I believe that these birds could be kept a little longer to good advantage financially, if the farmers would put them out on the stubble fields, where there are always quantities of waste grain to be picked up. I am sure there could be added a pound or two apiece, in good solid flesh, to the weight of each bird, bringing a much better price, and that with almost no financial outlay. We are feeding nothing but a little animal food—beef scrap from the slaughter houses—and this would not be necessary if there were grasshoppers and other bugs in the fields."

Story Of Growth Of Coronation

MONTREAL, QUE., OCT. 25.—A refreshing story of the enterprise of the Canadian West that reached here yesterday, tells of the publication of a newspaper at what was practically the birth of a new town last month when a big strip of Canadian Pacific Railway land was cut up and sold in town lots, and of how buyers from all directions travelled to the scene on a passenger train that followed only a mile behind a track-laying machine. The scene was the new town of Coronation, so named by the C. P. R., in honour of the historic event that marked the year of its birth, the time was around the 25th or 26th of September, and the event was the aforesaid sale of town lots. Coronation was not much of a place as yet, in fact was not more than nominally in existence, though a few enterprising merchants had erected temporarily shops and huts on lots, which they intended to bid for at the sale, but which they had not yet secured. Most of the men in possession evidently were successful in getting legitimate title to their holdings, for only one man is spoken of as having to vacate after the sale, and he furnished one of the surprising scenes of an eventful day by hitching up ten teams of horses to his double-fronted hardware store and moving the structure intact on to his new lot. On the evning before the sale the first C. P. R. passenger train filled with purchasers from all parts of the continent, arrived in Coronation, just two hours after the arrival of the track. Few of the travellers, however, were aware of the fact that they were practically travelling over new steel, as fast as it was being laid down, and it was not until the morning of the 27th ulto that the scene of the track laying machine at work a scant mile ahead of their train was revealed to the astonished gaze of the passengers.

Perhaps the most commendable piece of enterprise of a remarkable community, however, was the issuing of a newspaper, the Coronation News Review. On the day of the sale the paper appeared early in the afternoon and contained a full report of the sale proceedings during the morning. Coronation was born with the proverbial golden spoon in its mouth, and it promised a brilliant career, for though not yet out of its swaddling clothes, it has already attained the dignity of a divisional point on the Canadian Pacific Railway, with three branch lines projected from its centre.

A YEAR INDOORS

"For thirteen months I was so bad with chronic indigestion that I could not go out of doors. Nerves were unstrung, the heart bad and smothering feelings came on till I thought I would choke. Doctors' treatment failed me, so I began the use of Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, which I thank for my present good health. I am now doing my housework and have a family of ten."

Hallowe'en Games

THE WEAL OR WOE TEST

A horseshoe is suspended in a doorway, and each fortune seeker tries to toss an apple through the shoe. If successful, happiness is his.

APPLE PARING TEST

Each person is given an apple and a knife, the apple to be pared in a continuous strip. The paring is then swung three times above the head, while these lines are repeated:

"Apple, I pare and swing to know whom I soon shall marry.
From my hand I now thee throw, mystic letter carry."

The paring is then dropped to the floor and the initial it forms will be that of the future husband or wife.

BOBBING FOR APPLES

A tub of water is placed in the centre of the floor. As many apples as there are guests, and all having initials cut in them, are placed in the water, and great sport is had bobbing for them. They must be secured with the teeth. The initial on the apple reveals the initial of the future mate.

POPPING CHESTNUTS

Each guest is given three chestnuts. They are named and placed on the hot coals. The nut that pops will be the unfaithful sweetheart, the one that burns steadily will be a loyal friend, but the one that burns brightly, giving forth a flame, is the true love.

CRACKING NUTS

A hickory-nut is named, then cracked. If the kernel is withered, love has grown cold; if it is broken, the loved one is untrue; if it comes out whole, all is well.

FINDING ONE'S FATE IN THREE DISHES

This originated long ago in Scotland, where implicit faith was placed in the charm. Three dishes were placed side by side on the hearth, one full of clean water, one of muddy water and the other empty. One by one the persons testing the charm were blindfolded and advanced to find their fortunes by dipping their fingers into one of the dishes. If they dipped into the first dish a maiden or a young man, as the case might be, would be one's lot; into the second a widow or widower; into the empty dish it would be one's fate to remain a spinster or a bachelor.

FORTUNE TELLING FROM TEA GROUNDS

This game is always hailed with delight, and a witch with her black teapot soon has a circle gathered around her. The following rules are those of one well-known system of divination: The cup must be emptied and inverted on the owner's saucer, having first been swung around his or her head to scatter the leaves into the great healer for all wounds and sores. 32

formation and a wish is made. If there remain any drops these indicate tears. If the grounds are bunched together, it signifies that all will be well; but if scattered the reverse. A small speck near the top is a letter. A large speck is a photograph or present of some kind, what it is depending on the shape of the speck. The sticks are people—light or dark, short or tall, according to their color and length. A small one means a child, a thick one a woman. If they lie crosswise they are enemies; if straight up, they are intimate friends or pleasant acquaintances to be made. If a large speck is near them, it means they are coming for a visit, bringing a valise or trunk. A succession of lines, long or short, reveals a long life. A circle in the middle of the cup shows one of two things—if small a wedding, if large, riches. A bird betokens a letter. An initial the name of a sweetheart. A series of dots forming a line signifies a journey. A heart an engagement. Dust-like grounds bunched together at the bottom or side are a sum of money. A triangle signifies good luck, as does an anchor or a horseshoe. A cross signifies trouble. Any musical instrument, a wedding. Dog, faithful friend. Horse, important news. Snake, enemy. Turtle, long life. Flag, some surprise or journey to another country.

A Hallowe'en Party

As Hallowe'en approaches, many boys and girls who want to give a party are racking their brains for new ideas for decorations and novel features. There is no need to buy expensive flowers for decorative purposes, since a trip to the woods and the vegetable garden will furnish more than enough material. If you live in the country, a barn would be the most suitable place for the party, but a parlour may be fitted up in an appropriate way. Have plenty of jack-o'-lanterns, made out of pumpkins, suspended from the ceiling, and be liberal with sheaves of corn and cabbages.

At a Hallowe'en party last year the guests were met at the door by a "scarecrow man." His face was a weird mask and his hands were covered with large kid gloves, stuffed with bran to fill out the fingers. All the way up the stairs were large black hands, made of cardboard. In the dining room ropes of cranberries, popcorn and scarlet peppers, sheaves of wheat, golden carrot, crimson beets and rosy-cheeked apples gave the place a festive air. In the parlour were three witches, stirring a kettle which was suspended from an iron tripod. In this kettle were the souvenirs which were afterwards distributed. The three witches were three sisters—the hostesses—and after all the guests had assembled they danced a fascinating broom dance while the musicians played eat music. The games were enjoyed by the guests and all were delighted with the evening. The "eats" were both good and funny, and full of surprises.

Another Black Hand Letter

A letter bearing all the car-marks of a black hand letter, was received by a prominent citizen to-day, and is being investigated. The recipient of the letter has a pretty good idea who the offender is and will probe the matter with a view to bringing the guilty parties within the long arm of the law. When this has been accomplished more particulars will be available for publication.

Wedding Cakes In Demand

This must be the season for weddings. In conversation with a local confectioner this afternoon, a reporter was informed that in the last three weeks, over three dozen wedding cakes had been manufactured by this one establishment. Some of these cakes had been shipped as far away as Ottawa and other points as distant. This apparently, is a good recommendation for the city confectioners. One confectioner stated that this was the busiest season he had experienced in this particular line for many years; in fact, he could not recollect when so many wedding cakes had been ordered within the same limit of time. Other lines of confect ionery are also greatly in demand.

STRETCH UP AND GROW

Stretch up. Do not sit there at the school desk and expect your patient teacher to bend over day after day in an effort to feed you with bits of wisdom. Stretch up, seek wisdom yourself. You will never grow by merely crouching in one spot and opening and shutting your mouth.

lungs and spine, find a bite or two of your own accord ,and not everything chopped fine and seasoned for you.

To change the simile, there is too much pouring into in the classroom these days and not enough of the leading out. Truths are cut and dry and demonstrated over and over to the listless and inattentive. A few periods of throwing the class back on itself for supply might prove a beneficial change and perhaps a blessing in disguise. Stretch up, boys and girls; don't sit there like birds waiting for the chunks of wisdom to wriggle your way; dig out some for yourself.

Stretch up, busy toiler. Now and then a hint will be dropped your way or some friend will give you a nudge or the same old grind will make you an a measure expert and enlarge your comprehension. But in order to advance you must stretch up. You should determine to see into the treetops, to view the landscape, to gather the lawful plums yourself. There is a good bit of opening and shutting the mouth after the fashion of school children. Bits of information are swallowed for the time being; some fact of importance wriggles your way. But you are inattentive, for you want to be told over and over again. Alas, should the occasion ever arise to test your skill or personal responsibility, you are weak and inefficient. Stretch up, do not wait to be told every time.

Stretch up, ye forlorn and distressed. Kind friends sympathize with you daily. There are crumbs of comfort from those who stand by. The trusted and tried are ever on hand to befriend. But do you not think you have accepted the grains of good cheer long enough? Stretch up and winnow a meal now and then for yourself. Ah, there are so many who wait to be told ,who expect knowledge ,favour and relief ever to be brought to them. Stretch up and you will grow.

A POOR FEED

From Farm and Dairy.

T. G. Raynor, Seed Division, Ottawa

The over-ripe hay so common in Eastern Ontario, is poor feed for dairy cows. Is it any wonder that two cows that were overheard in a little gossip about hay making across the line fence in an eastern section early in the summer, were indignant? Timothy Jack's cow in her conversation with Clover John's cow, had good cause for dissatisfaction.

"I do wish my owner would grow some good clover hay to feed me with this winter," said she; "I would do just twice as well for him at the milk pail. But he persists in growing timothy and ox-eye daisy; sometimes it is more ox-eye daisy than timothy. Then he says, 'I must go to the Orange walk before I start haying.' I was looking at the hay last night when I was going down the lane, and it was ready to cut. Why, it was out in blossom fine. I am sure if he had started cutting it then that all the blossom would have jarred off in the process of cutting. He hasn't even got the mower ready yet, and now I will have again to eat all winter that tough woody stuff, and what is more he expects me to give milk on it."

"I heard my boss tell his son the other night when they were milking that he had heard one of the speakers at the Farmers' Institute, Hy. Glendenning, I think his name was, say that hay should be cut when in blossom, and that sometimes it could even be cut in the forenoon, and hauled in in the afternoon. He called it 'air drying,' and not 'sun drying.' He said it paid to use a hay tedder two or three times on it to dry it fast. Then he said something about growing more clover for cows, and that 'alfa' or some such a name, was just the cheese for dairy stock when it was cured right.

GRANDFATHER'S WAY

"When I heard my boss say that, my, how good I felt! for I thought that what was said had stuck. But then, he said, 'I don't believe all that bosh, and I have got to see it done first. Father and Grandfather never cut their hay before the 12th, and I don't think I will!

"Last twenty-fourth of May I took a run down the lane, and when I saw you turned out in that nice clover pasture, I really envied you. I had to pick along the lane in the fence corners before our timothy pasture was big enough to give us all a good bite. And then you know it was almost ready to shoot out in head.

"Say, it must be awful nice to be Clover John's cow! I noticed with tears in my eyes how he started to cut that nice field of clover hay on June 23rd, I think it was, and how nice it looked and smelt coiled up there in the field for two or three days before he took it in. Just the other day I noticed it was all grown up again and out in blossom. Is he going to turn you in there, and let you eat that off?"

"No, not this year, I guess," answered Clover John's cow. "I heard him say the other night to his boy when they were milking, that he had heard that there wasn't much clover in western Ontario this year, and that he had read that another clover crank near Manchester Springs had last year gotten over five bushels of good seed an acre from 4½ acres, and sold most of it for 15c a lb. He believed that he would try it this year. He said he had read somewhere in a farm paper that if the second crop blossomed out well it was likely to fill up with seed. He said too that he saw where they could fix a threshing machine so it could do good work, so I think he is going to try for some seed this year.

"At any rate, he has a lot of good clover hay for us, and since he has followed Mr. Glendenning's, and the methods of some of those other Institute fellows, I have given him a lot more milk. And do you know, I like to eat hay now. I know how sick and tired you must be of that woody stuff. Perhaps, when Timothy Jack sees Clover John's milk checks for the season, and the returns for clover seed, he will next year cut his hay early, grow clover, and keep some of the second growth for seed."

DAIRY COWS

From Farm and Dairy.

The dairy cows in almost any here where individual records of milk production are not kept might well be divided into three classes: Those that pay for their feed and care and return a profit; those that pay for the feed only; and the boarders. A boarder is a cow that the farmer keeps for her society. She pays for a part of her feed and the good cow in the herd pay for the rest of it. Dairy farmers who have taken up cow testing work have found almost without exception that there are some cows in their herds that they would be better off without. These cows were not always the ones that their owners had considered the poorest. The best cows are discovered only where individual records are kept. There are many reasons why cow testing should be practised by every dairy farmer. Mr. C. F. Whitley gives eleven good reasons why each cow in a herd and the herds as a whole should be tested.

INDIVIDUAL COWS

1.—Cow testing enables one to find out the poorest cows, those not paying for their feed, so that they may be got rid of. In many cases one-quarter of the cows in the herd have been discovered to be not worth keeping, in some cases half the herd and even as high as three-quarters have been turned out. Cow testing means certainty in dairying, no more guess work as to individual performance.

2. Cow testing shows that many cows considered only average are really the best cows in the herd.

3. Cow testing points out definitely which cows are the best producers, both in milk and butter fat.

4. Cow testing proves that many cows considered the highest in test are really the lowest.

5. Cow testing saves good cows from being beefed; they are found to be profitable when actual yield and cost of feed are considered.

6. Cow testing shows that many fine looking cows do not bring in much cash from the factory.

7. Cow testing helps to discover the great difference in persistency of flow.

8. Cow testing brings to notice the slightest variation in flow and urges one to seek for the cause of shrinkage.

9. Cow testing helps to increase the total yield of milk and fat from the same number of cows.

10. Cow testing brings in larger returns from fewer cows.

11. Cow testing helps to build up a profitable herd quickly, because heifers can be selected from the best cows.

FUTURE OF AGRICULTURE

From Farm and Dairy.

The future of agriculture in Canada depends very largely upon the brains and energy of its farming population. This means that the farmer of the future must be a business man and he must conduct his farm upon a businesslike basis—therefore, first of all, that he must know his business. He must know how to care for his soil, how to replenish it, how to protect it from erosion or washes, and how to cultivate it.

He must be intelligent enough to know the tremendous importance of reforesting. He must be keenly alive to the necessity of good seed. He must be mechanical enough to utilise every possible labor-saving machine and implement in order to take the place of the hired help which appears to be growing scarcer all the time.

He must be broad-minded enough to know that good roads will bring him tenfold for all that he ever invests in them in the saving of time and in wear and tear on his stock and vehicles.

The possibilities of profit, comfort, and happiness in the agriculture of the future are limited only by the capacity of those engaged in it.

ONTARIO ONTARIO

117 MILES FROM TORONTO

Quietly, and without the knowledge of Toronto people, the Canadian Pacific Railway have been building on the shores of Georgian Bay, at Port McNicoll, what one of their own officials has said will be the LARGEST TERMINAL on their system. For months the work of creating a new shipping port has been going on. Seven Million Dollars have already been spent, ten millions will be spent. Grain elevators are now being erected, freight sheds provided and a city is in the making.

We have in our offices maps and photos showing the immensity of the work being so rapidly pushed to completion by the C. P. R. We ask you to call and look these over—it will pay you. We will also show you the best located lots in Port McNicoll. Lots that are situated in the heart of the busiest district. We are selling them at a price that will re-imburse you more than four fold. You do not need a heavy cash deposit—and the lots are not high priced.

PORT McNICOLL IS NOW THE TERMINAL OF THE C.P.R., GEORGIAN BAY

All freight and tourist travel is via Port McNicoll. Port McNicoll will have low freight rates. It is the logical point for flour mills, factories and distributing warehouses, and is 134 miles nearer the seaboard than the former Georgian Bay Terminal. Port McNicoll has to-day what many a new town takes 10 years to acquire, namely, sewers and water. History repeats itself. What Fort William, Port Arthur, and Owen Sound are to-day, Port McNicoll will be in a few short months.

WE VENTURE TO SAY THAT

PORT McNICOLL IN 1915 WILL HAVE 15,000 PEOPLE
BUY YOUR LOT TO-DAY

WE HAVE SOLD TO DATE OVER 80 LOTS. PRICES RANGE FROM $175 TO $250. 1-3 CASH

From Owen Sound to Peterboro is about 210 miles. From Port McNicoll to Peterboro about 90 miles or a saving of 120 miles on the haul from Georgian Bay to Montreal and the ocean liners.

Grades out of Owen Sound are heavy. From Port McNicoll to Peterboro a perfect line allows the carrying of 60 cars per train of grain. See this advantage?

The Canadian Pacific Railway directors know all about Port McNicoll. Look out for huge flour mills, for the Lake of the Woods and Ogilvy Flour Companies at Port McNicoll.

Last year the C. P. R. handled over its systems seven and a half million barrels of flour. The export trade is growing. How many million barrels of flour will be handled at Port McNicoll?

Port McNicoll is blessed in every way. Bala Falls is only a few miles away and great power, under the auspices of the C.P.R., will be generated and transmitted to Port McNicoll.

QUEBEC, P. Q., June 17, 1911.

"For about a year or more my health was poor—my ambition gone—nerves unstrung—and it was perfect drudgery to work, and I was quite alarmed about myself. I happened to get hold of one of your pamphlets, which I read very carefully, and was impressed with the idea to try your No. 14 Blood Remedy. As soon as I started taking your medicine I began to improve, and kept steadily improving with the use of the medicine. I used several boxes and now am perfectly well, and in fact, never felt better in my life. Previous to taking your remedy I had been trying a lot of others but they did me no good. For the sake of other sufferers who may be in the same condition I was you may publish this letter, and I hope it will influence them to give this wonderful prescription a trial." L. Charbonneau.

The above prescription is not a "Cure All" or so-called patent medicine. Dr. Morrisey prescribed it for 44 years, and it cured thousands after other doctors failed.

North Huron Liberals was held here in the Town Hall yesterday afternoon, and every municipality in the riding was represented. Mr. John T. Currie of East Wawanosh, ex-reeve of the Township, and ex-warden of the county, was tendered the unanimous nomination of the convention, as candidate for the Legislature.

Cook In North Hastings.

Madoc, Oc. 27.—The old Conservative riding of North Hastings has a new Tory candidate. J. W. Pearce had announced his intention of retiring and the field was full of a popular array of new candidates.

Robert S. Cook, reeve of Rawdon, was the convention's choice.

Welland Conservatives.

Welland, Oct. 27.—Evan E. Fraser, who redeemed Welland County in 1905, and who carried it again in 1908, will again be the candidate of the Conservative party in the elections for the Legislature.

The convention yesterday afternoon, some 400 being in attendance, made the nomination unanimous. Eighteen names were placed before the convention, but all withdrew except Mr. Fraser and Dr. F. W. E. Wilson, and Mr. Fraser was declared the choice by 126 to 42. Dr. Wilson promptly moved that it be unanimous.

Want Real Laborite.

Berlin, Oct. 27.—Hon. Dr. Reaume has sent a clerk from the Department of Public Works to investigate the application of the Berlin Trades and Labor Council, who are asking that a successor be appointed to ex-Mayor Hahn, who is an officeholder with the Ontario Government as secretary of the Government Free Labor Bureau here.

The contention of the T. and L. Council is that Mr. Hahn, not being actively identified with organised labor, should not hold the office, and Stephen Wellbeuser, a member of the Cigarmakers' Union has been recommended by the Trades Council as his successor. The clerk in question met a committee from the T. and L. Council last night, and will make his report back to his chief in Toronto, who will then finally dispose of the matter.

Peat Plant For Ottawa.

Ottawa, Oct. 27.—Ernest V. Moore, peat engineer from Peterboro, is in conference with the Department of Mines. He represents a number of prominent Canadian capitalists who have, after careful inspection of the Government peat plant at Alfred, decided to erect a similar plant, in the vicinity of one of the large bogs near Ottawa. The plant will have a capacity of 15,000 to 20,000 tons a year.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills Cure Most of the Family's Ills.

This Little Box is Mother's Stand-by

Perhaps if the children, and the "grown-ups" too, always ate exactly the right quantities of exactly the right things, at just the proper times, and in every other way obeyed the rules of health, there would be no sickness in the family, and no need of medicine.

But they never have and probably never will, so in every family there are sure to be more or less frequent attacks of sick headache, biliousness, indigestion, constipation, and kidney and liver troubles, and occasionally some one is "sick in bed".

It is worth a good deal to the mother, then, to have on hand that perfectly safe and reliable remedy for these ills —

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills.

They invigorate those organs which cleanse the body of waste and impurities, regulating the bowels, stimulating the kidneys and opening the pores of the skin.

Thus Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills cure the common ailments and keep the family healthy. This they have been doing for over half a century in every part of the world.

FELL FROM A HAY LOFT

Suffered Tortures With His Kidneys Until He Tried Gin Pills

You might think that Mr. Baker needed a surgeon more than GIN PILLS. But there were no bones broken. His back was strained, which was harder to cure because nothing seemed to do any good. It is the same with a sprained ankle and broken leg. You can set the fracture and it will be well in six weeks—but the sprain may take months to get well.

AULTSVILLE, ONT.

A BAD FALL

"I have been a great sufferer from Kidney Trouble from an injury to my back caused by falling from a hay loft about six years ago. This left my kidneys weak, so that every cold I got would settle in my kidneys and cause intense suffering. I was advised to try GIN PILLS. I found, to my surprise, after taking two boxes, that the pains were relieved and I began to feel better. I am still taking GIN PILLS and feel sure I will be completely cured. I recommend GIN PILLS to all who suffer from any Kidney Trouble". C. BAKER.

You see, the fall had strained the kidneys and they were affected by the slightest chill. GIN PILLS immediately strengthened the kidneys—soothed any irritation and thus enabled the kidneys to overcome the effects of the fall.

If you are having pain in the back—or trouble with kidneys or bladder through accident or overwork—do just as Mr. Baker did—take GIN PILLS. They will help you—cure you—or we will promptly refund your money. Buy six boxes at your dealer's. If, after taking them, you feel that Gin Pills have not helped you, return the empty boxes and get your money. We will take your word for it. 50c. a box, 6 for $2.50. EDUCATIVE LECTURE ON TUBERCULOSIS AND METHODS ADOPTED FOR ITS PREVENTION

Large Audience Heard Address by Hon. Adam Beck Under Auspices of Peterboro' Health Association Last Night.

THE GREAT WHITE PLAGUE

That the Peterborough Health Association will carry the fight right into the enemy's camp, as regards their crusade against the white plague, was the message conveyed to the large audience which gathered in the handsome Assembly Hall of the Collegiate Institute last night. This is the first public meeting of the association, which was inaugurated but six months ago, and last night's enthusiastic gathering indicated in no uncertain manner the interest taken by the people of Peterborough as re this vital question.

The outstanding feature of the evening was the splendid address given by the Hon. Adam Beck dealing with the work which is being done by the Hamilton and London Health Associations with the combined aid of municipal bodies and provincial government.

The Hon. Mr. Beck got some applause when he appeared on the platform, and got more when the chairman, Mr. W. H. Moore, congratulated him in his opening remarks on the success of this meeting, for which he was in a large degree responsible.

The hon. gentleman told the large gathering, in language that none could fail to understand, of the terrible inroads being made by tuberculosis in the largely populated centres of the world, and after departing from the more scientific side of the question, he launched into the statistical side of the subject. His remarks were punctuated by hearty applause as he told of the splendid work being done by that noble institution commonly known as health associations. He quoted one well-known medical authority as saying, "With the present rate of progress, tuberculosis would be practically unknown in twenty or thirty years' time." In England and Wales a marked decrease was shown from year to year, and the results in other countries were equally gratifying.

Not Hereditary.

Dr. Osler, said the speaker, tells us that consumption is a curable disease, and not necessarily hereditary. In Hamilton the death-rate from tuberculosis has been reduced in five years to one-half. Why? Because of the knowledge to combat the disease. You know as I know that insurance companies and medical authorities throughout the world have always classed consumption as being hereditary, but, thanks to the indefatigable efforts of those who have made a specialty of the disease, we know better to-day. Within the past year municipalities have been clothed with the authority to enforce compulsory notification. In Hamilton the Daughters of the Empire undertook some time ago to erect a sanitorium, and they solicited subscriptions everywhere.

TWO METHODS

In London we have one of the best hospitals for its size in the Dominion. The erection of these institutions can be considered from two view points; one where the appeal is made to a liberal-minded public for funds, and the other where the work is undertaken by the municipal authorities and the funds derived by means of taxation. Personally, I am in favour of the latter method. In Hamilton we raised $60,000 within a year, and established a sanitorium. We were very fortunate in securing the services of a good man to assume charge in the person of Dr. Hollbrook. The Health Association of that city do not confine their labours within the corporation, but extend them throughout the county of Wentworth. These results have been brought about by the sympathetic support of the people. Your local Health Association, I understand, has been formed on the same basis as that of London and Hamilton, and will no doubt be productive of good results.

PROVINCIAL GRANTS

In Hamilton we receive about $6,000 per year in the form of a grant from the province, the amount received being based on the number of patients under treatment and the cost pro rata. In addition to that we receive a municipal grant. One difficulty which we have to contend with is that of getting poor people to leave their homes and come to the sanitorium. In some cases we have to supply tents for these patients and treat them at their own homes.

WOULD NOT WORK HERE

Hon. Adam Beck was of the opinion that a sanitorium would not be possible here, the population not being large enough to support one, unless the co-operation of the surrounding towns could be secured. While the work is being done on a magnanimous scale in Hamilton, I feel justified in saying that London has exceeded her sister city in this respect, this condition being attributed to the fact that we did not commence the work in London until five years after Hamilton. Therefore we were able to profit by the experience of the latter.

ENGLAND MORE ADVANCED

The speaker's assertion that England was more advanced than Ger-

TUBERCULOSIS FACTS.

Or one out of every 800 per ratio of population.

Hamilton's death rate from tuberculosis has been reduced 50 per cent in five years.

Mr. Grafton, the well known clothier of Dundas, donated an infirmary to the Hamilton sanitarium.

If you build a $20,000 sanitarium, you will get a grant of $4,000 from the Provincial Government or one-fifth of the cost.

"In London, I had the honour of making the first canvas among the business men, raising $10,000 in ten days."—Adam Beck.

London raised $53,000 with which to build a sanitarium.

Golden Rule for consumptives—Don't spit in the open or where infection is likely to result.

SOUTH ONTARIO CONSERVATIVES "SPEAK OUT IN MEETING" PLAINLY

Strong Condemnation of Whitney Government's Jug-Handed Administration of Hydro-Electric Policy---Prediction That South Ontario Will be Lost to Government.

The following despatch to the Toronto World (Conservative) speaks eloquently of the condemnation in Eastern Ontario that awaits the jug-handled administration of the Hydro-Electric policy of the Whitney Government:

WHITBY, OCT. 26.—"I should like to point out that there is a section of the Province of Ontario between Toronto and Kingston, with a population of 40,000, that has not been fairly dealt with by any government. "The hydro-electric system can go 140 miles west to Windsor; it cannot come 40 miles east."

These are samples of the plain talk handed out by Dr. Kaiser of Oshawa at the convention of the Liberal-Conservative party of South Ontario, in convention here this afternoon, for the benefit of the Whitney Government and the special behoof of Chas. Calder, M.L.A., who was again chosen to contest the riding. If Mr. Calder would engage to use his influence with the government and in the legislature to see that Eastern Ontario got an even measure of justice, the doctor promised him that he would be given the unanimous support of the party.

Mr. Calder gave no promise.

The reason the hydro-electric was not spread over the eastern section of the province as it had been over the western, Dr. Kaiser declared was not that the east was more susceptible to corporation influence than the west, but that the government was a government of the west. Not a member of the cabinet, with the exception of Col. Matheson, lived east of Toronto.

Came Loaded for Bear.

The music hall was thronged with what was probably the largest number of delegates that have ever attended a meeting of the riding when the chairman called the meeting to order and some of them came loaded for bear.

The trouble began early, when Dr. Moore objected to the chairman trying to force through as a preliminary precaution a motion that the candidate who won out in the balloting should be the unanimous choice of the convention.

Then Dr. Kaiser objected to the proposition that the first ballot should be a nominating ballot, and moved that they should first vote on the question of tendering the nomination to Mr. Calder. Mr. Jackson objected to this on the ground that it put Mr. Calder in the position of possibly being turned down by a combination of cliques, each with its own candidate.

Dr. Kaiser carried his point, but Mr. Calder was approved by a vote of 147 to 92, with two spoiled ballots.

That seemed to settle it, but it didn't. Delegates arose to demand nominations, and Dr. Kaiser asserted that the minority had a right to express their opinions.

He then launched out into the above candid criticism of Eastern Ontario.

He had a word for William Smith, the federal member, also. It was Mr. Smith's duty, he said, to see to it that Mr. Borden implemented his promise of substantial aid to the chilled meat trade and to the improvement of the public highways. The municipalities should organize to further this end. There should be a national highway from the Atlantic to the Pacific, and Sir James Whitney should organize a provincial system of roads.

Predicts Calder's Defeat.

Mr. Pedlar of Oshawa, was blunt and outspoken. "We had done the worst day's work for the party," he said, in nominating Mr. Calder." whose defeat she predicted "I know of 200 young Tories at Oshawa," he said, "who will not vote for Mr Calder. This is the day of the young man, and what chance has the young man if one man is always to be the candidate."

Mr. Calder objected to criticisms of Dr. Kaiser and Mr. Pedlar. The towns of Western Ontario had asked for the hydro system, and no government would force it on municipalities that did not want it. "You have to pay for it," he said.

The meeting was apparently about to break up in disorder, when, after a final appeal by the chairman to stand by the candidate, Dr. Kaiser moved that the nomination be made unanimous.

"FATHER, I AM INNOCENT" EXCLAIMS REV. CLARENCE RICHESON, CHARGED WITH MURDER

Veteran of Civil War Calls Upon His Son in Prison and Accused Protests That He is Not Guilty.

GRAND JURY HEARING

BOSTON, OCT. 26.—The consideration by the grand jury of the evidence accumulated by the prosecution against Rev Clarence V. T. Richeson, pastor of Immanuel Baptist church, Cambridge, who is charged with the murder of Miss Avis Linnell, a music student of Hyannis, began at the court house in Pemberton Square to-day. Chief Joseph Dugan, of the bureau of criminal investigation of the Boston police department, and District Attorney Pelletier were in charge of the governments' case against the accused minister. Both officials expressed confidence that they had evidence sufficient, not only to indict, but also to convict, Mr. Richeson o fthe crime with which he is charged.

Among the witnesses who came to the court house prepared to appear before the grand jury, were Mrs. Edgar Linnell, of Hyannis, mother of the tragedy victim; Mrs. W. H. McLean, of Brocton, sister of the dead girl, and Mr. McLean, Wm. Hahn, the Newton Centre druggist, who says that he sold cyanide of potassium to Mr. Richeson on Oct. 19; Miss Patterson ,superintendent of the Boston Young Women's Christian Association home on Warrenton street, where the Linnell girl died, and several young women who lived at the Y.W.C.A. and were friends of Miss Linnell.

It is expected that it will take two, and perhaps three days for the grand jury to hear all the witnesses, who have been summoned by the district attorney.

Says He is Innocent.

Boston, Oct. 25.— Colonel Thomas Varland Richeson, of Amherst, Virginia, visited the Charles street jail to-day to see his youngest son, Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson, who is accused of the murder of Avis Linnell, his one-time fiancee.

Since the young man left his Virginian home seven years ago to enter the Baptist ministry, his father had not seen him until to-day and the greeting between the two men was dramatic. In the first words of greeting, even before he clasped hands with his father, the clergyman exclaimed, "Father, I am innocent."

The veteran Confederate soldier, who has all along expressed his belief in his son's innocence, was visibly affected. He grasped the bars for support, while he answered only, "My boy! my boy!"

For over an hour father and son conversed, part of the time with hands clasped affectionately, but even to the assistant who stood in the corridor most of what they said was inaudible.

Col. Richeson left the jail in a closed carriage in which were Frank Carter, in whose residence in Cambridge Rev. Richeson had made his home ,and another man whose identity is unknown. He was driven, it is believed, to the home in Brookline, of Moses Grant Edmands, father of Miss Violet Edmands, to whom the clergyman was to be married.

It was reported that a family reunion was to be held at the Edmands home to-night at which would be present also Miss Lillian V. Richeson, of Saranac Lake, N.Y., a sister, and Douglas Richeson, a brother of the minister. All are in the city to aid by the encouragement of their presence, their son and brother's fight for acquittal. It is understood that other members of the family, including Miss Russell Richeson, of Chicago, a sister, will be here within a few days.

FULL INFORMATION ABOUT THE EXAMINER ROAD RACES

With Thanksgiving Day almost on hand, the success of the Examiner road races seems certain. The best field of entries that has ever faced the starter in the senior race will be sent away from Lakefield on Monday morning, while the junior list comprises over a score of runners, in spite of the fact that no boy who has not reached his fourteenth birthday is eligible to start. With good weather on Monday, there is every reason to expect two of the best races in the history of the events. The Examiner will to-morrow contain full information in regard to both races, and contestants are advised to secure a copy of the issue in order that they may be thoroughly acquainted with the conditions. Don't fail to read to-morrow's Examiner.

TORONTO CONSERVATIVES STILL HARPING ON MR. WHITE

Ward One Conservatives, of Toronto, Condemn Mr. Whitney's Finance Minister as an Agent of the Trusts and Worse Than All a "Grit"

From Toronto World (Conservative.)

The predominating note at the annual meeting of the Ward One Conservative Association last (Thursday) night seemed to be one of resentment at the appointment of Hon. W. T. White to the cabinet ministry.

"It was grievously dissatisfying to me," declared Dr. Charles Sheard, "that it should have been found necessary to appoint as finance minister a gentleman, the greater part of whose life was spent as vice-president of a trust company. I thought that at least a man could be found in the Conservative party to bear out the ideals of that party.

"The pledge that Robert L. Borden and all his candidates had to make was that the party should not be dominated by trust interests—that there should never be executed at Ottawa the trust rule which prevails at Washington.

"For myself, I cannot believe that a man who has been an ardent worker in the Liberal cause for 25 years can in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, so to speak, change so quickly as to absorb all the great principles of the historic Conservative party. I do not blame the premier, but in my opinion, he has been wrongly and ill advised."

Controller Church expressed like sentiments.

T .R. Whiteside, M.L.A., thought it a shame that Mr. Kemp did not get a portfolio. "I believe that Mr. Kemp is a better man than some that they went outside the Conservative party to take in," he declared.

CORDAGE WORKS TO BE OPERATED AGAIN

Mr. R. R. Hall announces that arrangements have been made, whereby the International Harvester Company will occupy the Canadian Cordage Company factory, and it is confidently expected that in a very short time that the factory will be operated to its full capacity. This will be very welcome news to a large number of employees living in Peterborough who formerly worked in these premises.

HUNTERS ARE READY FOR THEIR ANNUAL OUTING IN THE NORTHLAND

The Ketchecum Lake Hunt Party and Their Comfortable Lodge

With the hunting season only a few days away, local hunters are busily engaged in preparing for their two weeks' vacation in the north land. A number of parties will leave to-morrow, and the balance go early next week.

Swamp Lake Hunt Club.

The Swamp Lake party this year includes Mr. Edward Graham, E. Saunders, Geo. Bell, Sandy Young, Joseph Levasseur and F. O. Arnott. They leave on Monday morning for two weeks. This makes Mr Arnott's 38th time. The Swamp Lake party are all good sportsmen and from reports they have received, good sport is very likely, all the above gentlemen are good shots. Mr E. Graham has the arranging of the camp, and the catering, which will be carried out on the simple life plan. Mr. Sandy Young acts as captain, he being a good sportsman.

The Eagle Lake Party.

The first contingent of the above club leaves for Eagle Lake to-morrow morning. The party will be composed of Messrs. G. Gunsolus, George Fitzgerald, James Leahy (Deuro), and Carruthers. The second party, which will be composed of the following, will set out for the lake on Thursday next: Messrs. H Evans, W. White, C. Westlake, B. Mitchell, H. Rammell, C. Nixon, Jack O'Leary and Gibbs.

Shawanaga Party.

The Shawanaga hunting party will leave to-morrow afternoon for their annual camp at Shawanaga. Parry Sound. A special coach will carry the party to their destination, with Mr. C. has.Gladman as captain, and Mr. Wm. Sharpe as chef. The following comprises the party: Chas. Gladman, T. Wilson, M. McFadden, D. Best, H. Bennett, P. Kerr, Geo. Metcalfe, C. Curtis, A. Curtis, Jos. Pentland, Wm. Bothwell, Judge Rogers, Cobourg, Bert Lillie, Toronto; L. Poole, Lakefield, and Jas. Metherall.

Norwood Hunters.

Norwood parties are organizing for the chase after the big game in the northern wilds. A party who intend making Jack's Lake their headquarters for the next two weeks, will consist of Messrs. Hugh Adams, Wm. Lobb, Jas. Comstock, W. Paterson, Richard Kirk, C. Howe, Saul Leach, Wm. Couch, Arthur McKenty and John Kelly. Another party composed of Messrs. Geo. and Ernest Baptie, Joseph, Alex. and Carmen Emery, Geo. Gardner, Ben. Parker and C. Davey will have their camp near the Blue Mountains. Walter Crowe will also captain a party who will sojourn in the vicinity of Jack's Creek, while Fred Pearce, S. Hendren and J. G. Keeler will hit the trail at Millbridge and hunt near Beaver Creek. They will be joined by M. E. Knox and others from Picton.

Ketchecum Lake Hunt Club.

The members of this Club also leave for the Lake on Monday morning. The wagon with the provisions, etc., will leave to-morrow morning. The party will comprise Messrs. Harry Winch, E. Mason, M. Comstock, Wm. Ackerman, J. D. Collins, and George Bennett. Mr. Robert Stuart with several others will follow in a few days. Mr. A. Jackson will act as cook and Mr. Theo. Simpson, as guide.

Evidence Against Richeson

Special Wire to The Examiner.

BOSTON, OCT. 27.—The latest report in connection with Rev. Clarence Richeson, charged with the murder of Miss Avis Linnell, is that evidence has been found that Richeson experimented with poison in a bowl of flour paste just a few days previous to the tragedy.

Alberta Strike Settled

Special Wire to The Examiner.

WINNIPEG, MAN., OCT. 27.—With the ten per cent. increase in wages and several other conditions, for which several thousand miners of Alberta have been on strike and fought for eight months, settlement has been arranged by Hon. Robert Rogers.

SIGNS OF RESTIVENESS.

Sir James Whitney's promised manifesto seems to be hanging fire. It was announced a fortnight ago, that within two or three days, Sir James would issue a statement of the reasons that justified him in bringing on a general election a year before the time, right on the heels of a general election, for the Dominion, and at a season of the year that would be most destructive of the business interests of the country. Can it be that Sir James is finding it difficult, to concoct reasons that will commend themselves as justifiable to even his own supporters, not to speak of the general public who view actions of public more through other than party glasses? To be charitable, it is fair to conclude that Sir James Whitney has a valid excuse for delay. He finds it necessary, perhaps, to take some considerable time, to seize the insurgents of this own following, by the collars, and jerk them into line. This may be all the more difficult for his followers, being free men, are coming to think that it is due to themselves to have an opinion or two of their own, and to show a little restiveness by way of protest, against the bull-dosing methods that have heretofore been so potent, and permitted to pass for blunt honesty.

WAS IN HONOUR BOUND.

When Mr. Gordon, member-elect of Nipissing ,gave up his seat to Hon. Mr. Cochrane, did he assign to the minister his signed contract with Mr. Bourassa, to oppose any form of Canadian navy, actual or contributory? Very probably he will have done so. Mr. Cochrane is the man who, as Conservative manager in Ontario at the late elections, brought Mr. Bourassa into this province to instruct the British Born how to vote. He is the same man that employed Mr. Arthur Hawke to rally the British Born to vote against Mr. Bourassa's Nationalist propaganda. Upon further thought, it is not surprising that Mr. Borden had such a tender heart for the Nationalists, the empire-wreckers, as to give them three first-rate portfolios and make one of them deputy-speaker. He had to do it. He encouraged or permitted Bourassa to help win his big Ontario majority, and he was in honour—"honour rooted in dishonour" —bound to recognize Mr. Bourassa's claims. The more the recent election contest is analyzed, the more its beauties are revealed, and the more we see the utter hollowness and reeking rottenness of the loyalty and British connection cry. Although it is the voice of Borden, it is the hand of Bourassa. Sir James Whitney surrenered Mr. Cochrane to manage the British Born and the Bourassa end of the campaign, while he himself worked the renegade Grit end of the campaign in Toronto, and he had a good claim to forcing a gone-wrong Grit upon the recalcitrant Tories of Toronto as their representative in the Bourassa-Borden cabinet.

TELL IT TO THE MARINES.

The explanation of the apologists of Mr. Borden for his wholesale surrender to the Nationalist element, is an appeal to the kindergarten stage of public opinion and intellect. He is so they say, just using the Nationalists for the present, he is luring them to their destruction—when the proper time comes, he will "turn them down" and "shake them off," "send them adrift, etc., etc." Isn't this beautifully imbecile logic? How would such reasoning justify action in other matters than politics? For the sake of comparison, let it be asked if any sane man, with brains enough to keep out of the fire, would go into the cage of a boa constrictor and wait till the serpent got his coils tightly about him so that he could have a chance to shake him off to better advantage, than by keeping away from the brute in the first place? Would a wrestler who wanted to defeat an opponent, wait till he was in the grip of a "full Nelson" before he made an effort? Just so with Mr. Borden; he has allowed Mr. Bourassa to get a full Nelson, hammer-lock and scissors-hold upon him, and is to astonish the country one of these fine days by breaking the holds and getting free. Such argument as is used to justify surrender to the Nationalists, is too purile to parry. We might invite Mr. Borden and his apologists to "tell it to the marines," only Mr. Bourassa won't let him have any ma es to tell it to.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Sir James Whitney, when in opposition, didn't think much of New Ontario—he sneered at it as "the land of the stunted poplar." Sir James, in power, doesn't seem to have a much higher opinion of Ontario's great Northland, that is, judging by the way he has neglected its development. Yet it can do great things and is certainly worth cultivating. New Ontario—Englehart—has sent to Toronto, where they are now on display, some of the most magnificent chrysanthemums ever grown. Some of them measure eleven inches in diameter, and the colouring is exceedingly rich

TAX REFORM.

Ottawa Citizen (Conservative.)

The fact that a provincial election is on the way should put heart into the Ontario Tax Reform Association. For some years this association has been battering at Sir James Whitney's office door, says the Hamilton Spectator, seeking a friendly hearing for its proposal to have legislation passed making it permissive for municipalities to tax land value at a higher rate than the improvefents thereon. So far Sir James has remained unresponsive to all appeals, preferring to stand by the old way.

But while Ontario's premier has thus stood, the government of the western provinces have been more progressive, and municipalities in that part of the country have been privileged to experiment with tax reform. And the result of this experimenting has been very much to the advantage of these municipalities. Just why Sir James should continue to refuse similar privileges to Ontario municipalities, nearly one-half of which have petitioned him in favour of the proposed charge, it is difficult to understand.

There is nothing so terribly radical in the suggestion, nor is there any danger that as a result of its adoption municipalities will go bankrupt and default in payment of their just debts. At its worst it is only a harmless experiment which, we submit, every municipality should be privileged to undertake should it so desire. If after trial it should prove of no value, no one particularly will be hurt and a return can be made to the old way. On the contrary, should it prove a success, none should rejoice more than Sir James Whitney, head of a progressive government.

Now that the elections are coming the Ottawa Journal suggests that all candidates be pledged by their constituents on this subject, so that when the house meets Sir James will be met not only by petitions from municipalities, but by a solid body of opinion in his own following and among members of the opposition, favouring the change. But possibly this will not be necessary. The premier may have been taking notice during the past year or two, and if he has, he will have a changed mind on this question. It may be that he will make tax reform a plank in his election platform. That would be even better.

EARL GREY'S REBUKE.

(London Advertiser.)

Two eminent British statesmen of opposite parties paid tributes to Sir Wilfrid Laurier at the banquet tendered Earl Grey by the Royal Colonial Institute.

The Colonial Secretary, Right Hon. Lewis Harcourt, spoke of the British people's grateful sense of the great services rendered by Sir Wilfrid to the progress and prosperity of the Dominion. Earl Grey testified to his own "affection and admiration" for Canada's "distinguished statesman."

Two points in Earl Grey's address were specially significant. He told his hearers that the policy of reciprocity was in no sense a policy of dislike toward closer connection with the mother country, and that Sir Wilfrid was fully persuaded it would strengthen both Canada and the Crown. There was a rebuke in these words for the slanderers of Canada and Canada's greatest son both here and in Great Britain. Sir Max Aitken, for example, dishonoured his title and his native country by telling a Lancashire audience that Sir Wilfrid had tried to drive Canada out of the Empire.

Earl Grey further warned his countrymen that there was "no expectation in Canada that the recent Canadian elections should be used for inducing any change into the tariffs of the United Kingdom." "It cannot too clearly—understood," he added, "that Canadians are as adverse to the idea of interfering in your local affairs as they are to any interference on your part in theirs." This is also language which British politicians should heed. Some are sorely in need of the admonition. Their comments on the Canadian election have been an affront to common sense, and to the intelligence of the Canadian people. Mr. Balfour himself has been an arch-offender. In his recent speech at Haddington he professed to interpret the result in Canada as a demand upon the British people to reverse their fiscal policy. This is a mischievious misreading of the situation. The bulk of the Canadians ask no favours from the mother country beyond the maintenance of her open market. The interests which control the Government at Ottawa will be the strongest opponents of further concessions to British producers.

Earl Grey, fresh from this country, will do a good service to the empire if he can check the tendency of the Unionist leaders to interfere in Canadian domestic politics.

HOMMAGES AND HOMAGE.

(The Globe)

The brethren of the Loyal Orange Order in Ontario West should receive a circular letter in the course of a few days on the great homage issue. Whether they will or not depends on the condition of the political conscience of Brother Hocken of the Orange Sentinel and Brother Ross Robertson of the Toronto Telegram. If these gentlemen are really awake and on the job their clarion call will be after this fashion:

"A crisis approaches in the history of our beloved land. The infamous conduct of the late Mr. Justice Girouard, Acting Governor-General of Canada, in presenting "ses hommages"—that is to say, THE HOMAGE OF THE PEOPLE OF CANADA—for whom he spoke—to Cardinal Vannutelli, the representative of the Pope of Rome to the Eucharistic Congress at Montreal, was justly denounced by us as a crime against the Dominion. It was bad enough to be betrayed, and humiliated, and represented as vassals of Rome by a French-Canadian and a Catholic, but what must be your feelings—how great your surprise and your rage—when we direct your attention to the following item which appeared in L'Evenement, the chief French-Conservative paper of Quebec, on the occasion of Premier Borden's recent visit to that city:

"'L'honorable M. Borden, Premier-ministre du Canada, a profite de sa Premiere visite a Quebec depuis son avenement au pouvoir pour aller hier PRESENTER SES HOMMAGES a Sa Grandeur Mgr. Begin, archeveque de Quebec, et a Nos Siegneurs les Eveques d'Eleutheropolis et de Regina." *

"Brethren, it requires no profound knowledge of French to see from this that our British and Protestant Premier has prostrated himself before the power of Rome, and done homage, not to a Papal Legate, but to an ordinary Archbishop and two Bishops. We are betrayed. To arms. Down with the renegade who uses our votes to climb to power and on the first opportunity bows the knee to Rome.

"The explanations of the Grit Press and of certain alleged scholars who declared that Mr. Justice Girouard used the word 'hommages' in its ordinary sense of extending 'good wishes' or paying one's respects to a visitor were denounced by us a year ago, brethren, as stupid inventions intended to lull the members of our order to sleep. 'HOMMAGES' MEANS 'HOMAGE' JUST AS IT DID A YEAR AGO, and there can, therefore be no doubt as to what Mr. Borden's visit to Quebec involved. Let us have done with trickery and evasion. From this day forth we renounce and condemn Borden and all his works. We can do no other'"

But will Brother Ross Robertson and Brother Hocken send out that circular? We rather think not. They have been getting in touch with the French language of late. The Borden-Bourassa coalition makes that necessary. And they know now—if their dupes do not—that Mr. Justice Girouard used the words "ses hommages" when greeting the Cardinal in precisely the same sense in which L'Evenement uses the words in describing Mr. Bordens visit to Monsignor Begin.

*Note—For the benefit of those whose super-loyal racial prejudices prevent them from acquiring a knowledge of the French language, the above quotation from L'Evenement is translated, and, to a certain extent, disinfected:

"The Honourable Mr. Borden, Prime Minister of Canada, has taken advantage of his first visit to Quebec since his accession to power, to yesterday wait upon, in order to pay his respects (PRESENTER SES HOMMAGES) to his Eminence, Monsignor Begin, archbishop of Quebec, and to their Lordships, the Bishops of Eleutheropolis and Regina.

C. P. R. Opens Long Branch Line

Special to The Examiner:

MONTREAL, QUE., OCT. 27.—What is probably the longest of the new branch lines, which the Canadian Pacific has built this year, will be opened for traffic November 5th. This is the Regina Colonization branch. There will be really two branches opened on that date, because at Valport Junction, 24 miles from Regina, a sub-line leaves the big branch and runs to Bulyea, from Regin a to Colonsay. It is 133 miles while from Valeport, where the smaller branch leaves the large branch to Bulyea, it is 19 miles. This means that altogether over 160 miles of new track will be opened for traffic, which is one of the biggest pieces of new construction work that has been completed by the C. P. R. this year. Another feature which marks the opening of this line, as important is that when the service was inaugurated, two trains will be run each way each day. The significance of this statement is seen when it is stated that generally when new lines are opened there are only three passenger trains a week, each way, run for the first few months. The announcement of the opening of this new branch brings home the fact that one of the most remarkable features of the railroading in western Canada this year has been the unflagging enterprise of the Canadian Pacific Railway, in pushing forward its branch lines to completion. Despite the fact that the C. P. R. has had to pay big prices for construction gangs owing to the scarcity of labour. Hundreds of miles of new road have been built and food service inaugurated, so that the incoming settlers have had the best of transportation facilities, to aid them in seeking out new homes. The building of these branch lines has, in most cases,, involved a considerable expenditure because the C. P. R. has been pushing its network of steel rails in all directions, opening vast amounts of absolutely unsettled territory.

Peterboro' Men In New Company

Toronto, Oct. 25.—The Sterling Life Assurance Company of Canada is the name of a new life insurance company that will seek incorporation under the Insurance Act of 1910 at the next session of the Dominion House. The head office is to be in Toronto. The capital to be asked for is $10,00,000. The shares will be $100. issued at a premium of 25 per cent., and a call of 50 per cent., made of both capital and premium. This company is really a revival of the insurance company contemplated four years ago by Mr. J. W. Garvin, with Ottawa capitalists behind it. The time was felt to be inopportune then

It is proposed to sell both non-participating, ordinary and industria life insurance. The applicants are A. E. Munn, lumberman, of Orillia; W. H. Shaw, principal of the Centra Business College, Toronto; Dr. G. E Smith, Toronto; A. P. Poussette K.C., Toronto, and J. W. Garvin, insurance broker, Toronto.

The proposed managing director of the company, Mr. J. W. Garvin B.A., is well known to insurance, educational and political circles. He i first vice-president of the Life Underwriters' Association of Toronto, and last year was manager of the Agency Department of the Excelsior Life Mr. Garvin was one time a politica opponent of J. R. Stratton in Peterborough, for the Provincial House as a Conservative. He was inspecto, of schools and the editor of the collected poems of Isabella Valancy Crawford. Both Mr. Poussette and Mr. Garvin have recently moved from Peterborough to Toronto. Mr Poussette, as solicitor of the new company, with the intention of taking up counsel work in the city.

ARE MICROBES IN YOUR SCALP?

It Has Been Proved That Microbe Cause Baldness.

Professor Unna of Hamburg, Germany ,and Dr. Sabourand, the leading French dermatologist, discovered that a microbe causes baldness. Their theory has time and again been amply verified through research experiments carried on under the observation of eminent scientists. The microbe lodges in the Sebum, which is the natural hair oil, and when permitted to flourish it destroys the hair follicles and in time the pores entirely close and the scalp gradually takes on a shiny appearance. When this happens there is no hope of the growth of hair being revived.

We have a remedy which will, we honestly believe, remove dandruff exterminate the microbe, promote good circulation in the scalp and around the hair roots, tighten and revitalize the hair roots,, and overcome baldness, so long as there is any life left in the hair roots.

We back up this statement with our own personal guarantee that this remedy called Rexall "93" Hair Tonic will be supplied free of all cost to the user if it fails to do as we state.

It will frequently help to restore gray and faded hair to its original colour, providing loss of colour has been caused by disease; yet it is in no sense a dye. Rexall "93" Hair Tonic accomplishes these results by aiding in making every hair root, follicle, and pigment grow strong and active, and by stimulating a natural flow of colouring pigment throughout the hair cells.

We exact no obligations or promises—we simply ask you to give Rexall "93" Hair Tonic a thorough trial and if not satisfied tell us and we will refund the money you paid us for it Two sizes, prices 50 cents and $1.00 Remember, you can obtain it in Peterborough only at our store,—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—Your correspondent of October 26, who signs himself "Reader" is, no doubt, a "higher critic" who believes he has "descended from that poor animal of low intelligence, and stooping gait, who grins and chatters as we pass, etc." Now, Mr. Editor, we would be sorry to deprive any of these reputed hybrid monkey-born men of any real pleasure they may have in contemplating their monkey ancestry, but we do want to enter a public protest against their incomparable gall in attempting to connect those with their geneological tree, who can declare a better pedigree. "Reader" seems to be afraid to sign his own name to his epistle, lest he should be recognised as a self reputed monkey-born man.

Yours truly,
John Carlisle.

HOW THE VANCOUVER SIKHS WORSHIP

(By Isabel Paterson.)

The Sikhs are a hardy race. They need to be. Their religion is a soldier's religion, austere, simple, self-denying, and the more difficult because its adherents are enjoined not to withdraw from the world. It is not Mohammedanism, nor Buddhism, nor Brahmanism, although it is often confused with these. It acknowledges one God, and numerous teachers, or Gurus, but no divine prophets or seers in the ordinary sense. It embraces all religions. It is about four hundred and fifty years old, and constitutes the Protestantism of India. Buddhism is thousands of years old, in all probability. The Sikhs (the name means simply disciples, or pupils) effected a Reformation; with Guru Nanak as their Martin Luther.

There are three or four thousand Sikhs in British Columbia, I am told, and they have this year builded themselves a house of worship on Second Avenue. Thither I went in search of information, and found a curious two-storeyed bungalow construction, with the front entrance on the second floor and steps going down to the street. The top storey was the Sikh temple, and the doors were unlocked; many doors, on every side of the big high ceiled room. But there was no one within, and I did not enter, not wishing to unwittingly profane any sacred edifice. Belowstairs I found a grave, black-bearded Sikh sitting at a plain table, in a room furnished with a stove and numerous straight-backed wooden chairs; he was writing something which I immediately guessed must be Sanscrit. Sanscrit sounds like that writing looked. But it wasn't; I cannot spell what it was. He was very busy and called someone else for me; a courteous, bronzed individual, also black-bearded, who spoke English indifferently, and who conducted me to the temple. At the door I was forced to abandon, not hope, but my shoes, and padded in stocking feet, over very clean and inexpensive red and gay tinted Axminister carpets. It was a plain, four-sided apartment, with very Occidental electric lights depending from the ceiling, and a few unpretentious pictures and texts in weird lettering on the matchboarded walls. Near the upper end of the room was a table draped in white linen and a red table cover; over it hung a canopy of red velvet with gold embroidery, with electric lights set just below it, in beaded shades; all of which was neither Oriental, Occidental, nor anything else in particular. On the table rested purple velvet cushions which held a huge red velvet-bound book, open, and covered again with several silken coverlets, and a crimson velvet pall. I was permitted to look at it, but the writing was once more that cross between Russian, Greek, and ancient cuneiform (or so it looked to me, and I could only sadly ask its name. It was the Guru Grauth, the writings of the ten Gurus, I believe. Now I remember it was written in Punjabi. Further, it is all in blank verse. I learned that later. The big room, because there were no chairs in it, nothing but that big red velvet volume on its velvet cushions, with a pierced silver bowl for flowers beside it, and because everything was very clean, and there was a faint persuasive delicious odour of dried rose petals all about, had a remarkable air of peace and sanctuary.

On the floor before the table, or altar, lay a sword in a scabbard, and numerous pieces of silver money, with some crumpled bills. These, I learned, were offerings of believers. The sword was merely a symbol of the fact that the Sikh is not only a religious man but a soldier, and is sworn to protect the weak and helpless. But my guide could not tell me all the things I wanted to know, and I went away in search of Mr. Teja Singh, who I was told could. Also I learned that there would be worship in the temple next morning at 4 o'clock, as always, and that I might come if I choose; and further, that the room downstairs was a school-room where the Sikhs and Hindoos of the city might attend free classes in English and writing and such things every evening.

I could not find Teja Singh that evening, and immediately I decided to attend service in the morning. The hour terrified me, but I felt it had to be done. Four o'clock is a horrible hour, in the morning. One can stay up until three and one can arise at five, but nothing can be done at four. Nevertheless, I ordered a taxicab for that hour, and was ready for it when it arrived. I knew that the chauffeur thought me insane, but did not trouble to undeceive, or at least contradict him, and he let me out before the house I indicated and went away and left me on the porch. Whereupon I gazed upon the stars and wondered what I was doing there, and agreed with the chauffeur mentally. The city still lay in darkness; there were no clouds but frost, and a low-lying mist through which the street lights glimmered. Then here was a stir down-stairs, and after little while I found myself following Mr. and Mrs. Teja Singh into the temple, stocking footed again. It only smelled cold and dark now; the rose-leaf scent was not there.

The lights were turned on; Mrs. Singh had brought with her the sword again, and laid it before the altar table. Then Mr. Teja Singh brought in the huge book, balancing it on his head and holding it so while his wife arranged the cushions for it, when it was laid down carefully and opened, being handled as delicately as Sevres pate tendre. Both then prostrated themselves, touching the floor with their foreheads before the sword and book, and we sat on the floor tailor fashion, while Mr. and Mrs. Teja Singh prayed in silence. Then Mr. and Mrs. Teja Singh stepped up onto the table and sat before the book and intoned for about five minutes from it, after which Mr. Teja Singh read from small books of devotion, or intoned rather, occasionally chanting a curious recitative, or litany, or something of the sort, which I naturally could not understand, but which had a strangely soothing sound. It could not, however, quite make me forget that my knees were horribly cramped from the unusual attitude in which I must sit for so long, and that the cold was sharp, in spite of my fur-lined coat, and the fire that burned in the centre of the room. Some time during this period two tall dark Sikhs entered noiselessly, one wrapped in a white blanket, one shrouded in what looked like a leopard skin (he, I think, was the regular priest of the temple); made obeisance to sword and book, and sat down cross legged, draped sphinx-like in their robes. So they sat apparently without moving a muscle, meditating, during the rest of the reading, while the windows whitened and the electric lights paled with the coming of dawn. No one looked at the clock except myself. And after a million yeras or so it was after seven o'clock, and when Mr. Teja Singh had spoken briefly from behind the table, in conclusion and in English for my benefit, we went downstairs and I was constrained by gentle little Miss Singh to drink a cup of tea, while I marvelled at my own hardiness.

But that is what the Sikhs do every morning of their lives, those who are strict in the faith. They worship twice a day, evening and morning, retiring at nine o'clock and arising between three and four. The yare vegetarians and will not dring alcohol; but they believe in living in the world, because it is a severe moral school, and in raising families and taking part in everyday life.

Has No Knowledge Of Half His Life

Seattle, Wash., Oct 24.—Tossing restlessly in his bed at Providence Hospital, S. Chandler Rogers, 31 years old—yet still, in his own mind, a New York City messenger boy of 17—to-dal wondered what he had done for 14 years, 5 months and 19 days. He has no knowledge of almost half of his life, and in all probability he will have to rely as to information upon those who have known him since he was dragged from the Hudson River in New York City on the night of May 1st, 1897.

Married to a young woman with whom he has not even a speaking acquaintance—for it was as George Kelly that he married Agnes Johnson in Seattle two months ago—ignorant of every material fact in his own experience since May 1st, 1897, without even a knowledge of his craft by means of which he made a living for himself and his wife until Oct. 10th, Rogers' case is one that puzzles the physicians and nurses who at Providence Hospital saw him awaken yesterday to a realization that he had lost fourteen and a half years of his life, so far as his memory was concerned. And Rogers—not Kelly any more—looks out on the world and wonders how he can make a start in life and gain the wherewithal to support himself.

"Chan" he called himself in his last conscious moments more than 14 years ago when he was a messenger boy in Wall Street. So far as Rogers is now able to figure out, the Spanish-American war is a new story, aeroplanes are something of which he never heard; automobiles are still "horseless carriages," as he expressed it to-day; President William McKinley still lives; Theodore Roosevelt is "a wise political guy" who was Police Commissioner in New York City, and Tony Pastor is still running in 14th street.

Rogers, when told to-day that the house at the address he had given in New York had been torn down and no trace could be found of his half sister or grandmother, broke down and wept. He could not realise that they had disappeared. He said that when he asked his grandmother his father's and mother's name she would not tell him and always appeared to be angry. His speech is filled with the street slang of New York of over a decade ago and this is shown also in the letter he wrote to his sister.

Mrs. George Kelly, who until two months ago was Agnes Johnson, cried bitterly when her husband failed to recognize her. She told him who she was, and when she said she was his wife he told her she was "daffy." He refused to let her kiss him.

According to his story to her, when he thought he was Kelly his mother was Scotch, born in Glasgow, and his father Irish. From the latter, he said, came his name Kelly.

He said he had served in the navy, but what he did before that he did not know.

Whether he ever knew his real mother or not is a question. He asserted that he had a sister, who came home for her vacation from college, took sick with pneumonia, and died within a week. The shock, he declared, killed his mother. He even mentioned the place where he believed he had buried his mother—Calvary Cemetery, New York. Upon the illness of his mother, he said, he obtained leave of absence from the navy at Bremerton and after her death 10 years ago his discharge. Upon his return to the city last year during the summer he met Mrs. Johnson, and the courtship speedily followed.

The only indication that he ever gave of his past life was one day when he insisted that his first name was "Chandler." Next day he returned to "George" again. He also told his wife that he lay in a hospital in Kansas City for five months unconscious, which she now believes was a previous attack. Although he complained occasionally of headaches, he did not suffer except on his marriage night.

"If he wants me I am ready," Mrs. Kelly said quietly. "If not, well, it can't be helped now."

EDUCATIVE LECTURE

many in dealing with the stamping out of tuberculosis drew forth a round of applause from the attentive audience. In connection with the establishment of sanitoriums, he considered it folly to offer small salaries with the idea of curtailing expenses. The work of governing these institutions was strenuous and exacting, and good men were hard to secure. He concluded by extending a hearty invitation to the local association to go and visit London, where he would only be too glad to assist them to get any information which they might desire.

FUNDS NEEDED

Dr. Cameron, who is an active worker of the Association, then gave a brief outline of the propaganda for the winter, which has already appeared in these columns. He also referred to the pressing need of $1,500 with which to carry on the work. With this sum on hand it would be possible to employ a district nurse. In Brantford, with a population slightly in excess of Peterborough, two district nurses are employed. Circumstances would probably arise where it would be necessary to purchase medicine, food, tents, etc., to assist those of limited means.

The meeting closed with the customary vote of thanks.

Among the audience were a large gathering of the medical fraternity and also city officials. Those who graced the platform were Hon. Adam Beck, Mr. W. H. Moore, K.C., Dr. Cameron and Dr. Halliday.

INTRODUCED

A French woman, proud of her limited knowledge of English, and an American woman, proud of her limited knowledge of French, were introduced at an evening company. The French woman insisted on expressing herself in bad English, and the American would talk nothing, but bad French. When the guests began to depart they were still at it. At last they rose to go. Here is their watery farewell: "Reservoir," said the fair American. "Tanks," responded her new friend.

A WORKINGMAN WRITES ON WORKINGMAN MATTERS

Shows That it is Time That Workingmen Should Vote for Themselves--Should Unite To Obtain Legislation in Their Own Interests.

To the Editor of the Examiner.

Dear Sir,—As a member of the working classes, I wish to say a word or two in regard to the place we occupy in political and legislative matters. No self-respecting working man and no fairminded man of any class will deny that the working classes are the very foundation of the progress and welfare of a country, and that so they have a good claim upon the consideration of governments and law-makers.

We working men, as a class, have not been given our rights in these matters, and I am afraid we are a good deal at blame ourselves. We are too much tied down to party, and too fond of voting for party candidates, instead of voting for ourselves. I have stuck pretty close to the Conservative party, and am sorry to say that as far as advantages to the working man are concerned, I have not gained much by my party.

The Whitney Government has done nothing in its seven years of office for the working man, or in the interests of labour. All the legislation in the interests of the working classes passed by either the Dominion or Provincial Governments, has, I am sorry to say, as a Conservative, been passed by the Liberals. As a Conservative I am not proud of my party in regard to their neglect along this line. I am sorry for this because we working men have helped to put out the only party that has ever showed a disposition to try to help the working man and the cause of labour.

We have a general election coming on now, and I think this is a chance to get in a little work for ourselves. There are two party candidates in the field, and we should make them toe the mark, or, if they won't, we should support the one who will pledge himself to meet our wishes, and to support legislation, we need in the interests of the working classes.

There is a good deal that we want that we haven't got. We want some reduction in the hours of labour, so that we will not have to keep our noses to the grindstone all the time to keep life in ourselves and our family; some of us want time to improve ourselves in our trades, and we want not only the time, but the means. We should be given some simple system of trade education, so that journeymen, as well as apprentices, could use their spare hours which we could get with, shorter hours of labour, to improve ourselves by well conducted technical education classes. Many of the working classes have to begin work or starve before they have a chance to get a fair school education, and a good system of what they call technical education would be a great help.

We want better protection, too. We give the best of our strength to our employers, and if, by their carelessness or neglect, we are hurt, or lose limb, or life, we should have reasonable compensation for ourselves or our families. We have a sort of protection of this kind now; but the law is such that it gives the victory, not to the right, but to the longest purse. If a workingman, or his widow, goes to law and gets a judge or jury to award compensation he doesn't get it. An appeal is made to a higher court; but, if he wins that he doesn't win; another appeal is brought on, and so on—one appeal after another, till the workingman's money is exhausted and the longer purse of the wealthy employer, or corporation, enables them to win out, not because they have the right on their side, but because they have the money to keep up the fight, and wear down the working men, or workingman's widow, who lose by default, because they have not the means to keep up the fight. This wants to be remedied, and the right of appeal limited to one. This would be as fair for one side as the other, and all the working men wants is fair play, which he doesn't get under the present state of the law. The law wants to be changed, and I am prepared to stand by the candidate who will pledge himself to do us justice in this and other matters.

There are many other things that I could refer to, but I do not wish to take too much of your space. I want to say to my fellow workingmen that it is time that we began to look after ourselves. We have too long let ourselves be tied to the tail of the party kite, and allowed ourselves to be made use of without getting any advantage, except being patted on the back at election times, and dropped afterwards. We should not commit ourselves to any candidate without the assurance that he is willing and able to help us fight our battles and get us the justice and fair play that we have not got from the government now in power. What is the success of a party compared with the interests of the working man clases? Parties go in and out. They rise and fall; but the day's work is always ahead of the working man. He keeps the machinery of the country moving, and he doesn't get his fair share of reward or of fair treatment. I would like to close this letter by asking the working men to come out of his shell; take off his party coat, and do a little stroke of work for himself. We are strong enough if we pull together to pull things a good deal our own way. I don't advocate a labour party, but I want working men to stick together and fight together for their own interests as our employers and others stick together and fight for their own interests.

Yours truly,
Working Man.

WINTER ECZEMA
CURED BY ZAM-BUK

Mrs. P. W. Drummond, of Thetford Mines, Que., writes: "Every fall, as soon as cold weather sets in, my little daughter's face and hands would be covered with rough watery patches, which before long turned into scabby sores. These would itch and smart terribly, and would remain on her face from fall until spring. This happened for three years, and we could get nothing which did her any good, until a short time ago I started using Zam-Buk, and now, after using half a box of same the sores have entirely disappeared, leaving her skin as smooth and clear as it could possibly be."

Zam-Buk is also a sure cure for ulcers, abscesses, ringworm, blood poison, scalp sores, chapped hands, cold sores, and all skin diseases and injuries. 50c. a box, all stores.

LOCAL LABOUR CONDITIONS FOR MONTH OF SEPTEMBER

Mr. J. Arthur Sharp, correspondent for Peterborough, Ont., and district to the Labour Gazette, reported as follows for the month of September:

GENERAL CONDITION OF LABOUR

The labour market has been active during September. The building trades were more active than in any previous month this year, though no large works were under construction. There are a lot of small dwellings as well as repairs and extensions. The mills are all running full time, and there is considerable work in other branches. The Peterborough Cheese Board met during the month and disposed of 2,759 boxes at prices ranging from 13 1-4 to 13 5-8 cents, this being the highest price paid this season so far. The sawmill at Bewdley was struck by lightning and burnt to the ground. Wholesale trade was good, and for retailers the trade was satisfactory. The rates of wages and hours of labour remained the same.

CONDITION OF LOCAL INDUSTRIES

Agriculture.—Agricultural conditions were active, and will likely continue so until the crops are harvested. The potato crop is a failure this season.

Lumbering.—Lumber companies find it difficult to get men to go to the woods. The farmers are at present monopolizing all of the available men. Next month will see a big demand for able-bodied men to work in the woods.

Manufacturing.—All the factories are running full time, with the Canadian General Electric Company working overtime. The Wm. Hamilton Company is working night and day shifts in its machine shop.

Railway Construction.—The Canadian Pacific Railway grain lines are busy. They are complaining of the scarcity of labour, but expect to have the line from Victoria Harbour finished by December.

CONDITION OF PARTICULAR TRADES

Bricklayers, masons, carpenters, lathers, plasterers, painters, plumbers, and gas and steam fitters had plenty of work. Iron moulders, iron workers, machinists and engineers were active. Electrical workers and linemen were very busy. Blacksmiths were active. Boilermakers were working overtime. Woodworkers and upholsterers were active. The printing trades had a busy month. Journeymen tailors garment workers, bakers, confectioners, butchers, and meat cutters were active. Leather workers had a good month. Textile workers were busy. Railway and street railway employes, teamsters, and expressmen, and those engaged in connection with navigation, had an active month. Unskilled labour was in active demand at good wages.

DISTRICT NOTES

Whitby.—The Martin Manufacturing Company and S. Trees and Sons are both enlarging their factories. The former is erecting a large brick building separate from the others, and the latter an extension to the building constructed recently.

WHAT OLD FOLKS NEED

Some Are Younger at 65 Than Others Are At 40 Years

So many people begin saying "Well, I'm getting old now," about the time they reach 60, and then let themselves act old—and the fact is they could stay young for a long time, in all but years.

We have seen men and women of 65 who were really younger than some are at 40 years; were more active and more up to date in everything.

When your energy begins to fail build yourself up with our delicious cod liver and iron remedy, Vinol, which is a wonderful tonic and strengthener for all weak persons.

A gentleman of Allentown, Pa., says: "I am 76 years of age and find Vinol a great medicine. It is wonderfully strengthening and comforting to me." (Name on request).

Thousands of feeble old people have found Vinol to be just what they need to revive their flagging strength. We guarantee it to please you—money back if it does not.—McDermid & Jury, druggists, cor. Upset From His Buggy

A buggy belonging to a Mr. Jones came to grief at the south end of Aylmer street last evening. While the driver was quietly proceeding over the C.P.R. crossing, the wheel of the buggy caught in the rails and was overturned, precipitating the driver into the road. The buggy was considerably damaged, but the man was not hurt.

CONVENTION

A convention of Christians will (D. V.) be held on Saturday, Sunday and Monday in the Assembly Hall, George street, four doors north of the Market Arcade.

Meetings for the ministry of the Word of God to Christians and preaching of the Gospel to the unsaved on Saturday and Monday, at 10.30 and 2.30 and 7.30 p.m., Sunday, at 2.30 and 7 p.m.

Address by visiting brethren from a distance.

A hearty invitation is extended to all.

Enjoyable At Home

Splendid Success at T.A.S. Rooms Last Evening

The society held their first "At Home" in the T.A.S. rooms last evening. The rooms were taxed to their utmost capacity, and an exceedingly enjoyable time was spent. Progressive euchre was engaged in, and the prize winners were Mr. Cecil Wolfe and Miss Legrandre. Various other amusements were then indulged in. The Misses Shevlin and Marion Gorman (pianaforte) and Mr. Tucker (violin) furnished the musical element and refreshments, served in the interval, were thoroughly appreciated by all.

SWEDES IN MIX-UP

Three sons of Sweden got into a tussle on the corner of Charlotte and Aylmer streets, this morning, which resulted in their arrest. The three men, apparently strangers in the city, were somewhat under the influence of liquor, and when they reached the corner, got into an argument, which developed into a quarrel. One man was carrying a large parcel, and he fired this at one of his pals, knocking him down and demolishing his head togs. A lively fight followed, which did not last very long. Two officers of the law were quickly on the scene, and promptly put an end to the dispute by driving them in the direction of the Police Station.

McDermid and Jury has an invigorator that will grow hair or money back.

The time to take care of your hair is when you have hair to take care of.

If your hair is getting thin, gradually falling out, it cannot be long before the spot appears.

The greatest remedy to stop the hair from falling is SALVIA, the Great American Hair Grower, first discovered in England. SALVIA furnishes nourishment to the hair roots and acts so quickly that people are amazed. A large bottle for 50c. Also sold at Payne's drug store.

ANIMAL LOVE

Mother love is universal, and there is no love like the mother love. Most of the high and lofty loving in this world is done by mothers. Apart from this the work of wooing falls to the male members of the family whether it be the human family or some one of the other animal tribes. We read how, ages ago, a Bulbul, or Oriental Nightingale, wooed a white rose until it blushed red, and that was the beginning of the red rose. The Spanish Cavalier stands out in the rain and serenades his 'Dulce Mia' until there is a crick in his neck, while she sits sheltered in a window above.

The cackle of the loon may be a love song for all we know. Maybe that's what made him loony in the first place.

The wild moose bellows his passion across the lake, and as likely as not the answering call is from a bark born in the hands of a hunter, luring him to death.

It seems a sizzling shame, but if you will take a Grand Trunk train and travel into the "Highlands of Ontario" you will find men doing that very thing; arguing, doubtless, that all is fair in love and war.

PROVINCE NAMES

New Brunswick—It was named in honour of the House of Brunswick, which is the reigning dynasty of Great Britain, or rather was the reigning dynasty until the accession of Edward VII., the first of the Saxe-Cobourg line. George III. was king at the time New Brunswick was erected into a Province in 1784. It is said that it was first proposed to name the Province New Ireland.

Ontario—The provincial archivist reports that "Ontario" is an Indian word "O-no-ta-ri-io," meaning 'Handsome Lake,' and that the Province was undoubtedly named after Lake Ontario. The archivist adds that in a French map of 1688 Lake Ontario is named "Skaniadono."

Nova Scotia—The name appears to have been first used in a grant from James I. to Sir William Alexander, a Scotchman, who intended to colonize the country. Previous to 1621 the country was known as Acadie or Acadia. Nova Scotia means New Scotland.

Prince Edward Island—Originally called the "Island of St. John," the name was changed in 1789 to "Prince Edward Island" in honour of the Duke of Kent (father of Queen Victoria), who was then in command of the British forces in Halifax, N. S. The island was discovered on St. Johns, Day, June 24, 1497. Before that the Indians named it 'Abegweit,' meaning "Home of the Waves."

British Columbia — Columbia is another names for America, and British was placed before it.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner:

Dear Sir,—We notice by the papers that the Duke and Duchess of Connaught are to pay a visit to the city of Toronto on November 27th, and the city of Hamilton on December 1st. We think it would be advisable for our Mayor and City Council to extend an invitation to Their Royal Highnesses to stop off at Peterborough on their way to Toronto and show them our good city of Peterborough in Canada, as we have no doubt they have often visited the city of Peterborough in England, and which is only a few miles from London.

We feel sure that Their Royal Highnesses would be interested in our city, and especially in our wonderful Lift Lock, the finest and largest in the world.

We hope the Mayor and City Council will take this matter up at once, as we feel sure the citizens generally would be pleased to see the invitation sent at once.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, for your valuable space, we remain, yours truly,

Dear Sir,—I see by last night's paper that Tag Day is on Nov. 11, and that they expect girls to do great things, which I know they will, but I think it would be a good plan to have a hot cup of tea and a sandwich for these girls, and not like last year, where they had to stay out in the bitter cold and never get anything. Also, I think it would be a good plan to interest those girls who held the bazaar in aid of the children. Ten little girls, I think it was, who nearly made $100 themselves to help you, as their hearts and hands must be in the work.

THE DRINK THAT NOURISHES

Every man who does a hard day's work needs a beverage as well as food which supplies the greatest amount of nutriment. And that beverage undoubtedly is cocoa.

Tea and coffee are not foods. But in cocoa we have a perfect food—rich in all materials that are necessary to the growth of the body, to build up waste tissues, supply energy. Even veal, mutton or eggs which stand high among the most desirable foods for the human body, fall below cocoa in flesh forming properties.

Fry's Cocoa is almost all nourishment. It makes a most delicious drink and has the stimulating powers of tea and coffee without their mischievous effects.

THE HABIT OF INDUSTRY

The habit of industry implies continued work—steady, persistent effort. To engage in a task for a limited time, however hard one may labour at it, only to pass again into a state of voluntary laziness can never constitute an industrious life. Fitful, intermittent, and occasional work never enabled a man to accomplish any worthy end. It was said of the Duke of Wellington that he did his duty as naturally as a horse eats hay. Industry means that a man works as naturally as a child plays, that it has become the normal condition of his living, the first law of life to him. Ruskin says, "If you want knowledge you must toil for it, if food, you must toil for it, and if pleasure, you must toil for it; toil is the law." Nature makes few mistakes. Man was made for work. Every faculty, every sense, every nerve and every muscle is planned for a definite purpose and fitted for a specific use. The physical system is a set of skillful tools, and the will is the workman who takes them up and uses them. The eyes are for observation, the brain for thought and the nerves are the carriers of messages from one part of the body to the other; the muscles are the engines of physical force, the hands and feet are the machines by which the larger part of the work is done. Industry is the steady running of this entire plant

Eleven Ministers By Acclamation

Special to The Examiner

OTTAWA, ONT., OCT. 27.—Eleven ministers of Borden's Cabinet were to-day elected by acclamation in their respective constituencies, no opposition being put up in any case. Aerial Navy For Canada

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, ONT., OCT. 27.—Hon. Sam. Hughes has despatched Colonel Finet, Deputy Minister, and Lieut. Col. Maunsell, Chief Military Engineer, to Atlantic City, to witness the military aerial manoeuvres, with the object of establishing an aerial corps in the Canadian militia and purchasing a military airship or two.

Savage Attack

Miss Alice Douglas of 229 McDonnell street, was the victim of a most savage onslaught yesterday afternoon for which a vicious bulldog belonging to a party in that vicinity, was responsible.

The little girl was walking towards her home, and, without any provocation, the animal suddenly made a dash and chased her right to the verandah of her own residence. Not content with this the animal bit the little one about the legs in several places. The cries of the child were instrumental in bringing others to her assistance, and it was deemed necessary to take her to a doctor, when it was found that the flesh was broken in several places.

Dr. Brown, who attended the girl, did not think her injuries were dangerous.

COUNSELS ADDRESS THE JURY IN CORNWALL CASE

Special Wire to The Examiner.

CORNWALL, ONT., OCT. 27.—The Sessions of the Court in the McRae murder case were to-day occupied by the addresses of Counsel. Mr. Pringle for the defence, delivered an impassioned address on behalf of the prisoner, arraigning Dr. Magee in scathing terms for the treatment of his wife. "Who would think," said Mr. Pringle, "that an educated man would have beaten and ill treated even a dumb animal as Magee did his wife. He told Crown Prosecutor Blackstock he couldn't stir sympathies against the accused in the name of holy religion.

Mr. Blackstock replied with an eloquent address for justice for the death of William Shaw.

Crown Prosecutor Blackstock said since the religious questions have been introduced by the defence he must reluctantly tell the jury that Mrs. Magee had definitely declined to live with her husband until they had been married again by a Roman Catholic priest.

LAYING OF CORNER STONE OF NEW PROTESTANT HOME

Some Features Of The Salvation Army Work

Some interesting information about the work of the Salvation Army was given last night by Capt. Martin of Toronto ,in a splendid address at the local Salvation Army Temple.

Captain Martin said that during the past year the Army supplied 118,000 beds, and 250,000 meals in Canada alone, but perhaps the most interesting point was the fact that about 90,000 immigrants were brought into this country during the past six years. 30,000 Christmas dinners were served to the poor of the country. For the rescue of fallen women there are thirteen homes which took care of 1,100 girls, 900 of these girls turned out satisfactorily, being about 93 per cent. The Army also cared for 700 children during the past year in Canada.

There are about 450 corps in the Dominion and in the neighbourhood of 50,000 members. There are 15,000 to 16,000 persons converted every year in Canada. Among the corps there are 70 brass bands of which the Peterborough organization is a fair sample.

At the conclusion of Capt. Martin's address a hearty vote of thanks was tendered him.

Brother Of Mrs. Thos. McMullen Is Killed

The Lindsay Warder says:

A sad fatality occurred on Wednesday morning on the farm of Mr. Geo. Switzer, just southeast of the village of Cameron, when he was instantly killed.

According to the timepiece worn by the deceased young man the disaster occurred at exactly ten minutes past eight o'clock.

It appears that the deceased who lives on the farm adjoining that of his father, expected the threshers on Friday and was making room in the barn for the separator. A load of lumber, probably 700 feet, had to be moved out and Switzer took hold of the tongue and backed it to the edge of the door space at the barn door, when evidently he thought it best to chain the hind wheels to the axle and slide the wagon load out. In doing this the wheels would not revolve and consequently the load could be backed out easier and with no fear of the wagon getting beyond the control of the man at the tongue. The hind wheels were chained and it is surmised that Switzer was standing alongside the hind wheels when some slight jar evidently started the wagon moving. Once the hind wheels bumped off the barn floor the momentum of the heavy load caused the wagon to sway sideway and careen over the steep gangway, carrying the unfortunate young man along with it.

The deceased was pinned down underneath one of the wheels and was nodoubt instantly killed. His father, who lives on the opposite half section, upon going over to his son's farm, noticed the wagon load of lumber off the gangway and upon going over to see if he could be of any assistance, he was shocked to notice the body of his son underneath the wheels and life extinct.

The alarm was quickly given and it required several men with crowbars to pry the heavy load off the unfortunate young man.

The late Mr. Switzer is survived by his sorrowing parents, a beloved wife and six children; also one brother in Manitoba and two sisters, Mrs. Eli Short, of Little Britain, and Mrs. Thos .McMullen, who lives near Peterborough. In religion he was a Methodist. He was well and favourably known by the entire community having been born and brought up in the above neighbourhood.

SHARP CRITICISM OF WHITNEY GOVERNMENT'S ATTITUDE TOWARDS THE TUBERCULOSIS QUESTION

To the Editor of The Examiner,—

Sir,—As one of the audience that sat listening to the Hon. Adam Beck last evening, I was much impressed by the wholly unsatisfactory attitude of the modern system of government with respect to such conditions as he so graphically described. He began by making a statement that must be characterized as absurd. He said that the reason such things as tuberculosis were not taken up and treated in provincial institutions was that hanger-on of a party would insist on using political influence to get people into these institutions who were not afflicted at all but merely for the purpose of securing a rest at the public expense. This statement means that people would be allowed in to such an institution without due and proper inspection and that the government control would be so wholly unreliable as to make it worse than useless Now, let me say that if this is Mr. Beck's idea of government control it must apply to more things than tuberculosis hospitals, and it may be possible that institutions for the blind are already loaded with people who can see, and lunatic asylums are not inappropriately filled with politicians. This statement, however, as a matter of fact is a bluff. It is a bluff put up by the Hon. Adam Beck in defence of the government in order that the government may like most governments continue to brag of a surplus while unloading all the burden on the people. Let me give you a case in point: Children's Aid Societies , re not on the government subsidy list and no power under heaven can get them on. The Toronto government has fought against it in every conceivable way. Why? Not because Children's Aid Societes have not saved this province hundreds of thousands of dollars, and not because they are not the means of rescuing children from waste and crime, but because the government wants a surplus. Mr. Beck's statement, therefore, in defence of the government appears not only absurd but insulting and in my humble opinion it is high time that people, irrespective of politics, got up on their hind legs and talked to the politicians in a way that they would understand. There is no distinction of parties.

Political parties seem to be afflicted all alike. Now, in further reply to Mr. Beck, let me say that setting aside the fact that ten million dollars a year is lost to this province from consumption alone, people of this province who cannot afford it otherwise, are entitled to have the public resources of this province placed at their disposal as to have provided for them public institutions where the victims of tuberculosis may receive, free of charge, the best possible treatment and care. Mr. Beck seems to ignore the fact that some municipalities are wholly unfitted as places for curative hospitals, and he also ignores the fact that municipalities have no command of public resources, or, in other words, they have no fund from which to draw for the benefit of the public. The government owns public lands, mining rights and exacts taxes such as succession duties, and it is these that should be applied for the public benefit, and where may I ask is there a greater demand than in the case of consumptive patients? It seems to be the idea of the government that it is more important to build a highway into wildernesses for future generations than to save the lives of people already in existence. In other words, we have in this country the extraordinary spectacle of people already in the country working like slaves and mortgaging their future for the benefit of people yet to be born, and what is the consequence? Nobody who has had any practical experience in the matter knows that the greatest blot on our civilization is the manner in which the consumptive poor are allowed to drift and perish. There are no institutions to receive them, and how, pray, can they afford to pay a doctor's bill and nurses? They simply cannot do it, and instead of continuing to be the victims of a mistaken idea of government they should be rescued by the government and treated, for the cause is at least a provincial one and not a local one. It is, I maintain, absurd to ask municipalities, especially rural municipalities, to grapple with this question under existing circumstances. If they are to grapple with it let the government apportion to them their share of the public resources. It is entirely illogical that the government should retain the public resources and unload all the burdens on the people. It will be answered that the government proposes to assist. It doesn't assist Children's Aid Societies at all and doesn't propose to do so, and the assistance it proposes to give the consumptive poor is so small as to be merely a bait to induce people to undertake burdens that they have no right to assume. I feel strongly in this matter, Mr. Editor, and if I had had an opportunity to express my views I should have done so, but not having the opportunity to do so at the meeting I feel absolutely compelled to make known what is, not only my opinion, but the opinion of a great many others thoroughly qualified to form an opinion in the matter. The provincial elections are at hand and I hope the public will use the opportunity to see that the policy of the government is changed. Now is the time, and I speak simply as a citizen to force a change in a policy that is no policy at all and I hope the next reply to be made to the crying needs of the consumptive poor will not be that they cannot be attended to because their healthy brethren are a set of malingerers and humbugs.

Yours truly,
J. H. BURNHAM.

The following are registered at the Hotel National: Miss Stephens, of Hastings; Miss Molesux, of Toronto; Mr. R. McDougall of Fenelon Falls; Mr. R. Romersley, of Bradford, Eng., Mr. L. C. Blackwell of Lindsay.

Mr. E. Skitch, Missionary Secretary of the Royal Templars of Temperance, Hamilton, called on the Examiner to-day. Mr. Skitch intends spending some days in the city in the interests of Temperance work. The temperance movement will no doubt be greatly aided by the visit of Mr. Skitch to the city.

Mr. and Mrs. Herbert Edmison, of Winnipeg, Man., are guests at the home of the former's parents, Magistrate and Mrs. Edmison. The young couple have just returned from their wedding tour through the states. They came here from Washington and will spend a few days as Mr. Edmison's guests.

NEW RINK FOR NORWOOD

It will be welcome news to the young people of Norwood and vicinity as well as to some of the older people, who are interested in curling, to learn that The J. Finlay & Sons Co. commenced breaking the ground yesterday morning for the erection of a curling and skating rink on Cedar street, adjoining their warehouse opposite the residence of Mr. E. J. Laing.

The curling rink will be a covered building, while the skating rink will be open .Comfortable waiting rooms in connection with both rinks will also be provided.—Norwood Register.

Aluminum cooking utensils can be kept bright as new by rubbing with a polish made by dissolving 20 grains of borax in water to which one-third the quantity of ammonia is added. Shake the bottle of mixture before using.

Rub duck or geese with corn meal after plucking to remove the down.

GOOD RUGBY GAME FOR THANKSGIVING DAY

The team to play the University of Toronto Mulock Cup Champions will be picked from the above. The team had a good workout last night at Central Park and are in the pink for the game.

The West Ends will have to travel a pretty fast gait to beat this Peterborough team with men of ability, such as Doctor McPherson, Gene Hurtubise, Albert Quinlan, George Lundy, Jack Deanard, Dillion, etc.

The majority of these have played on championship teams and what they do not know about Rugby would fill a very small pamphlet.

Which ever team wins will have an idea that they were in a game.

Old Boys Have Strong Team For The Game At Riverside To-morrow

Manager Eugene Hurtubise of the Old Boys team announces that his squad is in the pink of condition for to-morrow's game at Riverside Park with the West End Junior O.R.F.U. team, and expect to walk over the West Ends as they used to over the Toronto Victorias and the Westmount team in the old days.

Some sceptics are inclined to doubt the ability of the veterans to go the route, but Manager Hurtubise has no anxiety on this score, and says every man on the team is able to steam 24 knots an hour without turning a hair. This statement of course, includes some of those who have little hair to turn. A cordial invitation is extended to the rugby fans of Peterborough to see this game, which is called for 2.30 o'clock and which promises to make the Turko-Italian war look like a moving picture representation of a prize fight. A field hospital will be established and will be under the direction of capable physicians and nurses .Boy Scout troops wishing an opportunity to demonstrate their konwledge of First Aid to the Wounded methods may get some valuable experience to-morrow.

Manager Hurtubise has gathered together a redoubtable cast of the old guard. The scrimmage he will send into action will be the famous trio of 1902, which used to shove opposing scrims all over the map, Jack Dennard, Dick Thornton and Bill Grady.

The back division will include four veterans, in Dr. McPherson, A. Quinlan, Stan Canniff and Dick Evans. Manager Hurtubise has a black horse to spring for the quarter back position and declines to announce the name of the man who will fill that important position. His wing line will be selected from the following stars: Geo. Lundy, Frank O'Connor, W. Fitzgerald, Bill Meagher, Art. Elliott, M. McGill, Ed. Dillon, Jack O'Brien, Jim Dorris ,W. Milburn, Chris. Graham.

Two Teams For Cobourg

COBOURG, OCT. 26.—At the annual meeting of the Cobourg Hockey Club it was decided to have two O. H. A. teams this season, junior and intermediate. Mr. Fieldstein was appointed manager of the juniors. The meeting was enthusiastic and a good season's sport is ahead of the club. The following officers were elected: Hon. President, O .F. Allison; Hon. Vice-Presidents, Messrs. E. W. Hargraft, Geo. Bond and Thos. McIntosh; President, Dr. Hayden; Vice-President, C. J. Webster; Secretary, L. H. Wilson; Treasurer, W. H. Maher; Executive Committee, Messrs. Geo. Plunkett, T. Mulhall, T. Bulger, T. Turpin and A. Peterson.

Geo. Scott wa sappointed representative to the O.H.A.

FOOTBALL

What promises to be the best soccer game this season will be played tomorrow afternoon between Mr. Pagette's eleven and All Saints. The players are all picked men from the C.G.E. and the Church League, and a real good game will be seen. All lovers of the game should turn up to witness this match on Park Street grounds. Kick off at 3 p.m. Come and help us in our endeavour to promote good, clean sport.

BIG EXODUS FROM THE CITY

This being the first day of the cheap rates on the railways, there was a large exodus of people from the city. At the C. P. R. station fully two hundred people gathered to await the arrival of the noon train from Toronto. It is estimated that about 75 per cent. went out on the train, while the other 25 per cent. where there to await incoming friends.

A large number of them invaded the ticket agents' wicket and for about an hour kept these gentlemen working overtime. About 80 or 90 people disembarked from the Toronto train, and either fell into the arms of loving friends or hiked it for the hotel busses, the location of the latter not being difficult to discover, thanks to the energetic efforts of the porters and cab drivers.

The same conditions prevailed at the G.T.R. station. The majority of the holiday seekers there appeared to be made up of Normalites and travellers. They congregated in the waiting rooms, and every time the yard engine uncorked a pound or two of steam through the medium of the whistle, they made a rush for the platform, expecting to see the Toronto express pull in. The arrival of a mud train a few minutes ahead of the passenger train was responsible for a general scrimmage, in which many of the participants were buffeted about in an unenviable manner; if you escaped with nothing worse than a poke in the ribs with an umbrella or a slap on the back with a suit case, you were very fortunate, indeed

However, the arrival of the long-looked-for train seemed to alleviate the mental anguish of many, and for a time the scene resembled a wrestling bout, inasmuch as there were as many trying to get on as there were to get off. These conditions will probably prevail until after Thanksgiving. Tuesday will be the last day of the cheap rates.

FINANCE COMMITTEE MEETING

At a meeting of the Finance Committee held last night, it was decided that the first $6,000 be paid to the Bonner Worth Co. when the Council is advised in writing by Mr. Hall, City Solicitor, that the mortgages and other documents are in proper form and that the mortgage has been registered.

There were present at the meeting: Ald. Bradburn, chairman; Alds. Metheral, Buller and Duncan.

A letter from the Canadian Municipal Journal Co., with reference to subscription of 12 copies for $10 from now until 1st January, 1913, was received.

It was decided that one copy of the Journal be subscribed for, to be sent to the City Clerk during 1912.

It was decided that the Lancashire Motor Co. be paid $1,357.62 on account.

The Chief of Police will be requested to enquire about Sarah Burns, who was admitted to the hospital for the insane July 15, 1906.

It was moved and seconded that the payment of the pay sheets for the special work in connection with the south end sewerage be approved of.

The passing of a large number of accounts concluded the session.

Will Reside Here

Mr. W. J. Elliott of Hope township, who has been residing in the West for the past nineteen years, has arrived in the city with his family and will take up residence at 7 Bennett street. Mr. Elliott lived for twelve years in Manitoba and for the past seven years has carried on farming operations in Southern Alberta. He is most enthusiastic over this part of the west, especially in regard to the climate and states that he has not enjoyed a sleighride in six years. The snow, when it does come, is wiped out so quickly by the Chinook winds that there is little use of owning sleighs. Mr. Elliott has not visited Peterborough in twenty-five years, and naturally finds the city greatly changed and improved, although of course not to be compared with the mush-room like propensities of some of the western towns.

HOLIDAY BARGAINS IN MILLLINERY

Miss McGiverin is offering extra special discounts off all trimmed Hats etc. during this week Ladies who avail themselves of this opportunity will be certain to save money. 431 George St. Phone 1385. 1w-43 3d-97

Rev. Armitage Will Preach

The Rev. W. L. Armitage, of Picton, will conduct the services of All Saints both morning and evening on Sunday next.

Mr. Armitage was the first rector of All Saints, and the memory of his good work at that church may be still retained by some of the older of the citizens, and his visit will therefore be looked forward to with pleasure. His presence on Sunday will no doubt be instrumental in bringing together a large congregation.

Presbyterial W.M.S. Formed

A meeting was held in St. Andrew's church yesterday afternoon for the purpose of organizing a Presbyterial Women's Home Missionary Society for Peterborough. There was a large attendance of delegates, there being already fourteen W. H. M. Auxiliaries and Mission Bands in the Presbytery. Mrs. John Somerville, of Toronto, president of the General Society, addressed the meeting, giving graphically the great need for the interest and sympathy of Christian women created by the rapid development in the newer parts of our land. Mrs. P. Kerr presided at the meeting and Mr. Treneer rendered an organ solo with his usual acceptance.

The following officers were elected:
Hon. President—Mrs. (Rev.) Pogue.
President—Mrs. Hugh Waddell.
Treasurer—Miss Bennet.
Cor. Sec.—Mrs. Chisholm.
Rec. Sec.—Miss Lundy.
Mission Band Secretary—Miss Pickup.
Literature Secretary— Miss Bertha Brown.
Pioneer Secretary—Miss Nina Davidson.
Home Helpers' Secretary—Mrs. McPherson.

ROBERT FAIR & CO., Ltd.

IN GENERAL

Popularity is the triumph of the commonplace.

If you must disparage a bit, speak ill of the dead—they can stand it.

How is it with your back yard, have you planted any flowers there?

The new thought is that peculiar proclivity to explain the thing before you understand it.

There are people who are in trouble, but their woe is nothing to that of those who expect trouble.

New Rails Laid. — New auxiliary rails were laid at the G.T.R. Charlotte street crossing this morning.

Do not keep your kindness in water-tight compartments; if it runs over a bit, 'twill do no harm.

There is only one stimulant that never intoxicates—duty. Duty puts a clear sky over every man, into which the skylark of happiness always goes singing.

There is no one thing in life that causes so many heartaches as a difference of opinion as to what constitutes humour.

Teacher Training Class.—A Teachers' Training class will be held in the Guild Room at St. John's church tonight at 7.30 o'clock.

Service at St. John's.—To-morrow will be St. Simon's and St. Jude's Day, and there will be service in St. John's church at 9.45 a.m.

Houses to Rent.—A few more houses to rent, from $5.00 to $25.00 per month and upward. M. Carton, C. J. Carroll, 372 Water street. Phone 822.

Dental Practice. — Dr. Middleton, 374½ George street, (over McWilliam's fur store) has taken over the practice of W. H. Manning, dentist.

Classes Will Meet.—Y. W. C. A. Cooking Classes will meet afternoon and evenings of next week. For further information, apply at the Y. W. C. A. office, or 'phone 223.

Painting and Decorating.—Painting paper hanging, graining, etc. All work quickly and neatly executed. Country work specially attended to. —Arthur Guppy, 358 Water steret.

Apples and Potatoes.—We have in stock, by the barrel, almost any variety of apples you want. Our own packing, stock, first-class. Also full line of Ontario and Eastern potatoes by the bag.—W. J. Oke.

Voice Culture.—Miss Mary G. Chalmers, A.T.C.M. soloist, St. Paul's church choir, will take a limited number of pupils in voice culture and piano. Studio, Peterborough Conservatory of Music. Tel. 355.

Pupils Prepared for Examinations.—Miss Lulu E. McGill, teacher of Piano, Rudiments, Harmony, Counterpoint and History. Pupils prepared for examinations. Studio, Peterborough Conservatory of Music. Tel. 355.

Pupils, Attention!—Miss Geraldine King wishes to announce that she is prepared to receive pupils in vocal and instrumental music, commencing September 1st, 1911, at 290 Charlotte street. Both phones 1A.

On the afternoon of Thanksgiving Day, Monday, Oct. 30th, a shooting match will be held by Mr. W. G. Fowler of the 8th line of Smith. Some fine turkeys will be offered, and a good time is promised.

It is easy in the world to live after the world's opinions; it is easy in solitude to live after your own, but the great man is he who, in the midst of the crowd keeps with perfect sweetness the independence of solitude.

Thanksgiving Dinner—A Thanksgiving dinner will be given by the Ladies Aid of St. James church on Monday, Oct. 30th, in the basement of the church. Dinner will be served from 6 to 8 p.m. A good programme will be provided. Admission 25c.

Music and Languages Taught.—Prof. D. Schlochow, late of Toronto and London, is prepared to take pupils in German, French and Music. For full particulars, apply at his Studio, The Music Building, Charlotte street. J. M. Green Music Co., Ltd., Greene Phone 595.

Plenty of Poultry.—A consignment of no less than forty crates of turkeys and chickens arrived in the city per Canadian Express Co. this morning, from Campbellford, Stirling and Anson They are for Mr. W. H. Elford, Peterborough, agent for the Gunn Langloise Co., of Montreal.

New Music Studio.—At the James M. Greene Music Co., Limited, 185 and 187 Charlotte street, 'Phone 595 Herbert C. Treneer, A. T. C. M., Organist and Choir Master of St. Andrew's Church, will receive pupils for piano and theory. Pupils prepared for College or Conservatory examinations, if desired. A thorough and technical training guaranteed with special attention to interpretation. For terms, etc., apply to address mentioned above.

Shipment of Bulbs.—Messrs. Jordan Bros., the George street florists, announce the arrival of their annual fall shipment of autumn bulbs from Holland, which will be placed on sale at once at their salesroom, George street. The shipment, which consists of all kinds of bulbs for fall planting, has been somewhat delayed and there have been anxious enquiries as to when it would arrive. The announcement that the bulbs are here will be received with satisfaction.

Patronize Home Industry.—There is no need of sending to Toronto, or elsewhere, for showcases, or store-fixtures of any kind. Patronize the Peterborough Showcase Co., a well-equipped factory, for turning out large contracts, as well as small ones. The material and workmanship are of the best. Prices are right, and terms to suit all people. Any one intending to equip their stores with showcases, wallcases, etc., for the coming Christmas trade should send in their order as soon as possible, before the rush begins and not leave everything to the last two weeks. — W. ager, Factory, 709 Water street. Telephone 1153.

Laid to Rest.—The funeral cortege of the late Mrs. George Fitzgerald left the family residence, London St., at 3 o'clock to-day, for the Little Lake Cemetery, where the remains were interred. A large number of friends were present at the funeral, to show their last mark of esteem to the deceased lady, who was universally beloved. The Rev. R. J. Webb officiated, and the pallbearers were Messrs. A. Clydesdale, G. Allen, F. Mann, N. Milburn, W. R. C. Higgins and Ernest Reid.

Dr. C. H. Parkhurst, New York, at a recent banquet, said of charity: "Too many of us, perhaps, misinterpret the meaning of charity as the master misinterpreted the Scriptural text. This master, a pillar of a Western church, entered in his journal, 'The Scripture ordains that, "if a man take away thy coat, let him have thy cloak also." To-day, having caught the butler stealing my potatoes, I have given him the 'sack.'"

CLOTHES THAT SATISFY

"Clothes That Satisfy" is the one best phrase we can find to describe our Ready-to-Wear Clothes for men. They satisfy the most critical dressers as to the style, fit and service and they satisfy them at a lower cost than any others. No matter how particular you may be as regards correct style, or how exacting you may be concerning fit, or how critical you may be about your clothes withstanding hard and long wear, our clothes will satisfy you better than any other clothes you have ever worn, because we are striving to make Small profits build up a Big business. You can buy clothes at the same prices anywhere, maybe, but you can't get such values as ours. Don't wait until the last minute to get your winter clothes. Get them now and LeBrun's the place.

We are positive that our values are unsurpassed. Our economical methods of doing business and our willingness to accept a very small margin of profit, make it possible for us to undersell all other stores. If you find upon investigation that you can get a little better service here than any other store, we shall expect to get your trade. Therefore we shall expect soon to have the pleasure of showing you some of the new fall goods now on display here.

KIT'S COLUMN

"A spirit speeding down on All Souls' Eve
From the wide gates of that mysterious shore
Where sleep the dead, sang softly and yet sweet.
'So gay a wind was never heard before.'
The old man said, and listened by the fire;
And, 'Tis the souls that pass us on their way,'
So left their glowing nuts awhile to pray."

Over here the Eve of All Souls, commonly called Hallowe'en, is a night to make merry, to give parties and go to them, to wear masks, play games and otherwise enjoy yourself. Not so is it in Ireland, though games are played—games of portent and gravity. That was the night in the "big house" when the children helped Betty, the major domo of that happy, careless household, to set the vast kitchen to rights, to secure the key of the granary—it being the biggest key of all, have the lead ready to melt in the skillet, gather the apples for ducking, the nuts for burning, and later prepare supper and build the fire for that dread Company of the Dead which return to walk the earth on that one night in all the year. Feelings of awe mingled with delight filled those young hearts with excitement. There was no doubt in those childish minds but that the souls of the dead would be abroad upon the wind and would revisit the scenes where they had lived and loved while in their earthly bodies; no doubt but the fortunes told by the hissing lead as it dropped through the key-loop and into the clear cold water below, making pictures from which the vivid Celtic imagination drew auguries, would come true; no doubt but the fairies would be peeping from the fastnesses of the hills and crags to see the passing of the wailing dead, or that the Christ walked, healing the sick child the mother held out at the door of her cabin at midnight—held in the rain and the wind for the blessing of the compassionate Saviour. All these things came to pass every All Souls' night in the blessed Isle of Saints—and always would.

So much for the heart of a child which yet lives, thank God, in the breast of the woman. Superstition, you will say. I don't think so. Reason tells one emphatically enough that such things as fairies, Santa Claus, the cry of the Banshee, the return of our Dead on All Souls' night, are not and cannot be. Very well. But what is to prevent you or me from sending reason out to a party, let us say, and revelling to our souls' content in the Land of Tir-na-Og—the land of youth and dreams, of poetry and legend and myth. The everyday world is prosaic enough surely, and hard-driving enough, and commonplace enough to satisfy the practical side of us. Is it not wise sometimes to fly on fairy wings to happy, careless Wonderland and play awhile with The White Rabbit and the Dodo? And how much wiser it would be for you to let your little child believe in old Santy, and make fairy plays for himself in the happy, swift-flying hours of childhood, only a sorrowful man—from whose heart every sweet and childish fancy was kept out—could tell you if you were there to hear in the after years of a dull, hard, world-worn life.

Keep your Fairyland, cherish the old legends and myths of your childhood. For, in some gray hour, after years of battling with the world, of loss and grief and failure, they will come to comfort you, to lift you from surroundings that have become set and prosaic, and take you, on golden wings to where fairy harmonies are sounding and rose leaves are falling. It may be in music that you will find your enchanted hour; in a verse of poetry; in the first song of the robin in spring; in the sighing of the wind as it passes by your pane to sing a little song to you in passing. But be assured your fairyland will find you and will punctuate your life with little golden stops. I shall hear the fairies dancing on All Souls' night, and if fancy but brings me on the lingering wind one sigh from a Soul that has passed and left me lonely one will bless the gentle, wise, guiding hand that left so much that was beautiful in the heart of a child.

"Still the pale spirit, singing through the night,
Came to this window, looking from the dark
Into the room; then passing to the door
Where couched the whining dog, afraid to bark,
Tapped gently, without answer, pressed the latch,
Pushed softly open, and then tapped once more.
The maidens cried, when seeking for the ring,
'How strange a wind is blowing on the door!'"

First of all, my friend, no man should confess his inability to impress on the mind of a woman that his is the stronger will. Secondly, a man ought to be able to manage a woman the way she manages him—by gentle hypocrisy. For instance a woman who wants something rarely asks directly for it. She waits until he is in good humour—in a receptive mood—before she makes her attack. And then she makes it indirectly. Any more than this I refuse to reveal.

However, here is a hint or two for your own benefit. Woman likes to be regarded as a paradox; that is her little vanity. Every man should pretend to hold that belief. But you mustn't let her think that she is incapable of being understood. How you are to regard her as a paradox, yet prove to her that you understand her thoroughly is the enigma you must solve. Have I made myself clear to you? "About as clear as a hen in a blizzard." I hear your answer. Then I have achieved my end.

The new styles—though beautifully illustrated in the advertisements—are troubling most of us. The long or the short coat—that is one question. The trimmed or plain skirt—that is another—while we are tossed between the width and length of our new gown. The hobbled has hobbled away. So, we are told, has the hip-length coat and the kimono sleeve. But the jacket of medium length is without "flair." There is no "style to it." It is neither the one thing nor the other. To be frank it lends a dowdiness to the figure. The long coat lent distinction: the short, chic. We pause long before we decide. Skirts, says Paris, will flare slightly at the foot, but will retain their stove-pipe curves about the hips. The waist line has flown up under the arms for the house or the evening gown. Will our empire gown of some seasons back not require to be re-modeled after all? Joyous news! The ancient garment shall again sit in solitary state upon the chaperon's bench, and between you and me, my dear, it might have hoops under it and six waistlines for all any one will notice it. The society reporter's pencil is too busy among the pretty butterflies to take notes about a mere wallflower in the wall-cranny. Still—Are we to have plaits in the back of our gowns, and is the skirt-hem to be wide or narrow? Votes for women, or the provincial elections can stand aside while we settle these important affairs.

Up till lately the magazines kept their pages fairly clean. The decadent tale, the mal-odorous story, the indecent jest were not offered to us for our general reading. That sort of thing is now creeping into the pages of at least one magazine and it will not be long ere others follow suit. Why not, since the public runs to buy? The editors of the magazine in question are hardly to be blamed for catering to the public taste. They are out to make money and in their editorial message in the October number they state blatantly or brazenly that they are going to continue along the lines that have proved to be so popular. In the last number we are treated to a story that every minister in the country should denounce from the pulpit. It is a shameful story, shamelessly told. You would feel the hot blood creeping to your cheek if your young daughter came to ask you the meaning of it, or your oldest girl commented on it. The story of Adam and Eve—discounted these days—seems to bear the impress of truth if only that it treats of curiosity as the worst sin of all—and the reason for all sin. The thought that she would learn all that there was of evil was more in Eve's mind when she bit into the apple, than that she would learn all Good. Curiosity caused the Roman emperors to fall into these monstrous crimes chronicled by Suetonius, and through curiosity according to his own confession, a brilliant poet and dramatist came to his downfall. The decadent story or play is widely advertised and people are curious to see it for themselves—therefore the sale of books and theatre stalls. But it is time to call halt. If we would not have the minds of our young people soiled and their souls bruised, we must forbid certain magazines to the home. The stories are not clever, or intellectual, or witty, or merely vulgar. They are nasty.

Who would speak of Osterising? Who would deny the man of fifty the right to work — to earn his living? Not London, apparently, for her mayor-elect for 1912 is a man of eighty-one. Moreover he is a doctor, the first medical man, as well as the oldest citizen to fill the office. Sir Thomas Crosby, born in 1830, who started to practice medicine in 1852, before a good many who were born since or long since have passed away, is a hale old man, keen of mind, sharp of eye and active of body. As he is a widower, his daughter, Miss Crosby, will perform the duties of lady mayoress. It is not the years, is it, that count so much as the heart of a man, the grave, optimistic nature, the life of work, the moderation in everything—eating, drinking and exercise? Such another as Lord Strathcona, Canada's grand old man, is London's new lord mayor.

As to woman—the best recipe I know for the keeping of youthful looks, and a merry heart, and a light foot, is the happy marriage. The woman who is happy in her husband and her home can snap her fingers at old Time and his scythe.

THE FAMILY HEARTH

What chance has a young lady a little out of style, who has to earn her own living, to shine in society by the side of one of our fashionable ladies whose pap is a millionaire? Socially we are the slaves of gold. Old-fashioned people look at it in the old-fashioned way and say it is all wrong. And so it is; but it is a fact that stares us in the face that those who are worth the most are considered as of the most worth. After all, perhaps the wisest man was right when he said, "The love of money is the root of all evil."

* * *

No toy goes out from the Home Circle without a sense of loss. For a time, at least, the motherly presence is sadly missed, the sisterly affection warmly cherished. Then if the mother's letters reach him often, filled with all that a mother most eloquently expresses, love, hopefulness and prayer, he is still surrounded by a holy influence.

* * *

We always class children, birds and flowers together. And why? Because they should be equally beautiful, innocent and happy. We should never rob childhood of its ideal loveliness. Even old people should be gay, and happy and good; too good to overcloud the children's horizon with angry eyes and lowering brows, nor turn their merriment to discord by continual fault-finding. Allow them all the freedom consistent with absolute safety. Let them play and be happy, but teach them self-control. God's estimate of self-control is this: "He that is slow to anger is better than the mighty, and he that ruleth his own spirit, than he that taketh a city."

* * *

There is nothing in the moral, spiritual or physical universe that makes marriage respectable, but love. Without it there can be no marriage, only a wretched, miserable form, that rapidly degenerates into a loathsome, demoralising burden. The time to marry is when love demands it, and not simply because the kitchen needs a cook, the dining table a figure-head in muslin or silk, or the cucumber vines somebody to kill the bugs on them. The one to marry is the woman you love, and no other one. That, and that alone should decide. Riches may take wings and flee away; beauty may fade; good health is a very excellent and desirable thing in man or woman, but the circumstances of an hour or a moment may ruin the best of health. A man who marries from "married considerations," usually gets what he deserves—its full equivalent in unhappiness. A man who marries for beauty, learns, as no other man can learn, how hideous and loathsome it may become. So, young man, take love for your guidance in this matter, remembering that it demands the best and noblest in you—that it is sacred and holy, and divine, for it is of God.

* * *

Why should you go out to tea and praise your neighbour's muffins, when you have forgotten to tell mother how good hers were? Why should you announce how much Mr. Wilson over the way knows, when father is a great deal better informed man, and it has never entered your little head to whisper quietly to him how much you appreciate his wisdom? You keep your ability to discover faults for the home while the eye that should look for virtues is closed tightly until you go out.

* * *

There is one sin which seems to us is everywhere and by everybody underestimated and quite too much overlooked in valuation of character. It is the sin of fretting, so common that unless it rises above its usual monotone we do not observe it. Watch any ordinary coming together of people and see how many minutes it will be before somebody frets—that is, makes more or less complaining statement of something or other, which most probably every one in the room, or in the car, or on the street corner, it may be, knew before, and which probably no one can help. Why say anything about it? It is cold, it is hot, it is wet, it is dry; somebody has broken an appointment; ill cooked a meal; stupidity or bad faith, somewhere has resulted in discomfort.

* * *

One child in a family that gives away all his playthings with Monte Cristo nonchalance and prodigality, is often wrongly kissed and praised and haloed in the family circle for his generous soul. He is often held up as a model to his brother that shows an incipient passion for cornering the toy market by crowding out and acquiring the holdings of the weaker dealers in the nursery. Both children are wrong. The first has not the proper respect for his duty to himself; the second has not just recognition of his duty to others. The one demands less than his rights; the other, more.

* * *

There is no place in the universe for a lazy woman. We will care for the sick woman, we will tolerate a cross woman—but what shall we do to the lazy woman. Because the home is the very centre of life, the housekeeper must be active, orderly and conscientious—these qualifications she must have, and if she can add to these, thrift, intelligence and tenderness, we find wherever she is, that most blessed and beautiful of all earthly delights, a happy home.

* * *

We hope all who read this column will endeavour to keep a few flowers in the home. In addition to their beauty and fragrance, they teach neatness and order. The wife and children like to have a clean room, so that the flower, in its purity and grace, may not shame them. And then, too, a poor man likes to feel that he has an ornament in his dwelling similar to that which a rich man chooses as the best embellishment of his drawing-room.

TOO LITTLE BLOOD

The Cause of Nearly All the Everyday Ailments of Life.

Too little blood — that is what makes men and women look pale and sallow and feel languid. That is what makes them drag along, always tired, never real hungry, unable to digest their food, breathless and palpitating at the heart after slight exertion, so that it is wearisome even to go upstairs. Doctors tell them that they are "anaemic" — the plain English being too little blood. If your face is pale or sallow, if your gums are pale instead of being scarlet; if you are easily tired and frequently despondent; if you do not relish your meals, and small matters irritate you, it is a sign that your blood is thin and watery and that you are on the verge of a complete breakdown.

More weak, anaemic people have been made strong, energetic, and cheerful by taking Dr. Williams' Pink Pills than by any other means. They actually make new blood, which reaches every part of the body, braces the nerves and brings new health and new strength. The case of Miss Nellie Welch, Essex, Ont., is proof of the great curative powers of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. Miss Welch says: "A few years ago I was going into what my friends believed to be a hopeless decline. I was subject to severe headaches, had no appetite, was pale and grew distressingly weak. I tried several doctors, some of whom we counted the best in this part of the country, but they failed to help me. At last my heart grew so weak and I was so nervous and thin that I had to take to my bed, and the doctor held out but little hope for my recovery. Like others I had often read of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills, and though the doctor opposed my taking them I determined to give them a trial, as I felt I might as well be dead as to be living in the misery I was in. In a month after beginning to take the pills I was up and around again, and steadily growing stronger, until I was again enjoying the blessing of perfect health. Several years have since elapsed and my health has been the very best. It is, therefore, with great gratitude that I write you in the hope that my experience may be of benefit to some other sufferer."

Sold by all medicine dealers or by mail at 50 cents a box or six boxes for $2.50 from The Dr. Williams' Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

SUNDAY SCHOOL LESSON QUESTIONS

(Copyright, 1910, by Rev. T. S. Linscott, D.D.)

A Psalm of Deliverance. Psalm lxxxv.

Golden Text—The Lord hath done great things for us; whereof we are glad. Ps. cxxvi: 3.

(1) Verse 1—What captivity did the Psalmist here refer to, and what were the circumstances of their return?

(2) How much of the prosperity of our land and nation depends upon the favour of the Lord?

(3) Verse 2—In what sense may it be true that God forgives a nation for its sins?

(4) If a nation is forgiven its sins why would that not include every individual in the nation?

(5) On what condition does God forgive individuals their sins?

(6) What takes place in the mind of God, and in the soul of the man whose sins are forgiven?

(7) Verse 3—How had God's wrath been manifested in the captivity of Jacob?

(8) What was the sign when the the wrath of God is removed from them?

(9) How does a sinner know when the rwath of God is removed from him?

(10) Verse 4—Are there degrees of anger in God, and is it possible that the "fierceness" of his anger may cease, and yet He be angry with us?

(11) Verse 5—What do you understand by the anger of God?

(12) Is there any war in which the anger of God is visited upon one generation for the sins of another generation?

(13) Verse 6—What did the Psalmist probably mean, when he prayed that the nation may be revived?

(14) What is the great need of the church and the world to-day?

(15) How may a Christian live so as to "rejoice" in the Lord all the time?

(16) Verse 7—May a person so live that he does not need to ask for God's mercy?

(17) What does the "salvation" of God include?

(18) Verse 8—How does God speak, and does He actually answer questions or give special directions?

(19) What is the "peace" of God?

(20) What effect does "folly" have upon the peace of God?

(21) Verse 9—What effect does the personal salvation of individuals have upon the "glory" or prosperity of a nation?

(22) Verse 10—When we experience the mercy of God, does that always make us the lovers of truth? Why?

(23) Why is it that "righteousness and peace" necessarily embrace each other? (This is one of the questions that may be answered in writing by members of the club.)

(24) Verses 11-13—Is national righteousness always a cause of national prosperity?

Autumn is the Time — FOR — GLASSES

WHY?

The increasingly long evenings of Autumn give greater opportunity for Sewing, Writing, Reading, Study, and as this is necessarily by artificial light the strain upon the eyes is such as to make Glasses quite a boon at this season of the year. This no doubt accounts for much of the present increased demand for Glasses.

Appointment for examining the eyes for Glasses is usually necessary.

CHANGE IN WOMAN'S LIFE

Made Sale by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Graniteville, Vt.—"I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter."—Mrs. Chas. Barclay, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing woman's ills such as inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

by ARTHUR STRINGER

"We've lost them!" he murmured dejectedly.

"Are you sure?" she whispered, out of the silence that followed.

"We've lost them both!" he almost groaned. The whir of the fan and the breathing of the two listeners was the only sound in the cabin. The quietness again seemed like an uppiling breaker that refused to fall and retreat. The woman stirred uneasily.

"Wait!" cried McKinnon, with suddenly inclined head. His face, now seamed with runnels of sweat, was drawn and the jaw muscles were set and knotted. He jerked a nervous hand toward the droning fan, peevishly, as though its presence were a personal affront to him.

"Shut off that fan," he commanded.

The woman rose without a word and shut it off. There was a malicious little spit of the rebellious current, a spark of blue under the japanned standard, and the revolving brass wheel-wings came to a stop. Nothing but the sound of breathing filled the cabin.

He jumped for his key, talking over his shoulder as he did so.

"It's the Guariqui operator," he explained, as he worked. "He's sending very weak; I can hardly get him. He says his power's giving out, and De Brigard's men are targeting at his aerials with carbines . . .

Then he flung himself into his chair ,and caught up his form pad for transcription, with his receiver once more over his head. He wrote slowly, with intent eyes and wrinkled brow, word after word, sometimes going back and scratching out a phrase, sometimes puzzled by a lost dot or dash in the stuttering Morse, sometimes quickly "breaking" and asking the operator to repeat. His breath came shorter and quicker as he listened and wrote. Then he called frenziedly, and listened, and called again.

"They're dead!" he exclaimed, in disgust.

"Dead?" cried the woman in white-lipped alarm.

His use of the word "dead" still terrified the woman at his side. He had no time to explain. He simply thrust his inscribed pad sheets into her hand as he turned to his key again, for time now was precious, terribly precious.

She read:

"Duran's men all here. Shut up in city waiting cartridge shipment. Light skirmishes last two days. Ulloa held De Brigard back all yesterday, but had to fall back on city at night. Short of ammunition. . . We are shut in. De Brigard's forces surrounded city at daybreak. Courier reports rebels bringing machine guns up through hills, from Sanibella. We must have help before guns join bombardment. Carbines are picking at my aerials from Paraiso Hill, to the east. Can you get Chilian battleship two days off Puerto Locombia or British ship out of Kingston? Must have help. Relay call to anything in reach. . . . Duran's authority. . . . . Or if Chilian or British marines can be landed in time advise them to push in by way of Boracao. American Consul Klauser shut up there holding wireless with Kilvert, United Fruit operator, but report bad sending. . . . . is only disaffected town outside capital. . . . Entrain there. . . . Must hurry. . . ."

Her hungry eyes rushed back and forth along the second sheet which McKinnon had thrust into her hand:

"Can get Princeton. . . . Some one from God's country. . . . Must hurry. Yes, president and cabinet safe. Seven hundred crowded in Palace yards and water shut off. Tell Princeton not to wait to land guns. Remember Boracao switch-bridge is mined. . . . Bullet against switchboard. . . . Get me south of Boston again—hurry—power dying—hurry."

That was the end of the message.

"But the Princeton!" gasped the woman. "If you can't get the Princeton!"

"Wait—wait—I'm getting her," answered the man, bent low over his responder ,as though the sense it appealed to were vision and not sight. "They've been waiting for me to relay. They've been——"

He kept up that cannonading until it seemed to the watching woman that it was never going to end. Then he switched off and listened again, and again cannonaded his answer.

Then he dropped wearily into his chair, wiped he was not alone. He looked up at the woman with a strangely transfiguring smile on his sweat-stained face.

"It's over," he said, with the simplicity of utter weariness.

"You've got them—the Princeton!" she asked.

"I've got them!"

She put out her two hands to him. It was meant as an impersonal gesture of gratitude, and he knew it as he took them in his. But there seemed something revivifying and electrical in the sweat from his face, and remembered that mere contact with them, something that brought the hope and joy of life back to his tired body. He laughed aloud.

"I gave them what they were aching for! They were lying there steaming and baking and fretting for the very one word I sent on to them."

"Then they'll come?"

"Come? Yes, they'll come! They've been lying there whimpering to get up at De Brigard just like a rat-terrier whimpering to get at a kitten."

He was silent for a moment, as his mind pictured the sudden change, so many miles away, that was flashing and thrilling through all the great gray hulk of that wakened battleship, the signal-bells clanging, the orders being given, the furnaces being stoked, the decks being cleared.

"And before to-morrow night they will be anchored at Puerto Locombia."

"Before to-morrow night?" she repeated, with sinking heart.

"She has to steam all the way from Torreblanca—she can't cover the distance in less than thirty hours under any circumstances."

"But we will be at Puerto Locombia to-day, before nightfall!"

"I know it,' 'he said, with all the joy and confidence trailing out of his voice.

"Then Ganley will have one whole day to act. The Sanibella guns will be pushed up to Guariqui. Ulloa's men will be without ammunition."

"They can hold out!" he answered her.

"But they may not," she cried. "It may all be over and done before we can help them. And we will be here at the mercy of Ganley!"

"Yes," he said, with abstracted and studious eyes, "that is the one thing that worries me."

"But Ganley can do anything, once we're at Puerto Locombia. This ship and everything it carries will be under his thumb!"

"Yes, that is still our problem—we've still got that bridge to cross," he confessed. "Yet I think we can cross it, when the time comes."

"But how?" she demanded.

"By not having this ship remain at Puerto Locombia, once Ganley's put ashore," was his answer.

"Then in what way could we still help Guariqui—in time?" was her forlorn and helpless query.

CHAPTER XXV.
THE TRUMP CARD.

It was eight hours later that the Laminian made her way under half-speed into the roadstead at Puerto Locombia.

She drifted guardedly in over shoals of translucent verdancy, with her screw churning the lettuce-green waters into coiling and copperas-tinted eddies.

A long iron pier ran out into this green-watered roadstead, its trestles spanned by the single track of a narrow-gauge railway. On either side of the concrete breakwater that lipped the sea-edge of the town itself stretched away two curves of white sand with their intermittently whitening surf. Then came scattering clumps of lonely palms, then a lower mist-hung coast of ooze and mangrove and steaming lagoon.

Behind the concreted crescent of shore-line ,to which the roadstead pier seemed like an arrow set in a drawn bow, stood irregular lines of thatched huts, of mud and bamboo wattle, crowding on narrow streets that sloped to the centre and held sidewalks no wider than a wall-top. Still nearer ranged the more substantial part of the town, the bald, sun-scorched buildings of corrugated iron and tin, the one-storey, open-front shops, with red tile roofs, the uninviting rectangular bodegas and the austere and gloomy government buildings. Over the latter drooped strange flags of yellow and red and blue.

On the higher ground to the right ran rusty streets lined with pink and yellow-tinted house walls of stucco, with heavy Spanish shutters and terra cotta roof-tiles. Along the fringe of lower ground to the extreme left stood irregular rows of wattled huts, raised the height of a man from the "sand-jiggers" and the miasmal tundra under them, looking like lines of patient herons as they balanced on their rotting palm-wood stilts.

Beyond the town, leading into the slowly rising ground of the south-west, wound a road of shell and lime-stone, leaving a crooked scar of white against the blackness of the lowlands through which it crept. Close in by the concrete breakwater lay the ribs and spars of a wrecked schooner, mysteriously adding to the atmosphere of gloom and neglect. On a side-track curving from the pier-end stood a dismantled train of cars, so small that they looked like a child's toys. Nearby lay a derailed locomotive, brown with rust, strangely pathetic in its attitude of resigned helplessness. Thirty paces from this stood the tottering remains of a corrugated iron warehouse, its fallen roof and twisted wall-plates showing plainly enough that it had been blown up by either Ulloa or the insurgents.

Farther out along the broken pier rolled and creaked a soft-coal-burning tug. About her single deck, under her overlarge and drooping ensign of red and yellow and blue, lounged and waited a number of figures in red-striped uniforms. Obsolete brass cannon shimmered at her bow and stern, and a carbine-rack showed out just aft of her wheel-house.

It was while this strangely accoutred tug cast off and came puffing and wheeling about to meet the newcomer into the roadstead that McKinnon and Alicia Boynton stood at the rail, gazing landward . Nothing seemed left for them now but to watch and wait. Everything that lay in their power had been done; all they could do now was to study the cards as Fate threw them on the board.

"So those are the tools that Ganley works with!" said the operator, looking with open scorn at the strange tug, the strange ensign, the still stranger figures in uniform. He tried to hide his anxiety and depression under a lightness of tone that seemed as incongruous, even to his own ears, as the tricoloured ensign flapping over the soft-coal-burning craft before them.

"Those are the tools that can cut deep, when they have to," was the woman's answer, as she once more looked landward.

McKinnon, unedr the rocking awning that could not altogether shut out the hot sun of the late afternoon, leaned farther over the rail and peered inland.

Far to the south and west stretched the flat and gloomy swamps, steaming under the sun's rays, mephitic and menacing. Still fartner away, tier by tier, rose the hills, with a condor wheeling above them here and there.

They lifted, in gentle waves softened with the green of orange and banana and cocoanut palm, of bamboo and breadfruit, until they crowded mistily up to the huddled blue line of the mountain ridges, to the very peaks of the Cordilleras, lonely, forbidding, and seemingly impenetrable.

From one of the nearer tiers of hills black columns of smoke twined and curled and billowed up into the air. It was the town of Parroto still in flames.

But no sound or sign of movement came from shore. A mysterious and drug-like sleep seemed to envelop both town and swamp and hills. Yet McKinnon, watching with set and thoughtful face, knew that somewhere in the dust-laden streets between the stucco walls senoritas were peering from jalousies, and naked children were playing and lean curs were prowling. In the yellow church facing the Prado priests were moving about. In the shadowy bodegas flies were buzzing and glasses were clinking, and swarthy and undersized patriots were rolling cigarettes and enlarging on the true paths that led to liberty. In each tesselated patio shadowed by rustling palm-fronds, were women and old men, and beside the mud oven of each wattled hut meals were being made ready and eaten . It took him back to the past, painfully, to the past that he would much rather have forgotten.

She was silent for another minute or two, as her eyes turned through the broken line of the Cordilleras to where Guariqui lay, to where still waited the life for which she had fought and risked so much.

"It will never seem home to me again," she answered .

"But it was your home once!"

"Yes, I used to think it was almost beautiful. The movement and colour and mystery of it! The fiestas, and the music, the glitter and pomp of its little court life that so satisfied my foolish vanity, the riding and the freedom ,the passion and warmth of everything! You may not believe me or understand me when I say it, but I can remember when it used to make me almost drunk, especially at night!"

He felt vaguely envious of those earlier and happier days; he felt that he had been cheated out of something. But her eyes, through all their mournfulness, glowed like a tropical sun touched with moonlight, as she smiled up at him; and he forgot the feeling.

"It was beautiful to me—then," she confessed. "But the beauty was there, I think, because I put it there."

To the eyes of the tired and anxious man at her side it seemed anything but beautiful. It seemed a land of unbroken silence, of sullen mystery ,of primordial shadow and gloom, from the white lip of the beach that sucked so feverishly at the pale copper-green of the seawater to the misty line of its farthest mountain-tops . And he wondered if it was to be allowed him ever to reach those mountains, and what would await him there. He wondered, with such odds against him, if the hour for activity would bring with it an honest fighting chance.

He turned his anxious eyes to the tug swinging authoritatively in under the Laminian's quarter. He knew only too well, from the gasconading attitudes of its uniformed officials, from the sheer effrontery with which they swung in and overhauled the bigger steamship, that he was at last beholding the local instruments of the new "Liberal" dictatorship. And he knew that with their advent the curtain was about to rise on a new act of the tangled drama . He racked his brain to understand what Ganley's move would be. He knew that all day long the gun-runner had kept to his cabin . A steward had reported that his head was bad and causing him much pain. He had eaten nothing; he had kept his berth, cursing the Laminian and the heat of her coffin-like cabins and ,above all, her sottish and pigheaded captain.

Yet McKinnon knew it would take more than a sore head to keep Ganley from acting when the moment for action arrived. The one thing that puzzled the operator was what form that first move of Ganley's was to take.

Some hint as to the solution of that problem came even as he stood there at the ship's rail, watching. It came in the form of a shoe, flung from an open porthole of the Laminian to the deck of the indrawing tug. This shoe —it was a ludicrous, wide-toed, well-worn thing of humble calfskin—was picked up by the epauletted officer of the local comandante, looked at with open disgust, and flung openly overboard. But McKinnon noticed that before this took place, the officer in question had extracted from its wide-toed interior a slip of closely folded paper. He promptly disappeared from sight, in the wheelhouse, and when he reappeared, his tug was grating and bumping aloung the Laminian's side-plates ,heedless of the blasphemous and stentorian imprecations of Captain Yandel, bellowing and gesticulating from his bridge-end.

McKinnon himself neither heard nor noticed any of this. He was too busily engaged in watching the porthole, from which the shoe had appeared. He saw a boathook swung carelessly up to it, a red hand reach out and lift something from the end of it, and the boathook continue to scratch along the ship's side-plates as though searching for a hold. Then the tug made fast

Two minutes later a coffee-coloured official wearing cavalry boots, red-striped, blue denim trousers, a yellow-faced white jacket and a gold-braided cap, came aboard. He carried a sword, held at his side by a red sash ,and was followed by an alert-eyed ,narrow-shouldered, yellow-faced youth in blue denim striped with red.

The officer with the sword brought his heels together and saluted Captain Yandel. That worthy seaman, descending from his bridge, demanded to know, in English, why he was so damned slow about getting pratique, and what all the damned fuss was about.

Before any reply was proferred to these impatient queries, Ganley himself appeared from below deck. A crooked smile rested on his bruised and swollen face, a smile that seemed more sinister than the light in his baleful and blood-shot little eyes.

"Come in off the deck!" he commanded, with the calmness of unquestioned authority.

That was all that McKinnon heard, for the talk was resumed in the captain's stateroom, with thunderous volleys of broken Spanish on the one side, with calm and dictatorial incolence on the other. It was to this talk that Alicia, as she leaned over the ship's rail, listened so attentively.

"What is it" asked McKinnon, noticing her wide and terrified eyes.

"We are in quarantine," she answered.

"In quarantine?"

"Yes."

"Do they say why?"

"The comandante has ordered us to be held here. They are sending a detachment of soldiers to watch the ship. We are to be kept here, prisoners."

"But there's no fever!"

"No, of course not! It's the old trick! They daren't outrage our flag openly—we are an American ship! They daren't insult our colours by open capture. But they draw what they call a dead line, and they shoot down everyone who crosses it!"

"So that's how they intend to hold us!"

"Yes—I heard Ganley say, in Spanish, that he'd keep up here until he finished his game. He told Captain Yandel that he was going to tie him up here until his anchor-flukes were barnacled."

"But what's their excuse for this" he asked, with absent and preoccupied eyes, for his busy brain was already reconnoitring into the menacing future.

"He claims that it's yellow fever—that we've entered the affected zone."

"So that was his trump card after all!" said the meditative McKinnon.

"It's the card that makes us lose," was the girl's hopeless rejoinder. "We must stay here prisoners, as much prisoners as though we were cooped up in a quartel, for a whole day and a whole night! We are here, worse than helpless, until the Princeton comes!"

She came to a stop, and shuddered a little.

Kidney Pains in the Back

Could Not Stand or Even Turn in Bed —Legs Greatly Swollen

All Doctor's Medicine Failed—Cure Effected by Use of

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

Again this great medicine has triumphed over kidney disease of a severe type. From a bed of suffering and helplessness Mrs. Walsh was restored to health and strength by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Kidney pains in the back tortured her. Dropsical swellings had set in and she had no reason to hope for cure since the doctor's medicine failed to even relieve her. Read what the husband says about this remarkable cure.

Mr. Thos. D. Walsh, Pictou, N.S., writes. "Two years ago my wife took to her bed after suffering for a long time from kidney pains in the back. She was not able to stand on her feet or even turn herself in bed. The doctor's medicine was no benefit whatever, that we could see. Sometimes her legs would swell considerably. Reading about a woman in similar condition being cured by Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, we purchased two boxes, ad when these were used she was able to sit up. With three more boxes she was restored to health and doing her own housework.

"As for myself I also found these pills all that is claimed for them. I give this statement in order that others may obtain the same ease from suffering as that experienced by my wife and myself."

Cause and Cure of Headache

The cause of headache as you know, is the stoppage of the circulation resulting in pressure on the delicate nerves of the head. In time nature will start the blood going again, but meanwhile we suffer and are unfit for duty.

Assisted by two ZUTOO Tablets, which by the way are as harmless as the soda they contain, nature will remove the pressure and stop the headache in twenty minutes. Why continue to suffer? Why be unfit?

It is really remarkable how many people now use ZUTOO to cure their headaches. Do you? If not, why not?

BLEEDING CATARRH MUST LEAVE

When Treated with Morrisey's "No. 26."

HOULTON, MAINE, Sept. 9, 1910. "I was suffering terribly from Bleeding Catarrh for a long time, and had tried everything without success. My doctor could not help me, and so I decided to undergo treatment with Father Morrisey, whose fame had extended clear down here. It was a wise decision, for me, because I soon began to feel better, and it was but a short while until the bleeding stopped—but I was obliged to use the Ointment No. 21 for sometime, because I had had the Catarrh so long that it would not yield to treatment very fast. I am now entirely free from Catarrh—thanks to "No. 26," and cannot let an opportunity pass to recommend it to all because it cured me, and I give it all the credit."

Miss Mamie Travers.

The above prescription is not a "Cure-All" or so-called patent medicine. Dr. Morrisey prescribed it for 44 years, and it cured thousands after other doctors failed.

BACK TO THE LAND

Boy Scouts May Qualify as Agricultural Experts

A new "back to the land" movement for Boy Scouts has come into being quite suddenly, with a full measure of financial support, at Wadhurst, a village tucked away picturesquely in the East Sussex uplands. It is a colony, conceived on republican lines, for Boy Scout farmers.

Sir Robert Baden-Powell, the Chief Scout, fresh from his travels in the Netherlands, has been emphasising the growing scarcity of British farm hands, and the difficulties of food production at home; and as England possesses the finest conditions of soil and climate, he is anxious to get the boys back to the land and to train them to fill good positions as agricultural experts at home and in the colonies.

An old city merchant has placed at the disposal of Sir Baden-Powell a mansion with farm buildings and a hundred acres of first-class farming land. Here a farm school will open in a week or two with about forty or fifty pupils of fifteen years of age.

It is intended that the Boy Scouts, while being taught the duties of citizenship on the Baden-Powell principles and receiving the benefits of a modern curriculum, shall be taught a variety of agricultural and kindred subjects. A boy will be taught how to milk a cow, to shoe and ride a horse, to bake bread, to grow fruit, to keep bees, and such handicrafts as carpentry, building, leather work, and the rudiments of engineering. It is the promoters' idea to establish a colony which will be split up into about twenty-four "patrols," or groups, of eight boys, each group being in charge of a leader.

The main object, of course, is to keep the boys on the land. Five acres and a farm are to be allotted to each patrol, and with the best of advice given by an expert staff the various farms will be run for their own profit.

The chief novelty of the Boy Scout colony is the proposal to run it on the same republican principles as obtain in similar educational colonies in the United States. The civic duties of the young community are to be entrusted to the boys themselves, who will choose their own "mayor and corporation" from their ranks. "Municipal elections" will take place periodically, and meetings and other functions are to be arranged.

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Completely Cured Our Little Boy of Fits."

A family can suffer no greater affliction than to have a child subject to fits or epilepsy. Many a father or mother would give their all to restore such a child to health.

"I am heartily glad to tell you of our little boy who was completely cured of fits. He commenced having them at 10 years of age and had them for four years. I tried three doctors and one specialist but all of them said he could not be cured, but Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine and Dr. Miles' Nerve and Liver Pills made a complete cure. He is now hale, hearty and gay. It has been three years since he had the last spell. I shall give Dr. Miles' medicines praise wherever I go. You are at liberty to use this letter as you see fit and anyone writing to me I will gladly answer if they enclose stamp for reply."

TRIED EVERYTHING WITHOUT RELIEF

SARNIA, ONT., Feb. 5th, 1910.

"I have been a sufferer for the past 25 years with Constipation, Indigestion and Catarrh of the Stomach. I tried many remedies and many doctors but derived no benefit whatever.

Finally, I read an advertisement of 'Fruit-a-tives'. I decided to give 'Fruit-a-tives' a trial and found they did exactly what was claimed for them.

I have now taken 'Fruit-a-tives' for some months and find that they are the only remedy that does me good.

I have recommended 'Fruit-a-tives' to a great many of my friends and I cannot praise these fruit tablets too highly"

PAUL J. JONES

"Fruit-a-tives" is the only natural cure for Constipation and Stomach Trouble, because it is the only medicine in the world that is made of fruit juices and valuable tonics. Hundreds of people have been cured, as if by a miracle, by taking "Fruit-a-tives", the famous fruit medicine.

ESCAPES BEAR HUG

Harold Lozo, of Star City, Sask., Avoids Fatal Hug by Jumping into a Creek

Harold Lozo, a lad of thirteen, living with his uncles, the Fleming brothers, near Star City, Saskatchewan, was attacked by a bear. He had been sent on an errand to a neighbor's, was returning, and had just reached a bridge over a creek which crosses the farm. Hearing something behind him the lad turned in time to see a huge black bear at his very heels. Harold drew his knife and had it half open when the bear rose on its hind legs and grabbed for him, knocking the knife out of his hand. The boy immediately dropped into the creek, and being a swimmer, dived under the bridge, bravely fooling the bear and thus saving his life.

Apparently the bear had been lying in a bluff near the trail, and seeing the boy pass, had followed him, catching him at the bridge. Bruin gave two or three growls of disappointment and finally walked away. Chase was immediately given but no bear could be found.

The berries being scarce this year, bears are getting bold and hungry. Harold's overalls and shirt were torn by the claws of the animal, otherwise he is none the worse for his adventure.

OYSTER SHELL SCALES

While looking over several young orchards in the southern districts of Hastings, Mr. O. D. McIntosh, Stirling, says he finds a great many dead and dying trees. Many of them are badly affected with oyster shell scales and the egg masses of the apple tent are very abundant, and unless something is done before next summer the trees will no doubt suffer severely. The green apple aphis is a serious pest this summer. The growth of young wood this year, in most cases, is excessive, and it will be well for the trees if they are headed back some for next year. Early spring is probably the best time to do the pruning of young trees. It is while trees are young that they get their shape to the grower's liking, and those who are buying trees will do well to get two-year-old trees, and then see that they get a good start. The Codling Worm is getting in its work this year in the old orchards, with the result that very many wormy apples may be seen in most of the old orchards. If the only losses were the wormy apples, it would not be so bad, but the extra expense of picking and sorting to get a few good ones very materially affects the price the buyers can afford to pay for apples.

A LONG TRAIN

Pennsylvania Engine Hauled 120 Steel Cars

A monster train of loaded cars of over a mile and a quarter in length was hauled over the middle division of the Pennsylvania road between Altoona and Harrisburg, August 18. The train was made up of 120 steel cars, all of 100,000 pounds capacity. A year ago a model H. B. engine hauled 105 cars over this division, and at that time the feat was regarded throughout the country as remarkable. The same model engine pulled the train on the last big haul, and representatives from a number of engineering journals, together with Freight Superintendent W. C. Copley, accompanied the train. Telephonic communication was established between the engine and caboose of the train, and the engineer was directed by the officials from the rear end of the train. An average speed of more than 20 miles an hour was maintained over the division.

OZONE FOR ALL

Important Inovation for Keeping "Tube" Air in Good Condition

The jaded city man pining for a breath of really fresh air no longer need rush off to the seaside for his ozone. Within a fortnight every station of the Central London Railway will have its own apparatus for mixing electrically produced ozone with the atmosphere at the platform level and in the adjoining "tube," so that its patrons can enjoy the health-giving elements while travelling to and from their offices. Some months ago the Ozonair Company, Ltd., equipped the Bank Station with its patent ozone mixing system of ventilation. The increased freshness and purity of the atmosphere obtained have been so striking that the work of installing similar apparatus throughout the whole system is being rapidly carried out. At the Bank Station 6,000 to 7,000 cubic feet of ozonized air are pumped into the station and its adjoining "tube" every minute from seven in the morning until one o'clock at night. As a result the acrid, dampish odor so noticeable in some of the earlier-built "tube" systems has utterly disappeared.

NEW RANGE FINDER

Will Counteract the Rolling and Pitching of a Battleship

H.M.S. Orion is putting to test a new form of range-finder to be used in the firing of her 13.5 in. guns. This consists of a gyroscopic mounting upon which a range-finder is carried. The object is to counteract the rolling and pitching of the battleship in a rough sea, and enable the range to be found more correctly.

The new range-finder is placed in fire-control stations at the top of tripod masts, from which guns are trained and fired by electrical connections with the barbettes; and it has been highly successful when tested on shore. During the gun trials conditions will be extremely severe, on account of the intense vibration to which the apex of the tripod masts will be subjected.

WATCHING EX-KING MANUEL

The Young Royalist Does Not Appear to be Conceived with State

The doings of young ex-King Manuel are watched very closely, and his slightest movements are attributed to the gravest cause. When Manuel unexpectedly returned to London after travelling all night from Scotland every London paper reported that he was on the point of returning to his native country to place himself at the head of his loyal followers in a bold attempt to win back his crown. As a matter of fact, Manuel's night journey had no connection whatever with the monarchist rising, he simply wanted to keep an appointment with a certain exceedingly beautiful young lady whose company he finds absolutely necessary to his happiness for the time being, and he spent all next day in a motor car with his beloved, while the papers had him presiding over an important council of war at his house in Richmond, the gates of which were carefully guarded against reporters.

BRIDEGROOM AT 81

The bridegroom at a Leeds wedding, Mr. Henry Foster, was 81 and his bride a few years younger.

Mr. Foster had been three times married previously. He wore grey trousers and a sort of slouch hat, and was apparently beaming with happiness. The bride wore a white silk dress and a black hat. There were many showers of confetti.

TO SHORTEN TIME IN TAKING CENSUS

Mr. Rowland P. Falkner, in London, Compares American and European Methods.

HIS TRAVELS ABROAD

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

MR. ROWLAND P. FALKNER, Assistant Director of the United States Census and the legal adviser of the Liberian government, has completed an extensive tour in England and on the Continent, during which he made a close study of the various methods adopted in taking the census by the leading European nations.

Mr. Falkner was present at the meeting of the International Institute of Statistics held at The Hague in September, and later he went on to Berlin, Dresden, Munich, Vienna and Paris, and concluded his investigations in London, where he was visited by your correspondent, to whom he gave his impressions of the differences in the systems in vogue in Europe and in the United States.

"What the United States Census Department is most interested in," he said, "is whether it is practicable to shorten the time required to get the returns in from the field and, in the second place, to ascertain a feasible method of getting out very much quicker the returns of at least some of the main facts of the population. Some of the countries I have visited are successful in getting out quite a complete statement in about two or three months. The figures are, of course, preliminary, like our own, but the variation from the official results is very small indeed.

"The best illustration I found was in the kingdom of Bavaria, where the population of the whole State is about six millions. The population of each province and the principal cities was announced ten days after the returns were called for. That, of course, the whole thing depends upon the degree of attention paid to that sort of thing. It is something like our election returns. The official returns are given some weeks after the election, but the enterprising newspapers have them the next day.

"I, however, think we shall learn something from my tour. I think I can safely say that the difference between our method of enumeration and theirs is not so great as it seems to be. In other words, the European centres say that they do it in a single day, but it is usually three to ten days before they are officially collected. In the United States we give the enumerators fifteen days in the cities and thirty days in the country districts, but there is one rather important difference. In Europe they take the people who are present on the given day, whereas we take the people who are resident on the day.

"The European method is, I admit, a good deal easier. The work is simple and greatly facilitates the issue of the returns. Also, it is less liable to produce duplications, but it is by no means certain that it does not produce rather more omissions. There are certain countries that take both the present and the resident population. France is an instance in point, and it is always found that the resident population is larger than the population actually physically present when the census is taken. That is caused by the absence from the country of persons who really belong to it, such as seamen.

"The difference in France is about two hundred thousand, and they tell me there the true figures are somewhere about midway. The fundamental difference really is that the European countries control, in a greater or less degree, local officials whom they can direct to take the work in hand at any time, while we have to construct the whole machinery every time. We must appoint our local supervisors each time, and while they are capable men they have not got the minute knowledge of the work that the European local officials have of the districts in which they are situated."

Mr. Falkner added that his tour had been extremely interesting and he had had the most courteous treatment everywhere. He would report upon the result of his investigations, and possibly it might lead to some little reform in the United States' system.

TEST OF JAPANESE DESTROYER FAILS

[Special Despatch.]
Tokio, Saturday.

The tests of the destroyer Yamakaze, constructed at Nagasaki, have proved unsatisfactory. At the speed trials the destroyer developed only twenty-seven knots an hour, whereas she required speed was thirty-three knots. In a further test, with the engines driven to their extreme capacity, she managed to work up 31.5 knots, but before the run was over some parts of the machinery gave way and five stokers were seriously injured. During a third test some of the bow plates buckled and extensive repairs will be necessary before the destroyer will again be seaworthy. The result of this poor showing is claimed to be that the Admiralty ordered too many changes while the vessel was in course of construction.

JAPAN AND RUSSIA MAY DRAW CLOSER

[Special Despatch.]
Danish, Saturday.

Political exigencies may draw Japan and Russia closer, but there are few indications as yet of an economic rapprochement. On the contrary, Russian suspicion of Japanese intentions has led to the failure of a plan for the exhibition of Russian products at a museum attached to the Russian Consulate here.

London Is Almost Itself Again, with the Club Fires Going and the Shops All Busy

Tide of Americans, However, Is Setting Homeward—Many Women Prominent in Society Worlds of America and England Are Preparing for the Winter Round of Activity.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE "high season" in Scotland is almost at an end, and soon those who went there for the early autumn will be back in London. The Court has returned for a short time, and, by the same token, London is almost itself again. There are fires in the club rooms, new clothes in the shops, snow on the Highlands, new plays in the theatres, new turns at the halls; while the amount of society marrying and giving in marriage is filling up even Mayfair.

The tide of Americans is now setting homeward. Mrs. William Leeds, after a long summer spent in Europe, soon will be taking her departure for home. Mr. and Mrs. Perry Belmont are still here, and do not intend returning to America till November, when they go to their home in Washington for the winter.

The Duchess of Marlborough means to spend part of the winter on the for the benefit of the health of her younger son, Lord Ivor Spencer-Churchill, but some time in the spring she may possibly go to America on a visit to her mother, Mrs. O. H. P. Belmont. The new country house she has taken in Sussex is not yet ready for occupation. Crowhurst Place is a fine old manor house, which the Duchess has taken on a long lease from Mr. George Crawley. The estate lies in one of the prettiest parts of Sussex, and the house is one of the oldest in the county, dating back, it is said, to Norman times.

The Countess of Ancaster, who when she married the present Earl, when he was help to the title, was Miss Eloise Breese, of New York, has been very busy during the last few months superintending the improvements and alterations at Grimsthorpe Castle, near Bourne. Although the old place was kept up perfectly in every other way, it lacked such modern conveniences as electric lighting and a sufficiency of bathrooms, which nowadays are considered indispensable, especially when the chatelaine is an American. Grimsthorpe will now, it is said, be one of the most comfortable as well as one of the most interesting places in England, and Lord and Lady Ancaster will entertain a succession of shooting parties there when they return from Glenartney, the Perthshire shooting lodge they have occupied during the last month or two.

The Earl of Craven, who also has an American Countess, has just had the honor of being appointed to the captaincy of the Yeomen of the Guard, a position which in recent years has been held by the Duke of Manchester, Earl Waldegrave and other well known members of the Upper House. They, too, will be back in London very soon, for London, socially speaking, is awakening, and it is everywhere prophesied that 1911 will end in a blaze of festivities which will form a fitting conclusion to a year marked by unprecedented State rejoicings and a record summer.

Even the Durbar, which will necessitate the absence from England of the King and Queen and many notable personages, will not, it is stated, have any great adverse influence on the season.

"For one thing," said Mr. Kroell, manager of the Ritz Hotel, "there will still be such a large number of prominent persons in London that there will be all kinds of social functions going on, and then there will be so many entertainments and hospitalities in London before the Durbar guests go that the season's total will not be in any way affected by that ceremony. One thing is noticeable among all the functions that are being arranged. There will be no freak dinners this year. That sort of thing appears to have been laughed out of court."

One sign of the revival of the London season is the demand for singers and entertainers for private at-homes and concerts, and among the lighter amusements of the season skating will undoubtedly take a leading place. Prince's Hall's new floor has been flooded, and the members, who include the Duchess of Bedford, Lord Lytton and many others prominent in society, assembled for the first time on October 21.

The Olympia Skating Club, in the redecorated Holland Park Rink, will be one of the greatest social playgrounds of London.

Among the five hundred members who will be seen there on Sunday afternoons will be the Grand Duke Michael Michaelovitch and Countess Torby, whose daughter, the Countess Vera, is an expert skater; Lord Rocksavage, whose "figures" are renowned; the Princes Alexander and Maurice of Battenberg, two of the keenest regular visitors, and many other prominent persons, including the Marquis of Cholmondeley, the Earl and Countess of Portalington, the Earl and Countess of Lonsdale, Viscountess Crichton, Lord and Lady Coke, Lord and Lady Vivian, Lord and Lady Churston, Lord and Lady Hugh Grosvenor, Lady Lanesborough and Lady Clementine Waring, who is devoted to the pastime.

CRIPPLE SINCE TWO, PREACHES AT 95

The Rev. Robert Brandon, Minister, Tailor, Poet and Author; and His Amazing Life.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE REV. ROBERT BRANDON, Baptist minister, tailor, poet and author, who has just passed his ninety-fifth birthday, is the oldest officiating minister in London. He preaches on an average only once a month, but in rain or sunshine he never fails each Sunday to make his way in a Bath chair to the place he has ministered at in Chelsea for sixty-four years.

And yet this wonderful man, whose record has been one of amazing activity and energy, has been a cripple since he was two years old, when one of his legs became paralyzed. He practically educated himself, paying for his tuition out of his earnings as a tailor, till he passed the necessary examinations to make him a minister.

He was the Robert Brandon who created a sensation some forty years ago by his denunciation of the notorious Cremorne Gardens, in an impassioned poem called "The Trial of John Fox, or the Horrors of Cremorne," which resulted in a libel action against him, which he won, and ended in the abolition of the gardens.

"You of to-day," said Mr. Brandon, in discussing his fight, "can have no conception of what sort of plague spot that den of infamy was. Under the guise of gayety, it was a hotbed of immorality, drunkenness and abominations of all kinds. At all hours of the night there were fast people trooping from the West End to the dancing floors and supper pavilions, and hardly an evening passed without some brawl. In underground vaults practices went on that cannot be described. I knew of one promising young man who, after two nights of depravity at Cremorne, went and drowned himself."

PORCELAIN WALLS ARE NOW IN SIGHT

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

WALLS of porcelain at a comparatively cheap cost have been made possible by an English pottery expert, Mr. W. H. Turner, who has been working out his patent for many years, and now has succeeded. The material is simply glazed slabs of pure porcelain, the material commonly known as "china," so translucent that light can be seen through its half inch of thickness. The slabs are made in single pieces of any size up to that of the largest sheets of plate glass, and "are so strong that an elephant could stand on one without breaking it."

It is said to offer a means of imperishable decoration which "in color, grace and brightness rivals the painted wall decorations of Pompeii," for there can be printed on the slab in its "biscuit" or porous stage of manufacture designs or pictures with such gradations of coloring that any masterpiece can be faithfully copied.

To line the walls of a room with this everlasting covering costs no more than ordinary panelling, and architects believe that these plates will solve the problem of housing in the tropics, since a house built with walls, floor and roof of these plates will resist damp, heat, disease and white ants.

A factory is to be built on the bank of the Thames for turning out the new porcelain walls and panels.

CURE FOR LEPROSY FOUND IN POISON OF GLOBE FISH

ODORLESS POWDER BASIS OF TOXIN

Osaka Higher Medical School Says Marvellous Results Have Been Obtained.

[Special Despatch.]
Tokio, Saturday.

IF newspaper reports may be credited, a Japanese scientist has discovered a new and effective treatment for leprosy, the basis of which is the application of "tetrod toxin," a substance extracted from the poisonous elements of the globe fish, known in Japan as fugu. The scientist referred to is Dr. Tahara, president of the Tokio Hygienic Laboratory.

Dr. Tahara's special studies in this direction date from twenty years ago, after his return from Europe. He devoted himself more particularly to the investigation of the poison obtained in the globe fish. After much labor he succeeded in extracting the poison element from the fish, and from this prepared a pure white, tasteless and odorless powder, soluble in water, which he named tetrod toxin. Tests showed that four milligrams of powder constituted a fatal dose in the case of rabbits, and it was estimated that 200 milligrams would put a man to death. This discovery was made public seventeen years ago, but Dr. Tahara continued his studies, and in 1909 published a further report.

Dr. Tahara represented Japan at the Brussels Hygienic Conference last year and on that occasion submitted a report on his discovery of the toxin which attracted a good deal of attention in the scientific world. A German chemical manufacturing company subjected the toxin to a series of tests, whence it was concluded that it was too poisonous to be employed for medical purposes. Little more was heard about the toxin until recently, when it was applied to the treatment of leprosy by Messrs. Yoshikawa and Yamazaki, young medical students of the Osaka Higher Medical School, with, it is claimed, brilliant results.

It appears that a few months previously a young leper patient entered the Osaka hospital where these two young students were on duty, and asked to be treated with the globe fish poison, which, he said, he had heard was efficacious in the cure of this disease. He was fully aware of the danger involved, but was willing to run the risk, and, as a matter of fact, found himself greatly relieved by the treatment.

The young students took careful note of the case and resolved to pursue their inquiries with a view to the systematic application of the tetrod toxin to the cure of leprosy.

A quantity of the medicine was prepared in conformity with Dr. Tahara's report, and after this had been successfully tested on animals the two young men began to treat human patients, under the guidance of Dr. Sakurane. In one instance the toxin was administered to eight patients suffering from various forms of nervous leprosy. The quantity applied was 0.01 gramme, which was injected subcutaneously in five to eleven portions. So effective was this treatment that after five injections a patient who had been suffering intense pain for seven months experienced instant relief and was able to sleep at night, and in other cases marked improvement in the symptoms was recorded. The toxin was further applied to patients suffering from nervous ailments, and again with satisfactory results.

It is as yet too soon to say that the toxin will completely cure leprosy, but it is at least certain that it can be employed on human beings without fatal effect and as an auxiliary agent. Investigations are being continued with official co-operation. Mr. Kobayashi, director of the Hygienic Bureau of the Home Office, has lented to the Tokio and other leper asylums instructions to conduct experiments in the new treatment, and small quantities of the toxin have been distributed for the purpose. The results of these experiments will be published from time to time.

AMERICAN'S FIGHT WITH AN ELEPHANT

Mr. Carl Akeley, in London, Tells of Thrilling Adventure with a Maddened Beast.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

MR. Carl Akeley, an American naturalist and explorer, who is making a brief halt in London before returning to America after two years in Africa "after elephants," on behalf of the American Museum of Natural History, New York, very nearly lost his life in his quest of specimens.

It is indeed surprising that he is now alive to tell the tale of how a wild elephant attacked him and knocked him down, attempted to gore him, and finally left him for dead.

"I set out with a few native boys to discover, if possible, the altitude to which elephants go," says Mr. Akeley. "We went to the top of Mount Kenya, about 17,000 feet, found a herd and followed it quietly for two days. They led us round the mountain till we lost sight of them in a bamboo forest. Suddenly, without warning, we heard something coming on us. Before I could seize a gun a great bull elephant dashed through the bamboos straight at me and struck me with its trunk.

"I was falling face downward, but luckily, as I fell, I had sufficient presence of mind to twist my body in the air and grab the lowering tusks in my hands. I went down flat on my back, but I managed to do the one thing needful to prevent the animal goring me—I forced my body between its tusks.

"I remember seeing the little angry eyes and hearing him making a noise between a hiss and a grunt as his tusks ground into the earth and his head came upon my chest, but that is all I do remember.

"Four and a half hours afterward, so I was told, I regained consciousness. The elephant had left me for dead; so had my boys, for it is against their religion to touch a dead body. But I heard them chattering a little distance away and shouted to them. Very astonished they came to me and sent off runners for help. I was almost done for, but not quite, and they rigged up a stretcher for me and carried me back to camp."

LITERARY WOMEN TO HAVE A NEW CLUB

The Halcyon Will Be Opened Soon and Is Expected To Be All Its Name Indicates.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE latest club for literary women will open its doors in a few days under the title of the "Halcyon," a name chosen, it is said, to indicate that it will be a calm, peaceful retreat, which all women's clubs in London, so the rumor runs, have not been. The Halcyon Club House, handsome and brand new, stands in Cork street, behind Burlington House, in Piccadilly, where a few months ago stood the noted dining house for bachelors, the Blue Posts.

Over the way is the Ladies' Army and Navy Club, and not many doors away in the same street is the Imperial Rifle Club, an imposedly housed club for both men and women. But the street where are the greatest number of women's clubs is Dover street, in which are situated the Albemarle, the Austral, the Empress, the Ladies' Athenaeum, the Ladies' Imperial and the Sesame Club. So far the male club members still retain the exclusive possession of Pall Mall and St. James street, but there is one notable intruder in his domain of Piccadilly, the Lyceum Club.

Rivers Swollen by Incessant Rain Rise to Unprecedented Heights, Bursting Dams, Destroying Villages and Crops and Spreading Devastation Through Wide Area—High Winds Whip Up Gigantic Waves Which Frail Habitations Cannot Withstand.

[Special Despatch.]
Shanghai, Saturday.

The water has not yet subsided. It is gradually receding, but the drainage of the interior will be a long process. From two to ten feet of water still covers hundreds of square miles. Refugees are now beginning to make their way toward the larger cities and river ports. At Wuhu alone there are estimated to be more than thirty thousand. The officials have tried to induce them to return to their various districts, but they will not trust the officials when they promise aid.

The Magistrate attempted to move the refugees back by beating them, but they simply shifted on from one camp to another, carrying their mat coverings and belongings with them. Cattle which could not be bought at $4u per head before the flood are now offered at $2.

DISEASE IS RAMPANT

Hunger and disease are rampant in the camps. In a hollow between two camps over twenty corpses were counted. Some were naked, others covered with rags or matting, and dogs and pigs were at large devouring the flesh.

The Chinese of the cities have shown a desire to give assistance, but they are hopeless when it comes to organizing. The greed of the leaders and the inability to systematize effort is deplorable and confusing. Some bread was taken around and thrown into the mud for the refugees to scramble for. The strong got armfuls—the weak went without. Several people were crushed to death in the scramble.

Competent authorities state that the Chinese themselves could not cope with the situation even if millions of dollars were placed at their disposal. Under foreign control dykes could be built in this district alone by next April, which would save a territory capable of raising $100,000,000 worth of rice and protect from flood ten large cities, seventy-three towns or large villages and hundreds of hamlets.

The Chinese themselves will never be able to handle this work. When the Marquis Li was alive he gave $300,000 to build dykes here, but the major portion of the money was squandered by the overseers. Recently the Governor of the province sent an emissary with $1,000 to help relieve the present distress.

A number of underlings from one of the yamens were recently despatched to give assistance in repairing a dyke. They found a dry temple more to their liking and stayed there gambling and sleeping, late returning to report upon the excellence of their work. And so the unsupervised effort goes on.

Up and down river reports similar to the above are coming to hand. By the spreading of the Tunting Lake alone more than one hundred thousand have been made homeless. Of 16 dyked-in departments 13 have been flooded out and the crops destroyed.

The distress along the Han, the Yuen and Yangtse rivers will take millions to relieve.

Dr. Paul Wakefield, an American missionary of Wuhu, has just returned from a tour of the Wu Wei Chow, Chao Hsien and Yuen Tsao districts, where he has been studying the famine conditions, and he gives some graphic and impressive details of the terrible state of the people and the country.

After leaving Wuhu and going north of the Yangtse, he says, the whole country to the foothills of the ridge of mountains running parallel to the river on the north is flooded, forming one vast lake. The location of the dykes can sometimes be traced by the tops of the trees appearing above the water. Occasionally the tops of dykes or small hills will appear above the flood, and wherever these are they are covered with pitiable huts of the people, or more often with the coffins of the ancestors.

This is exclusively a rice district, but absolutely all the rice seen on the whole trip was a little patch possibly 100 feet square growing on the top of a hill which had been levelled off. On the sides of the mountains some plantations of vegetables were observed.

FARMS ARE DESTROYED.

Now and then a farmhouse roof was seen. Usually that is all that is left of a once prosperous farm. Often the farmers have built platforms in the tree tops by the sides of their submerged homes, and are living upon these and under the open sky. They seem to prefer to remain by their homes as long as they have anything to eat rather than to go into strange places among strange people.

The villages and cities along the way have suffered as much as the open country. All are flooded at least to the door tops. The inhabitants are living under the roofs or on the second floors, providing they have such palaces.

At Chao-Hsien there is like destruction outside the city walls. The city inside the wall is protected and is built round the base of a rather steep hill, so only the main street and the streets running from gate to gate are flooded. In vent Christian Mission are flooded, and the city the chapel and school of the Advthe rented chapel outside the south gate has been destroyed.

THE JIJI'S REASONS FOR THE SHYNESS

[Special Despatch.]
Tokio, Saturday.

The Jiji, referring to the growing disinclination of the American Far Eastern squadron to visit Yokohama, mentions the following as among the principal reasons for this tendency:—

Formerly Americans thought that the climate of the Philippines was unhealthy, but now that they know this is not the case they no longer deem it necessary to come to Japan to recuperate.

It is true that there is an American naval hospital at Yokohama, but the one in Mindanao is better.

The American Far Eastern squadron has been greatly reduced in size, the flagship Saratoga being no more than 8,000 tons.

The fleet is supplied by American transports which lay in stocks at free ports like Hong Kong and Kiaochow.

WHY JOHN SMITH DID NOT JOIN

An Analysis of the Broken Promise That He Would Go Into a Certain Scheme

Six men worked six hours to get John Smith to go into a scheme with them.

"All right," he said at last, "I'll come in with you. I'll send you a cheque in the morning."

A fine upstanding man was John Smith, with an eye like an eagle and a jaw like iron, and when he said that he would join the other six he hit the table such a blow that it rattled the inkwells.

But when the six congregated together the next morning to enjoy John Smith's cheque they found instead a letter from him stating that after further reflection he had decided not to go into the scheme after all.

Whereupon the six communed together and sought for whys and wherefores.

Said the first, the youngest, and the most impassioned:

"We didn't appeal enough to his enthusiasm. Hang it all, that's the thing—enthusiasm. We confined ourselves too much to facts and figures. The multiplication table's all right, but it never set the world on fire. Hereafter we must put a little more excitement into the game. Carry them off their feet, sweep them along with us—that's the thing to do."

"We ought to have made it clearer that he couldn't lose. A man can go into business every hour of the day. That's easy. But what he is looking for is a proposition where he can't lose. Make him think it's an opportunity instead of a risk. People aren't taking risks, but they are grasping opportunities."

Said the third, a cynic:

"The trouble is this: We didn't show him plainly enough he was going to make something out of nothing. That's the only thing that hits them. We all have the same streak in us. We are trying to do the same thing ourselves. We put the thing forward to him as a legitimate business proposition. Well, that isn't good enough. We've got to look sly and crafty, and tell him how we can get money for nothing. Then we've got to tap our noses and wink and say, 'Want to come in and get some of it?' That's the only thing they'll fall for."

Said the fourth, a facetious member: "The whole thing was pitched in too solemn a key. We went at him too earnestly. We kept him under a tension all the time, and as soon as he got away the tension broke and the whole thing was off. After this we must get up a laugh once in a while to relieve the strain. Tell 'em a few jokes, tell 'em a few stories, make 'em think we're all a lot of good fellows enjoying ourselves. No more funereal stuff for us, or we'll lose them all, just the same as we lost Smith. You mark my words."

Said the fifth, the optimist:

"Perhaps it's just as well that Smith didn't come in. He's such a big, domineering sort of man that he might have given us a lot of trouble. Still, for future guidance, I think we dwelt too much upon the dark side of things. We thought we were covering all possible contingencies, but, as a matter of fact, we were only suggesting unpleasant thoughts to his mind. We told how we could beat our competitors. Instead of reassuring him this only raised the fact that we would meet with competition. We told him how we could handle the shop-worn stuff. Instead of encouraging him, this only suggested to his mind the fact that there would be shop-worn stuff. And so on. All the same, I must say that I thought we had him sure."

Said the sixth, a man of years and wisdom:

"No, gentlemen, you're all wrong. We had him all right till he got home. Our trouble is this: We are arguing with the wrong man. We ought to have taken the matter up with MRS. John Smith, that's all."—New York Sun.

WHEN THE BABY CRIES

It Is Trying to Speak, and Parents Should Try to Understand

A vigorous protest against treating the baby "as if he were an unmitigated fool" is entered by Florence Hull Winterburn in the July number of The American Baby. "We assume," she says, "that when the baby cries he needs to be hushed, just as if the noise he makes were a sort of automatic creaking from loosened screws. He is taken up, and jerked up and down or rocked to distract his attention, and fairly bullied into silence. It really seems as if we might give baby credit for a little sense; his note of trouble may mean something after all."

The baby's cries, Mrs. Winterburn asserts, are the baby's language, and we ought to take some pains to learn what it means. "A lusty, vigorous cry," she asserts, "indicates temper and wilfulness," and is never heard until the baby has learned to be angry, either through seeing signs of ill-temper in others or through being unnecessarily thwarted in his natural impulses. Suffering has its characteristic notes, and there is the sharp cry of pain, varying from the full, loud cry of colic to the terrible, sharp, sudden shriek indicating brain trouble. Catching, breathless, cries, accompanied with a flushed face and hurried breathing, indicate some trouble of the lungs. Whimpering and fretfulness suggest intestinal disorders."

ASSAULT CASES AMUSE COURT

The Man Who Went Back After a Black Eye and Various Other Facial Adornments

It was less the fight in a grocer's shop than the quaint way in which the assistant told how his master belaboured him which created uproarious merriment at the Guildhall, London.

Thomas Walter Capp, the assistant, was complainant, and his employer, Wm. Mortimer Phelan, defendant. A quarrel took place in the shop over monetary matters, and Capp said he called his employer "a liar." He said it emphatically and with an adjective. Thereupon Phelan told him, "If you say that again I will give you that."

"What was 'that'?" asked the clerk.

"Well, first a black eye," the shop assistant replied, amid laughter. "Then he gave me a blow behind the ear, and knocked me down. He asked me to get up, and knocked me down again. (Laughter.) Then he asked me to get up again, and once more knocked me down. (Laughter.) I went away then. (Laughter.) Some time afterwards I went back——"

"What for?" asked the solicitor.

"Only to show him what he had done," Capp answered, to the great amusement of the court. "Not to get any more," he explained. Thereupon there was a peal of laughter. But Phelan told him if he did not go away he really would give him some more.

Curious, by this time, to know the end of the incident, the magistrate asked, "What did he do?"

Complainant: Well, he gave me some more. (Much laughter.) This time he loosened some of my teeth. I couldn't open my eye for three days, and could eat nothing for four. (Laughter.)

Alderman Sir David Burnett, the magistrate: I must say that if anybody called me the name complainant admits using to defendant, I——"

Mr. Peet, complainant's solicitor: Would strike?

The Magistrate: Yes, I think I should.

Mr Peet: Then it's no use going any further.

The Magistrate: But I should legally be in the wrong. No words would justify an assault.

Mr. Peet: I will go on with the case, then.

The defendant contended that all he did was to turn Capp out of the shop.

Another witness said that complainant, after the first bout, returned to the scene, remarking, "I've had one eye closed up and I want the other done, too. I don't know whether that'll come off this time." (Laughter.)

Sir David Burnett dismissed the summons.

THE BABY ESKIMO

Always Healthy—His Mother Licks Him in Lieu of Washing

What do we know of the childhood of the Eskimo in his natural state? He is certainly not born with the proverbial silver spoon in his mouth. Silver and gold are practically unknown quantities in Eskimo land. Riches—as civilisation understands riches—have no attraction for the little man. The height of his ambition probably is to have plenty of seal meat to eat and sufficient seal skins to make his clothes. His Eskimo superstition says it makes babies cross to wash them, so the youngster has to get accustomed to dirt and make the best of it. I once came across an Eskimo child several weeks old that had never been washed; the only cleansing it had ever undergone was the occasional lick from its mother's tongue, and I have reason to believe that was by no means an isolated case. In this instance I succeeded by stealth in getting the baby washed. Wishing to employ the mother for a short time, I persuaded her to give her baby into the care of a Christian Eskimo woman, and, having accomplished that, the remainder was an easy matter.

The wife hunted up some baby's clothing, and she and the Christian Eskimo together undertook the task of spring-cleaning the poor little bairn. When the mother returned she was delighted to see her child looking so nice, and, far from being offended, she was profuse with her thanks. I never heard that the baby was cross or that it cried more after that much-needed tubbing.

Some one will possibly exclaim: "But how can a baby possibly thrive in so much dirt and filth?" Yet they do thrive, and it is surprising what chubby, fat-faced babies one sees among the heathen Eskimo, in spite of the dirt. The baby's clothing is often very scanty; in fact, one ocasionally sees a baby being carried in its mother's hood with only a cotton shirt on, despite the fact that the thermometer registers 20 degrees below zero. The mother's hood is the baby's cradle. Being made of seal or deer skin, it is warm and wind-proof; the infant also has the benefit of the heat of the mother's body, and is out of harm's way. If it were laid in a basket cradle in the tent it would be very much in the way, and would always be in danger of falling a prey to the wolfish Eskimo dogs that prowl around the door by day and night, ever ready to pick up a dainty morsel.—Wide World Magazine.

REAL ECONOMY

On Lord Dufferin's estate, near Belfast, there once stood a historic ruin, a castle which had been a stronghold of the O'Neils. One day Lord Dufferin visited it with his steward, Dan Mulligan, and drew a line with his stick round it, telling Mulligan that he was to build a protecting wall on that line. And then he went to India, feeling secure as to the preservation of the great historic building.

When he returned to Ireland he hastened to visit the castle. It was gone. He rubbed his eyes and looked again. Yes, gone it certainly was, leaving not a trace behind it. He sent for Dan and inquired:

"Where's the castle?"

"The castle, my lord? That old thing? Sure, I pulled it down to build the wall wid."

FIGHT ON A PEAK

A Clergyman's Experience in the Lake District of England

While holidaying in the Lake District, England, the Rev. H. F. Lloyd, had a most exciting experience. Mr. Lloyd went on a climbing excursion alone among the mountains that flank the Troutgeck valley, and when nearing the summit of Ill Bell, which is some 2,746 feet above sea level, he was startled to see a large bird hovering about him in a rather threatening manner. He watched it, trying to evade its movements the while, and, thinking it was a hawk of the larger variety, continued his climb. But as he proceeded this strange visitor became more and more aggressive, and began to swoop down upon him, making a direct attack. It struck at his head and passed just above him. The situation became more alarming when another bird of the same species, apparently the paired mate, joined in the attack, darting from behind the rocky crags in the immediate neighborhood.

Luckily Mr. Lloyd had a stick which he carried to assist him in his climb, and with this he set about to keep the two birds at bay, striking out to protect himself from their combined attack. As the encounter assumed a perilous phase the reverend gentleman beat a speedy retreat, leaving the feathered combatants masters of the battle-ground. Mr. Lloyd afterwards discovered that his assailants were a couple of great bustards that have evidently taken up quarters in the neighborhood. The great bustard, it may be mentioned, is the largest game bird in Europe, and is not a denizen of the Lake District. Mr. Lloyd, on relating his exciting adventure, was told that several visitors had recently had similar experiences, one gentleman a few days before coming from his climb almost in a state of panic, and requesting that a party should be organized to try to shoot the birds, which have naturally become something of a terror to the district. It is recalled that last year two persons were attacked on different occasions while climbing the same mountain, it being then thought that the bird was an eagle that had strayed from its accustomed haunts.

"ROSEBERY SMITH"

The Close of a Romantic Career on the Turf

By the death of Mr. James Smith at Upper Tooting a romantic career in sport and business is recalled. He was familiarly known as "Rosebery Smith." It was in 1876 that he accomplished the feat that has been associated with his name ever since, for in that year he won the Cesarewitch and the Cambridgeshire with his horse Rosebery—a feat that no horse had previously achieved. In connection with his nickname "Rosebery," one episode, worthy of a place in the more thoughtful melodrama, may be recounted. During the autumn prior to the horse's great victories, a prominent London sportsman, getting wind of Rosebery's carefully concealed merits, sent his brother down to the stable to spy out the land. The advent in the neighborhood of a mysterious stranger quickly became known, and to rid the stable of this unwelcome visitor the trainer hit on an ingenious plan. It was customary to send a boy on a hack to the village for letters every day, so the trainer, knowing that the "tout" would find it out, mounted the lad on Rosebery. Immediately the "tout" found out the nature of Rosebery's employment he returned to London convinced that his brother had got on the wrong scent.

NO WEDDING BELLS

Bride Alters Her Mind One Hour Before the Ceremony

An hour before John Tobin, a coal porter, Paddington, should have led Alice Anderton to the altar to make her his wife, he received a message from her that she had changed her mind, and did not intend to get married. That night Tobin met Miss Anderton in the street and struck her several times on the head and body. The sequel was Tobin was charged with the assault. Mr. Luke, the magistrate said that the girl had a perfect right to withdraw even at the eleventh hour. She was not compelled to marry the prisoner if she did not wish to do so; but a bridegroom so disappointed was subject to a revulsion of feeling. Allowance would be made for that, and he accordingly bound over the defendant.

Pauper's Hallucination

At Cambuslang, a mining town in Lanarkshire, a curious case of a pauper's hallucination was reported to the parish council. The pauper, who has been in receipt of parochial relief for many years, has refused to accept the aliment voted to him. He has become possessed with the belief that a Lanarkshire magnate died and left him a fortune amounting to several thousand pounds, and that if he accepts parochial relief he will forfeit every penny of his "inheritance." All efforts to make the man change his mind have proved useless. The eccentric, who is of a good age, is well known locally, and the case is exciting great interest.

Peerless Peninsular

A CAST IRON RANGE WITH MODERN OVEN AND EQUIPMENT

A wealthy mustard manufacturer once said that he made his profit not out of what people ate, but what they left on their plates.

The coal dealer might say about the same thing.

It's not the coal you use that buys his six-cylinder car, but the coal that goes up the chimney.

You might as well save some of that coal.

Building ranges to cook well and to save coal has kept us thinking and working over in Preston for upwards of 50 years. Every year improvements in range construction have been made. The flues have been widened here; a wall made thicker there; weight reduced in one spot and added to another. But every change has made the oven heat with less fuel and the construction of the range strong and durable.

Nickel ornaments, special features or size do not affect the internal construction or honest materials and workmanship that go into the "Peninsular." So that when buying one, a housewife may feel free to consult her own tastes as regards finish and appearance. If the range is "Peninsular" she will know that it will give her good bakings for the least amount of coal.

The PEERLESS is a modern cast-iron range—it has a quick oven—an oven that heats evenly on every side, top and bottom—a square oven big enough to cook four pies at once; and it has a drop-oven door, which is not usual on a cast-iron range.

The PEERLESS Peninsular may be had with a steel warming closet and hot water reservoir and with a low closet under the oven for pots, pans and irons.

The PEERLESS Peninsular is a perfect beauty and has many a convenience not found on other ranges.

Take the top of the Peerless Peninsular.

It is made in three separate sections which slide along or lift out whenever you want to clean the flues.

In most ranges the oven is either "on" or "off." That is, it is getting full heat or none at all. The Peerless Peninsular oven is regulated by means of a sliding damper so as to get just as much heat as you need. This is another way you save fuel.

Get "The Cost"

"THE COST of a Range" tells more about these Peninsular Ranges—not a list of pictures and prices, but a book showing that the after-cost is the big cost and how the "Peninsular" cuts it down.

COOL CURING ROOMS

From Farm and Dairy.

"This year, above all others, should show our farmers the value of cool milk and cool curing rooms," said Mr. R. W. Ward, dairy instructor for Peterboro Co., Ont., when in conversation with an editor of Farm and Dairy recently. "I have been in the dairy business for 41 years, and I do not remember a season where the weather was more unfavorable for the making of fine cheese than has been the one just past. Much of the milk was delivered to the factories in poor condition, and when it was made into cheese there were no proper facilities for keeping the cheese in most of the factories.

"A season such as the one just past strikes the Peterboro district harder than most cheese sections. We ship only after the cheese have been made two weeks, and there is often a month's cheese in the curing room. In some Ontario sections the cheese is shipped almost immediately.

ORDINARY ROOMS NOT EFFICIENT

"For the most part we have excellent curing rooms in the county, although only three have ice chambers. An ordinary curing room well insulated will keep cheese in hot weather if the nights are cool. It does not matter, however, how good the room is, if it gets hot and stays hot night and day for weeks at a time as it did this summer. For that matter I do not remember a summer when there has not been a short time when we have had 24 hours of heat in the day and bad conditions in our ordinary curing rooms."

"Could the curing rooms in the county be made over into cool curing rooms without great expense?" we asked.

"All that a great many of the curing rooms need is an ice chamber added," was the reply. "The loss this year on damaged cheese in the average factory would be one-half the cost of a curing room, to say nothing about the saving in shrinkage. And most of the cuts were for over-heated cheese. Had it not been for the favorable condition of the market—strong demand and high prices—the cuts would have been doubled and trebled. The fact that there was no cuts made on cheese in cool curing rooms should give the makers in factories not so equipped food for thought.

"Cooler milk sent in from the farms and cool rooms for the holding of the cheese are the two prime essentials to the greatest progress of the dairy industry in Canada," concluded Mr. Ward.

5 BOXES CURED PSORIASIS

Mrs. Nettie Massey, Consecon, Ont., writes: "Three doctors described my trouble as psoriasis, and one said I could never be cured. The disease spread all over me, even on my face and head, and the itching and burning was hard to bear. I used eight boxes of Dr. Chase's Ointment and am entirely cured—not a sore to be seen. I can hardly praise this Ointment enough."

PORCUPINE GOLD DOME EXTENSION

Underground development on both of these Porcupine properties has reached such an advanced stage, which the market has as yet not responded to, that, judging from the heavy buying by the insiders in these securities yesterday, we are convinced the proper time to secure a stock ownership in either or both of these mines is now.

So large has become the ore reserves at the Vipond above the 140-foot level in the main workings, the directors have decided to erect at once a mill with a capacity to crush 100 tons of ore daily.

The treasury is sufficiently strengthened to defray future developments and install the mill, and already the foundation work has started. We are officially informed that at a depth of 138 feet in the main shaft on the Vipond the vein measures 16 feet and the south wall of the vein thus far has not been reached. The ore at this point shows an average assay of over $20 to the ton.

The wonderful showing on the Dome Mines, now known as the "Golden Sidewalk," has been traced to within a few feet of the Dome Extension line, and, according to Mr. Georg. Monteith, there is no longer any doubt but what this sensational vein will be found strong and rich on Dome Extension.

Diamond drills are now at work to prove this vein at depth, and from all reliable and authoritative sources the general opinion is that it will be found equally as rich on Dome Extension as on the Dome Mine itself.

It requires no further facts or arguments to emphasize the great speculative opportunity which Vipond and Dome Extension offer.

Now is the right time to buy.

We have prepared for free distribution a detailed statement regarding the latest developments on these two properties. Mailed on application.

REFORM IN DRESS

SHERBROOKE, QUE., OCT. 25—Into the calm of the business-like and effective methods with which the Dominion Women's Christian Temperance Union at its 17th convention, in session here, are treating of ways and means to gain prohibitory liquor laws and to ring about more effectual legislation, morally and socially, the question of dress reform was brought to the notice of the delegates by Rev. C. Ellery Read, of the Convention church, on his introduction to that body. "Monstrosities in headgear," was the term used by the reverend gentlemen when he spoke of that which Sunday after Sunday prevented him from seeing the members of his congregation, and being seen by them. "Many of the men use this as an excuse to stay away from divine service," said Mr. Read to the women thus appealing to this the highest body of the largest organization of women in Canada, that in their strength and with their sense of refinement they resent the tyranny imposed upon them by the coterie of designers of the male sex.

Furthermore, the delegates will, during the coming two years' activities in their various unions, endeavour to influence the W. C. T. U. members towards reform in dress, yesterday adopting a resolution on the purity question, which embodied this idea, as follows:

"Resolved, that we set ourselves against all that is debasing or demoralizing in dress, reading or entertainment, maintaining a high standard in home life, in social intercourse or in society at large."

The canteen question was also considered, an interesting discussion ensuing. Mrs. J. Greggie, of Quebec, in presenting her record of advances in legislation and petition work, stated that the canteen had been abolished form the military camps throughout Ontario. To this exception was taken by Mrs. A. M. Bascon of Toronto, who had a personal letter from a medical man at Petawawa, which gave contradictions. This condition of affairs under the militia department was much regretted, but the ladies expressed no discouragement, but will go out from convention with the object in view of entire abolition of the canteen from military camps throughout Canada.

Mrs. William Newton, Salford, Ont., reported satisfactorily on the newest department, that of temperance work among the young people's societies of the churches.

It was with deepest gratitude that the report of Mrs. Asa Gordon as editor of the Dominion W. C. T. U. official organ, the Bulletin, was received. This paper, since last biennial, has increased its circulation from 1,651 to 4,000 subscribers, and this without any membership constituency for behind it. The paper is now twice its original size, and is free of debt, which was not the condition when Mrs. Gordon took charge. There is also a balance in this treasury. Plans were yesterday launched for enlarging the paper.

At a most impressive memorial service, the name of the late Mrs. C. Seybold, of Ottawa, was included in the list of deceased workers in the women's temperance cause. Mrs. Seybold was for many years most active in the Ottawa Central Union.

SELLING POULTRY

From Farm and Dairy.

Mrs. J. H. Simcoe, Hastings Co., Ont.

On a recent Saturday while in town doing some fall shopping I went over to the market to see how things were going. I noticed a tremendous lot of chickens, and they were not making very rapid sale. I did not envy the lot of the women folks who had them there, and it recalled the fact of how I used to do the same thing, and take my chickens to market like most people do, without stopping to count the cost. They do not seem to realise that it is a lot of extra work to pluck and dress chickens, and since most people do not like to pick the chickens dry, they scald them, and then they never sell so well on the market, since they have not the fine appearance of dry plucked fowl. For a number of years I have been selling my poultry in the fall by live weight. One does not get as much as could be obtained were the chickens taken on to a favorable market and sold dressed, but week in and week out I believe I make as much money from my poultry selling it alive, and then I do not have that extra work of killing and dressing the poultry or that tiresome job of selling it on the market.

There must be a big loss on most of the poultry sold at the local markets, in that so much of it is so poor in appearance, it would be far better to feed the chickens better and then sell them live weight and save ourselves this extra work.

Perhaps if a person has a fancy trade and a lot of fine chickens to sell to that trade, then it is likely it is the most profitable course to pursue, and cater to that trade, but I am speaking of conditions as we know them, generally throughout the country, and I would say to all of my farmer sisters at least to find out whether or not this extra work pays, and count all the cost of dressing and marketing in the old way as against selling the birds alive, now that there is a market calling for the live birds.

UNPROFITABLE COWS

From Farm and Dairy.

The greatest source of loss in the dairy industry is the feeding of unprofitable cows. For example: A certain cheese factory in one year paid one of its patrons $877 for the product of eight cows, while it gave another patron $9 less, or $868, for the milk from 22 cows. The latter dairyman boarded nearly three times as many cows as the other to get less gross return.

In another locality some herd owners secured an average of 390 pounds of butter fat per cow, while others at the same place and in the same time averaged only 80 pounds per cow. An income of $100 per cow, as in the better herd, gives some margin for profit, but how can $26 a head result in anything but loss?

Probably some animals in the poor herds mentioned were profitable producers, but it is safe to say that the owners would have been better off at the end of the year if, before the year began, they had carefully studied their cows and sold one-half of them. It is probable also that in the better herds some weeding out might have been done to advantage, for great individual differences are found even in tested herds bred for years along one line of productivity.

Until the feeder knows his cows through the scales and the Babcock test, he can never claim to be doing a dairy "business," he is merely doing dairy "guess work," and may be feeding into Polly all the profits he should make from Bess and Spot.—New York Experiment Station Bulletin No. 322.

GRAY HAIR MAKES YOU LOOK OLD

A Simple Remedy Brings Back the Natural Color—Dandruff Quickly Removed.

How often one hears the expression, "She is gray and beginning to look old." It is true that gray hair usually denotes age and is always associated with age. You never hear one referred to as having gray hair and looking young.

The hair is generally the index of age. If your hair is gray, you can't blame your friends for referring to you as looking old. You can't retain a youthful appearance if you allow your hair to grow gray. Many persons of middle age jeopardize their future simply by allowing the gray hair to become manifest. If your hair has become faded or gray, try Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy, a preparation which a chemist by the name of Wyeth derised a few years ago. It is simple, inexpensive and practical, and will banish the gray hairs in a few days. It is also guaranteed to remove dandruff and promote the growth of the hair.

It is a pleasant dressing for the hair, and after using it a few days itching and dryness of the scalp entirely disappear.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

PULLING A LOAD

From Farm and Dairy.

It is a common belief that a load pulls easier if put well forward on the wagon. But it doesn't on the ordinary wagon where the hind wheels are larger than the front ones.

If the wheels were equal in size the load should be equally distributed. If the trucks are so low down that the horses get an upward pull on the load then it would be well to put the load well forward.

The load should be proportioned also to the surface contact of the wheels. A large wheel sinks less than a small one, therefore the load should be heaviest on the hind wheels if they are wider.

Distribute the weight so that no one side is carrying the greater share, lest it make the draft excessive for the tonnage carried.—Ex.

PALACE FOR ALFONSO

The People of Santander Have Gone to Enormous Expense

A new palace on the Isle of Magdalena, at Santander, built at an enormous cost, subscriptions having been made by rich and poor alike, will shortly be occupied by King Alfonso and Queen Victoria, to whom the people of Santander have given the palace as a gift. The furnishings, the cost of which has been defrayed by the city, are of a sumptuous character. The new royal residence is approached by a bridge from the mainland, and has only one entrance. The King and Queen are greatly charmed with the palace and have thanked the people of Santander for their generosity. Henceforth the royal family will spend the summer months at the new palace and at the Miramor Palace at San Sebastian. Upon leaving Madrid the Court will first go to Santander.

NA-DRU-CO Tasteless Cod Liver Oil Compound

There is no question as to the very high value of Cod Liver Oil, properly prepared and made digestible, as a "builder-up" for convalescents or those who are run-down.

Na-Dru-Co Tasteless Compound contains the valuable properties of the Cod Liver Oil without its disagreeable flavor. In fact, this preparation is decidedly pleasant to the taste. With Extract of Malt, Extract of Wild Cherry, and Hypophosphites of Lime, Soda, Potassium, Manganese and Iron added, it makes a combination that puts an edge on the appetite—aids digestion—invigorates the nerves—relieves and helps to cure affections of the throat and lungs—and generally builds up strength and restores health.

For puny, delicate children there is probably no better "builder-up" than Na-Dru-Co Tasteless Cod Liver Oil Compound. 102

ABOUT CREAM

From Farm and Dairy.

The Rimbey creamery, at which I am buttermaker, started to grade cream Sept. 1st, 1909, and continued grading until the end of that season to give the buttermaker and patrons an opportunity to become familiar with the work and its merits, and to locate any flaws there might be in the system before starting to pay on a quality basis. During the month of May, 1910, we graded, but the patrons were paid a flat rate to get any new patrons who had come in accustomed to the system before paying on a quality basis. Since then the creamery has paid entirely on quality.

The grading system has proved a success in raising the quality of the butter output, as the following comparison of the seasons 1909 and 1910 grading of butter at Calgary will demonstrate:

Summer Season	Extra Grade	1st Grade	2nd Grade
1909	—	55.3%	47.7%
1910 .....48.31%		33.93%	16.07%

The 16.07 per cent. of 2nd grade was caused mostly through one of the largest patrons of the creamery using a water separator instead of using a centrifugal separator. This entailed a loss in premiums to himself of $58 during the season.

TWO GRADES OF CREAM

The creameries are using two grades for the cream: 1st, clean and fresh in flavor, sweet or sour, uniform consistency; 2nd, slightly stale or old, or bitter in flavor, uniform consistency. Any cream that will not grade up to No. 2 is rejected. Mr. Marker, our dairy commissioner, also proposed a grade of "extras" to be perfectly sweet, clean and fresh in flavor and uniform in consistency. The payment is based on second grade cream, with a premium of two cents a pound on butter fat for first grade cream. If the creameries accept Mr. Marker's proposal of grading for "extras," the payment of a three cents premium a pound of butter fat for all "extras" will be made.

Rimbey is situated in the Blindman Valley. It is 35 miles off the Canadian Pacific Railway, Iacombe being the shipping point. The oldest settler in the district has been here only 10 or 11 years, and the average of settlement won't exceed four or five years. The cream haulers have long routes, some of the patrons living 25 miles and over from the creamery. The cream is oftentimes on the road all day, not getting into the creamery before nine or ten o'clock at night. In shipping, the butter is on the road 30 hours in all kinds of weather. Last season I have known it to be on the road from early Monday morning till Friday noon before it was loaded on the car.

If the Alberta creameries with their drawbacks can make a success of cream grading, there certainly is no excuse for Ontario creameries not making a success of the system, with dense settlement, short hauls, good improvements, good roads, and No. 1 shipping facilities.

The ideal creamery is the cooperative one. It is ideal because it returns all the profits from the manufacture of dairy products to the producer. The private creamery owner is receiving a good profit in the manufacture of the cream from farms. He gets his returns from the overrun of the butterfat delivered, and it means about four or five cents for each pound of fat delivered. This, of course, does not mean a net profit, but after all expenses are deducted it means a good profitable return.

Well-operated cooperative creameries oftentimes pay their patrons two or three cents more per pound of fat than do the private creameries. This is because that profit that has been going into the pocket of the individual owner is now turned back to the farmer.

A better grade of butter can be manufactured at the cooperative creamery than at the private plant. Creameries as a whole are making much poorer grade of product than in former years, not because the maker is less proficient, but because of the poor quality of cream received from the farm. Where co-operation is established and each patron realizes that his returns depend upon the quality of butter manufactured at the creamery he can be taught the necessity for better care of his cream. A private creamery, because of sharp competition, is forced to take cream of poor quality, but the cooperative creamery with each individual a part owner can be much more critical of the products taken in, and as a consequence better butter is made and the top market price received.—W. B. Liverance, in the Michigan Dairy Farmer.

COOL CURING ROOM

From Farm and Dairy, Sept. 14:

J. J. Hogan, Peterboro Co., Ont.

A cool curing room in a cheese factory is an important part of the machinery in connection with making cheese or butter. I made cheese for four years with the ordinary curing room. I used about one-half of the ice then that I do now trying to cool the room and didn't have anything like the results in the quality of the cheese that I get now. I had ice in two large pans, one at each side of the room; also several bags full of ice hung from the ceiling here and there through the curing room. The results, however, were not to be compared with those obtained from cool curing either in saving in shrinkage or in a better quality of cheese.

It cost us to install our cool curing plant four hundred and sixty dollars. Our make of cheese at that time was about 80 tons a season. It costs us about $20 to fill our ice chamber. It might cost more at other factories, as we are only two miles from the river and do most of the cutting ourselves. We figure on $2 a day for man and team, with their board. I believe we paid for our plant in shrinkage alone in two seasons.

GRAY IN HOT WEATHER

In the four months of warm weather we consider that our cheese are 25 per cent better in quality than previously. In the fall and spring the weather is very changeable, and under ordinary conditions curing rooms are just as changeable; cheese, therefore, are not properly cured and are not worth as much money as cheese cured in a cool curing room, where the temperature does not vary more than five or six degrees from spring to fall. Anyone who knows anything about cheese, especially anyone who has had practical experience with both ordinary and cool curing rooms, will bear me out in this.

THE MANUFACTURERS' SIDE

Then consider, as manufacturers, our side of cool curing. It is a comfort to know that if our cheese are properly made and placed in a cool curing room, where we have the temperature under control, the cheese are going to go off our hands in good shape. With an ordinary curing room we may make our cheese as well as they can be made, but if put in an ordinary room and a week or 10 days' hot weather should come along, as is often the case, what are the cheese like? The grease is often running down on the floor. The cheese are opened up, and frequently off flavor. It is "up to" either the cheese maker, the proprietor of the factory, or the patrons to pay the cuts on the cheese. A few of these cuts would go a long way towards installing a cool curing plant. I consider that the cost of our plant was money well spent.

INDIAN MEAL AS A FOOD

From Farm and Dairy.

There has been quite a return to nourishing Indian meal as a food. Probably the wild mania for breakfast food has brought this about.

The yellow Indian meal is the kind used. It is made into puddings of all kinds and served for luncheon or dinner.

One of the best of these baked puddings is as follows: Take one pint of yellow Indian meal and stir into a quart of milk, which should be boiling hot. Melt slowly one-quarter pound of butter and mix it with a pint of molasses.

Stir this gradually into the meal, flavoring the mixture with nutmeg and the grated rind of a lemon.

Then let it stand until it is partly cool, when six eggs are stirred in which have already been well beaten. The batter is poured into a buttered pudding dish and baked for two hours.

There is also another recipe which calls for two cups of milk, two of cornmeal, two eggs, two tablespoons of sugar, and two tablespoons of beef suet rubbed fine.

To this is added a half teaspoon each of sugar and ground cinnamon. It is best to put a pinch of soda in the milk and heat it until it is boiling, then stir in the meal, salt, and suet. This is set aside to cool.

When cold the spice, sugar, and whipped eggs are beaten in and stirred vigorously. This is boiled in a brown bread mould for four hours.

One must be sure to leave room in the mould for the pudding to swell. It is served with hard sauce.

The pudding with fruit in it is supposed to be more palatable than the other. It is made in the same manner and with the same ingredients as the boiled pudding, but raisins and currants are added.

A cupful of seeded raisins and cleaned currants well dredged with flour is stirred into the pudding just before it is put in the mould.

HOW TO RETAIN YOUR WIFE'S AFFECTIONS

From Farm and Dairy.

Here are a few rules for the use of the husband who would learn how to keep his wife's affection:

Never do anything which will make you appear mean in her eyes.

Let her tell you her grievances, and tell her your worries; you may be able to help each other, and you can surely comfort each other.

Try to be as thoughtful of your wife's comfort as you were when you first tried to win her heart; she needs your thoughtfulness more now.

Don't forget all the little courtesies you used to show her and which made you appear so well in her eyes; if there were aught to endear her to you before marriage, she should be a thousand times dearer to you now.

Help her with the children sometimes at night, when they are fretful and you have no hired help. Supposing you do put in the plea that you are tired and that you have been working all day, hasn't she been working all day, too, and isn't she tired?

"Imported" does not mean "better". It simply means "higher prices" because of the excessive duty.

ENGLAND'S LABOR WAR

To David Lloyd-George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, is due in large measure the settlement of the railroad strike which caused much bloodshed and suffering in Great Britain. The strike for a time amounted almost to a revolution. The transportation systems of the United Kingdom were paralyzed and cities and communities were reduced almost to famine conditions. Serious collisions between the populace and police occurred and several persons were killed in Liverpool, while in the rioting in one Welsh city a dozen persons lost their lives.

The troubles originated with a strike among the dock laborers of London, which spread rapidly to Liverpool and other ports. When these troubles were adjusted or were in a fair way for adjustment the employes on the railroads struck for higher wages and for recognition of their union — the Amalgamated Society of Railway Servants. A total of 800,000 persons walked out and for several days Great Britain was almost in a condition as serious as though a foreign fleet was blockading its ports. It sea trade was interfered with; its transportation system was demoralised and food stuffs could not be distributed. As a consequence prices soared and the poor, as usual, were the chief sufferers.

The offer of Premier Asquith to refer the whole railroad situation to a royal commission was refused by the strikers, while it was accepted by the railway managers; and the situation became so serious that troops, supplied with ball cartridges, were mobilized at London, Liverpool, Manchester and other great centres.

When others abandoned hope of a peaceful settlement Lloyd-George only worked the harder and in the end he won. The railway officials consented to recognize the union's representatives and the men agreed to submit their grievances to a joint committee, meantime returning to work, without prejudice, to their places.

The efforts on behalf of peace of Lloyd-George, have been recognized by King George, who wrote to the Chancellor, complimenting him very warmly "for averting a most disastrous calamity." The dock strike at Liverpool has also been compromised and peace again reigns in industrial England. The strike, however, has shown to Great Britain her utter dependence upon transportation for her daily food. Two weeks' complete tie-up would bring Great Britain to the verge of famine.

World's Cleverest Brain Surgeon.

This distinction belongs to Sir Victor Horsley, who was recently adopted as prospective Liberal and Radical candidate for North Islington. Some twenty years ago Sir Victor astounded the medical world by removing a tumor from the brain of a patient, an operation which had hitherto been regarded as impossible, and since then he has performed more difficult operations in regard to the brain than probably any other man living. Another of Sir Victor's favorite studies is the subject of alcohol and its effect on the human body. Some years back he pointed out the little less than extraordinary way in which milk was taking the place of alcohol in the treatment of disease at London hospitals. In 1862, Sir Victor said, seven of the great London hospitals spent $15,000 on milk and over $40,000 on alcohol, while now the amount spent on milk reaches the sum which was recently expended on liquor.

England's "Gospel Oaks."

At Polstead, Suffolk, there still exists a "gospel oak" which is over 2,000 years old. The oak has a girth of thirty-six feet and although the "gospel oaks" generally stood on the boundaries of parishes, this tree stands in the centre of the village. "Gospel oaks" at one time studded the country, taking their names from the fact that they served as stations from which the Christian missionaries preached to the Angles and Saxons 1,300 years ago. Very few of the trees now remain, but in some cases it is possible to tell vaguely where they stood from the names given to places such as Gospel Oak.—Pall Mall Gazette.

Two Noble Brewers.

"Lord Iveagh and Lord Burton," said an English diplomat, "are not so popular with the present King as they were with his father.

"These two men are the heads of two huge breweries. Lord Iveagh is credited with the joke:

"'Oh, yes; you'll find my name in the beerage.'

"And Lord Burton once said to a very aristocratic old duchess:

"'You, duchess, are of the caste of Vere de Vere, while I belong to the Beer de Beer family.'"

RASH SO BAD BABY CAME NEAR DYING

Head Broke Out. Spread to Arms, Legs and Entire Body. Itched So He Would Scratch Until Blood Ran. One Box of Cuticura Ointment and Nearly One Cake of Cuticura Soap Cured Him. Has Had No Return.

"When my boy was about three months old, his head broke out with a rash which was very itchy and ran a watery fluid. We tried everything we could but he got worse all the time, till it spread to his arms, legs and then to his entire body. He got so bad that he came near dying. The rash would itch so that he would scratch till the blood ran, and a thin yellowish stuff would be all over his pillow in the morning. I had to put mittens on his hands to prevent him tearing his skin. He was so weak and ran down that he took fainting spells as if he were dying. He was almost a skeleton and his little hands were thin like claws.

"He was bad about eight months when we tried Cuticura Remedies. I had not laid him down in his cradle in the daytime for a long while. I washed him with Cuticura Soap and put on one application of Cuticura Ointment and he was so soothed that he could sleep. You don't know how glad I was he felt better. It took one box of Cuticura Ointment and pretty near one cake of Cuticura Soap to cure him. I think our boy would have died but for the Cuticura Remedies and I shall always remain a firm friend of them. He was cured more than twenty years ago, and there has been no return of the trouble. I shall be glad to have you publish this true statement of his cure." (Signed) Mrs. M. C. Maitland, Jasper, Ontario, May 27, 1910.

For more than a generation mothers have found a speedy, agreeable and economical treatment for their skin-tortured little ones in Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Although they are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a liberal sample of each may be obtained free, from the Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., sole props., 53 Columbus Ave., Boston, U.S.A.

FIRST SCOTTISH EARL.

The Earl of Crawford, who has completed his sixty-fourth year, is the premier Earl of Scotland, and one of the most interesting members of the peerage.

He is a keen scientist and bibliophile, an experienced traveler, and an enthusiastic yachtsman, and he is the possessor of one of the finest stamp collections in this country. He is also a great authority on astronomy, having been for two years president of the Astronomical Society, and some years ago he took part in an expedition to Spain to observe a solar eclipse.

As Lord Balcarres he sat in the House of Commons as member for Wigan, resigning the seat in 1880 on the death of his father, the twenty-fifth earl.

The earldom of Crawford was conferred so far back as 1398 upon David Lindsay, the ninth baron, who fought a passage-of-arms with Lord Welles in the presence of Richard II. and Queen Anne of Bohemia.

One of the present earl's ancestors was the Crusader Sir William Bradshaugh, of Haigh, whose wife, when she learned that her husband had been killed in Palestine, married again. But some time afterwards Sir William returned alive and well, and when he discovered what had happened, he slew his rival, and made the lady do penance by walking barefoot, once a week, from Haigh to Haigh Cross, wet or fine.

Lord Crawford is very rich, deriving his wealth from Lancashire minerals as well as from his broad Scottish acres. He has a beautiful place in Fifeshire.

"Well, now," she exclaimed; "what a fine building that is! It ain't the gasworks, is it?"

"It is madam," he replied; "the gasworks of the whole British nation.

Russia's Pet Aversion.

Sir Francis Younghusband, who recently met with a serious motoring accident in Belgium, might be described. He probably knows more about the innermost parts of Asia than any other European living, and Russia has feared him to such an extent that at one time his every movement was watched by their spies and duly reported. Among the stories which Sir Francis tells is one concerning a native who was with him in the British expedition which penetrated into Tibet. Sir Francis was extremely annoyed by the guerilla tactics of the mountaineers, especially by one determined sniper, whose aim was particularly good, and who was responsible for at least one casualty every day.

One afternoon Sir Francis was approached by a native, who had recently joined the expedition, and requested to be allowed to go and stalk the stalker. This was readily granted, and the man went off. A day or two later he returned, bearing the sniper's rifle, and a grin of triumph on his dusty countenance. "Well," asked Sir Francis, "how did you succeed in silencing the man?" "I know his ways, sahib," was the reply. "I kill him easily." "Why, was he a friend of yours?" "No, sahib—only my father," was the illuminating rejoinder.

Commodore R.Y.S.

A leading figure at Cowes each year is the Marquess of Ormonde, Commodore of the Royal Yacht Squadron and Hereditary Chief Butler of Ireland, an office which has been in the family since 1177. The marquess is the owner of a magnificent service of gold plate, one of the heirlooms of the Ormonde family, which was presented to a former butler by Charles the First. The plate is only used on state occasions and is of fabulous worth, being valued at over a million and a quarter sterling. Among other historical relics at the marquess's home, Kilkenny Castle, which is one of the oldest inhabited houses in the three kingdoms, some of the rooms remaining to-day almost exactly as they were in the year 1109, are official robes which have seen service at three coronations. They were worn by Lord Ormonde's grandmother at the coronation of Queen Victoria, and appeared in the official picture of the ceremony.

WANT FORT PRESERVED

EDMONTON CITIZENS PROUD OF HISTORIC STRUCTURE.

Alberta's Legislative Offices Are Crowding Hard on the Hudson Bay Co.'s Old Headquarters—Warden MacAulay of the Penitentiary Tells Some Interesting Stories of How Things Were Done in the '70's.

Historians of Edmonton and Strathcona want to have the old Hudson Bay Co. fort preserved as a relic of the old frontier life. The Provincial Public Works Department of Alberta is encroaching on the site and numerous building are going up around it, and the hoary appearance of the Fort is being desecrated by new buildings which are inharmoniously arising within its encircling wooden walls, says The Montral Standard.

We read in The Edmonton Journal that historians with a love for the past and a real estate affection for the present, suggest that the Government might suitably preserve the old fort. It would be emblematic of the rule of the white man in the past. It would provide a contrast. Close beside it on the slightly higher eminence is the slowly-rising hewn stone pile which will typify the law-making and law-abiding forces of the white man of to-day and to-morrow.

"Save the law-enforcing fort of yesterday," said the historians. "Give us more room," reply the unfeeling wielders of the hammers in the Public Works Department. "Queer times these, to be sure," murmur those who knew the fort as the biggest and grandest structure between Fort Garry and the North Pole.

With a-hammering and a-boarding and a don't-give-a-rap for the past, the Department of Public Works is defacing the writing of the history of the past, as read in the weather-gray close buildings enclosed within the woodwalls of the old Hudson Bay Co's fort.

More room is needed, they say, in which to store nail-kegs or something else to be found recorded "in the hardware lists of the Government's property; so new additions have to be made to the building of the fort."

So the call to arms is issued to the historically-minded citizens of Alberta to save the Fort from desecration.

In connection with this interesting old Fort and the old days in Edmonton, Warden MacAulay, of the Alberta Penitentiary, has some interesting tales. A short time ago he delivered an address in Edmonton, before the Irish-Canadian Association, when he told of the days when Edmonton was a wee small place on the river bank. He said: "Begorra, we had a divil of a time foiting for our rights in those days."

As far back as 1879 Mr. MacAulay came to the Fort. At that time the R.N.W.M.P. were in charge, and through some disagreement with the Hudson Bay Co. they had made Fort Saskatchewan their headquarters. There were no settlers at the Fort during that time—and, in fact, the only ones about were the police themselves—so when Mr. MacAulay arrived on the scene he was told the better place to locate would be at Fort Saskatchewan.

"When I did come out here," said Mr. MacAulay, "I came from Winnipeg and got here by being hauled over the roads by oxen, dogs or any old thing."

He said at one time: "When we went to the store to buy anything we had to take it away in our hands or take some paper to wrap it in. I often used the tail of my coat to wrap a pound of sugar in, and many are the times when people would tear a strip off a blanket to take home some butter."

Those prices are not the prices asked to-day, but they are the ones Mr. MacAulay had to pay when he first came to Western Canada. Everything was sold for dollars. Of course the excessive freight made the price so high, as it had to be carted many miles because there were no railroads.

The newspapers were few; in fact, there was only one, and it was The Bulletin.

"Let me read this advertisement to you," said Mr. MacAulay.

"The ball in Fraser's Hall last night was a howling success. The decorations were of olive branches done up in moss bags."

"I am back in town, and am ready for the sneaking cur that said things behind my back.—Signed, Matthews."

He then told of the school fight, and how the people voted on it. It was a very cold day, and when they saw the fight going against them word was sent down to a hotel. The messenger said: "For God's sake, we are losing." "There were only two overcoats in the hotel," said Mr. MacAulay, "and every time we saw those two coats coming up the street we knew they were votes for us. But we won in a free-for-all fight. Of course, we all carried black eyes after it."

The rank of captain was bestowed on him in those days. It was Captain MacAulay of the vigilance committee. The vigilance committee set out to stop the "claim jumping."

"We had what they called a vigilance depository," said the speaker; "for every time we wanted to move a house put up by one of these men we would deposit it over the bank of the river. One time there was a fellow named 'George,' and he objected to our pushing his house over the bank. Anyway, we went down and ordered him out, and didn't he stay in it until it was about to topple over.

"One time six of us got arrested. I was one and my old friend, Hon. Frank Oliver, was another. We got a preliminary hearing, and were sent up for trial. The first trial was in March; we were to stand the higher court trial in June, so when it came up I was fined forty dollars and the costs of the whole case."

No More Cold Hands.

PERFECTION Smokeless OIL HEATER

A woman often does not notice what a cold day it is so long as she is bustling around the house. But when she sits down to her sewing and mending, she soon feels chilly.

It is then she needs a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater. Its quick, glowing heat warms up a room in next to no time.

That is the beauty of a Perfection Smokeless Oil Heater. It is always ready for use; you can carry it wherever you please; and you light it only when you want it.

The Perfection Oil Heater is smokeless and odorless — a patented automatic device insures that. It is reliable, safe and economical — burns nine hours on one filling. Handsome, too — drums finished either in blue enamel or plain steel, with nickel trimmings.

The Council Vote Against The Commission Covernment

NO PAVING OF STREETS THIS YEAR

Board of Works Discussed Matter at Meeting Last Night—Season is Now Too Far Advanced

A BUSY SESSION

The Board of Works Committee met last night, prior to the Council meeting, and transacted some important business. There were present at the meeting Ald. Metheral, chairman, and Ald. Buller, Graham, Anderson, Brown, and Mayor Morrow.

An application from the Peterborough Light and Power Co., to extend poles on Langton street, was dealt with. Mr. Munro was present and explained the situation. He stated that to follow the old plan of going down past the Isolation Hospital, several of the pine trees near the hospital would have to be cut down, and others trimmed, and in the face of this he thought it would be better to run the line across a farm in that neighbourhood. It was pointed out, however, that this would be a very unwise plan, as in case of an accident to the line, men would have to go and repair it, no matter whether they trampled down the crops or not, so that idea was abandoned. Permission was given, however, for the Company to run their line on Antrim street, to Hilliard, and up Hilliard street.

It was arranged that another order for sheet steel be sent in.

Permission was granted the Bell Telephone Co. to put three more poles on Homewood Ave., and one on Weller street.

It was decided that the Chairman make arrangements with Mr. Cameron to survey the roadway along the water front, from Smith to Harvey street, and report on location, etc.

Tenders for snow ploughs will be advertised for at once. The snow storm Thursday evening evidently set the Board thinking. Ald. Anderson thought that the Board should also make arrangements to have the snow kept off better than it was last winter, and to see that the slush was shovelled off the walks. Ald. Kerneghan was of the same opinion. Street Commissioner Evans said that they did keep it off last year but the Aldermen thought there was room for improvement. No definite action to emphasize this part of the contract was made.

The City Engineer reported that the insurance policy on the city's property, such as the watering carts and the roller and other things, was about run out, and also advised them that the old policy only covered their property while it was in the yard, and not distributed about the city, as the roller and carts nearly always are. The Chairman and the Engineer will look after the matter of fixing a new policy.

Re the street paving, a communication was received from the pavers, asking that the city put the street in shape for paving, but the city objected on the ground that they wanted the pavers to assume all the responsibility. The pavers had been advised of this, and did not, as yet, answer. Ald. Buller thought it was rather late in the season to think of paving now; so did the Chairman. Although no action was taken the Aldermen talked as if they did not intend to go on with the work this fall.

A catch basin will be put in at the corner near Payne's drug store; another at the corner of Hunter and Mark streets will also be installed.

The Street Commissioner, Mr. Evans, brought the matter of sheds before the Board. He stated that there was at present no room for some of the city's property, and advocated the building of more sheds. Ald. Morgan stated that there was room for a shed that would probably hold the remainder of the city's property, at the rear of the Fire Station. No action was taken in the matter.

The City Trust Commissioners wrote that they requested the Council to remove the pig pen on the market and keep the square in a sanitary condition. The matter was referred to the Market Committee.

A communication from the City Trust Commissioners stated that they could not see their way clear to draw from their sinking funds for the purchase of a city hall site. The East City and south park propositions, however, will go through

THE $85,000 BY-LAW FOR NEW SCHOOLS IS PASSED BY COUNCIL

Measure Was Carried Last Night After a Motion That it Should First be Submitted to the People Had Been Defeated---Some Objection to the Proposed Site of New School for the West Ward.

At last night's meeting of the Council, the by-law to borrow the sum of $85,000.00 for school purposes, was read and passed. Before it was passed Ald. Metheral moved, seconded by Ald Graham, that a new by-law be framed and submitted to the people. This motion was lost.

Ald. Bradburn offered some objection to the site for the new West school being outside the city. Dr. Morrison, Chairman of the School Board, explained that they were unable to secure a site large enough inside the city limits. He stated that the boundary line could be extended and this part taken in. However, he stated that as yet the site had not been chosen and the people would be taken into their confidence in the matter. As far as distance is concerned, he stated that the children going to the King Edward and up to the North Ward, had to walk further than children going to the new school would have to. Mr. Hill pointed out that they had taken into consideration the fact that modern equipment would have to be adhered to. They wanted large playgrounds for the boys and girls, and not have them, as are some other schools in the city, where the boys occupy all the grounds, and the girls are forced to go out on the streets.

The by-law passed without further discussion.

CLAIMS $500 FROM CITY ON ACCOUNT OF ACCIDENT

At the meeting of the Council last night, a claim for $500.00 from O'Connell and Gordon, on behalf of Mr. John Scott, for injuries received by him as the result of an accident, for which absence of street light was alleged to have been responsible, was dealt with. On the night of October 21st, it was stated, Mr. Scott was struck by a horse and vehicle, at the corner of Mark and Maria streets, and received injuries which, it is claimed, will detain him from work for some time, and may leave permanent injuries, and as a result he enters this claim for $500.00 and medical expenses. The matter was referred to the Legal Committee.

THOSE PILLARS ARE STILL IN THE CIVIC LIMELIGHT

Mr. G. W. Hatton waited upon the Council last night, on behalf of the Rutherford Bros. He asked that the $300.00 be paid, that was still owing for work done at the Public Library. He stated that everything was done according to agreement, and if the pillars were not straight it was the fault of the architect, as he asked that the pillars be made with a bulge and it is impossible to make pillars perfectly straight in the manner required, with brick, unless the brick is rounded for the purpose. Mayor Morrow stated that the Rutherford Bros., themselves, requested that the $300.00 be withheld until the pillars were fixed. He further stated that he would not like to see a wrong done the Rutherford Bros., as he considered that they did an extra good job, and cheap. The matter was referred to the Property Committee.

GENERAL MASSACRE IS NOW FEARED IN CHINA

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, OCT. 28. — News from China to-day is very contradictory. The Manchu officials in Pekin give it out that the imperial forces very successfully attacked the rebel position in the Hankow district, but other reports vary. For safety, all the leading Manchus are sending their families back to Manchuria, fearing a general massacre in many places where the rebels are securing the upper hand.

LEADER OF REVOLUTIONARIES IN NEW YORK AFTER FUNDS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., OCT. 28.—Dr. Sun Yet Sen, the real leader of the present revolution in China, arrived here this morning after a rush campaign among the Chinese of big United States cities for more funds to carry on the revolution. It is said he has raised a quarter of a million dollars in two weeks. He is a little man, with round shoulders and a very slim moustache, and is not at all attractive, but if the revolutionists win, he will undoubtedly be president of the most populous republic in the world. He had a meeting of his associates early to-day, and it is thought he will leave soon for China to assume the supreme direction and command of the revolutionary forces. "Concessions won't do," he told interviewers. "It must be down with the Manchus and up with the republic."

Examiner Special:

LONDON, ENG., OCT. 28.—The report of naval enquiry into the collision between the liner Olympic and the British cruiser Hawke near Southampton last month, has completely exonerated the officers of the Hawke and assess damage against the White Star Line for half a million, which, in addition to the Olympic's own loss, will mean a million dollars out of the pockets of the White Star Company.

BLACK HAND LETTER

Another black-hand letter has made its debut in the city. This time it was sent to a prominent local merchant. In view of the fact that the recipient of the communication has received information that he thinks will assist him to bring the guilty party within the reach of the long arm of the law, it was deemed prudent to withhold the publication of the contents for a few days. In the meantime a strenuous effort will be made to apprehend the guilty party.

Drank And Smoked More

OTTAWA, OCT. 28.—Figures given out to-day indicate that Canada's consumption of liquor and tobacco was a marked increase during the last year. The spirits, per capita consumption, was 9.59 gallons, as against 8.15 gallons last year. Of beer per capita 5.434 gallons as against 5.226 gallons last year. The total amount of tobacco consumed was nineteen million pounds, against eighteen million pounds last year; cigarettes a total of 585 million, against 451 million, and cigars, 227 million, against 205 million.

FARQUHAR McRAE GIVEN LIFE SENTENCE IN PENITENTIARY

Special to The Examiner.

CORNWALL, OCT. 27—In pronouncing sentence this morning of life imprisonment for Farquhar McRae, convicted of manslaughter, in connection with the death of Wm. Shaw, who was one of Dr. Magee's automobile party, coming to recover his child, Mr. Justice Sutherland said he could not agree that a nominal sentence would fit the crime of a man who deliberately shot another. Said His Lordship, "I have given this question my closest attention all through the night, and I can see nothing else than to sentence you for life at Kingston penitentiary." The aged prisoner took the sentence without flinching, though he had spent a lonely, sleepless night. The crowded courtroom was stunned at the severity of the sentence. Lawyer Pringle put in an eloquent plea for mercy for his client.

SPECIAL CONCERT ON THE PEOPLE'S CHIMES MONDAY

The dedication festival of St. John's Church, which was reopened after restoration on All Saints' Day, 1884, will be kept to-morrow and Sunday week. The church was built in 1834-35, and restored in 1884. At the services to-morrow, sermons will be delivered by one of the most distinguished clergymen in Canada, in the person of Dr. Paterson-Smyth, of Montreal. He is an Irishman and held an important post in Dublin before coming to Canada. Dr. Paterson-Smyth is a well-known lecturer, and a popular author. He will preach at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. The public generally are invited. A short Thanksgiving service will be held on Monday morning in St. John's.

A special programme will be given on the People's Chimes on Thanksgiving Day from 3 to 4 p.m.; the chimers will be Mr. H. J. Devey, Mr. J. Butcher, Cyril Devey. Following is the programme:

Changes on ten bells.
"God Bless the Prince of Wales.
"Home Sweet Home."
"Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms."
Changes on eight bells.
"Blue Bells of Scotland."
"Will You Meet Me at the Fountain."
"Last Rose of Summer."
"Bonnie Banks of Loch Lomond."
"Way Down Upon the Suwanee River".
"Auld Lang Syne."
"O, Canada".
Changes—tenor bell as accompaniment.

Part of the above will be rendered to-night, at 8 p.m., also to-morrow afternoon, from 2.30 to 3 p.m.

Joe:—"She laugh in Gallarie dat taime you save me for keel man who tak her from me."

Charley:—"I saved you, I don't understand, what do you mean, Joe?"

From "The Right of Way," with Mr. Sanford Dodge, which comes to "The Grand," Tuesday, Oct. 31st.

This powerful play was dramatized from Sir Gilbert Parker's wonderful novel by Eugene W. Presbrey, one of the foremost of American playwrights. "The Right of Way" was an instantaneous success from its initial production in New York City to the present time, and it appears to become more popular with the advance of time, owing to the fact that more people are becoming acquainted with the story through the reading of the book. It bids fair, eventually, to rival "Ben Hur" and other works of a like nature. If you have not read the story, now is your time to do so. If you have, you will do well to read it again before seeing the play, but whether you have read it or not, you will be intensely interested in the drama itself, as it will be presented by Mr. Sandford and his excellent company.

MOTION WAS NOT POPULAR

Council Failed to Look With Approval on Proposition to Have Plebiscite on Commission Government

MEASURE WAS LOST

At last night's meeting of the Council, Ald. Edgar's motion that the people be given a chance to express their opinions on a Commission form of Government, instead of that now existing, was lost. His motion, which was seconded by Ald. Buller, was as follows. That on the same day, and at the same time, as that on which the next municipal elections for Aldermen for the city, shall be held, a "plebiscite," or vote, of all the persons entitled to a vote, at said elections for aldermen, shall be taken on the following question: "Are you in favour of the adoption of a Commission form of Government for the city, in place and stead of that now existing?" Ald. Anderson was not in favour of the resolution at all. He thought that municipal governement by commission was far from being perfect; but he was in favour of having a Board of Control as well as a Council.

Aldermen Buller and Edgar supported their resolution on the ground that it was more economic.

The motion was lost, however, only the mover and seconder voting for it.

WINTER SERVICE OF C.P.R.

No better evidence of the increased western traffic of the Canadian Pacific railway is needed than the statement that services, which in former winters have always been dropped, are this year being retained and in some cases added to. Yesterday afternoon a leading Windsor station official pointed out that this year the Canadian Pacific railway intends to run its St. Paul-Seattle through trains all winter. In former years these through services have always been dropped during the winter months, but the traffic on these trains has gradually increased, to such an extent that it has been found necessary to continue the service.

NO PAVING OF STREETS THIS YEAR

Board of Works Discussed Matter at Meeting Last Night—Season is Now Too Far Advanced

A BUSY SESSION

The Board of Works Committee met last night, prior to the Council meeting, and transacted some important business. There were present at the meeting Ald. Metheral, chairman, and Ald. Buller, Graham, Anderson, Brown, and Mayor Morrow.

An application from the Peterborough Light and Power Co., to extend poles on Langton street, was dealt with. Mr. Munro was present and explained the situation. He stated that to follow the old plan of going down past the Isolation Hospital, several of the pine trees near the hospital would have to be cut down, and others trimmed, and in the face of this he thought it would be better to run the line across a farm in that neighbourhood. It was pointed out, however, that this would be a very unwise plan, as in case of an accident to the line, men would have to go and repair it, no matter whether they trampled down the crops or not, so that idea was abandoned. Permission was given, however, for the Company to run their line on Antrim street, to Hilliard, and up Hilliard street.

It was arranged that another order for sheet steel be sent in.

Permission was granted the Bell Telephone Co. to put three more poles on Homewood Ave., and one on Weller street.

It was decided that the Chairman make arrangements with Mr. Cameron to survey the roadway along the water front, from Smith to Harvey street, and report on location, etc.

Tenders for snow ploughs will be advertised for at once. The snow storm Thursday evening evidently set the Board thinking. Ald. Anderson thought that the Board should also make arrangements to have the snow kept off better han it was last winter, and to see that the slush was shovelled off the walks. Ald. Kerneghan was of the same opinion. Street Commissioner Evans said that they did keep it off last year but the Aldermen thought there was room for improvement. No definite action to emphasise this part of the contract was made.

The City Engineer reported that the insurance policy on the city's property, such as the watering carts and the roller and other things, was about run out, and also advised them that the old policy only covered their property while it was in the yard, and not distributed about the city, as the roller and carts nearly always are. The Chairman and the Engineer will look after the matter of fixing a new policy.

Re the street paving, a communication was received from the pavers, asking that the city put the street in shape for paving, but the city objected on the ground that they wanted the pavers to assume all the responsibility. The pavers had been advised of this, and did not, as yet, answer. Ald. Buller thought it was rather late in the season to think of paving now; so did the Chairman. Although no action was taken the Aldermen talked as if they did not intend to go on with the work this fall.

A catch basin will be put in at the corner near Payne's drug store; another at the corner of Hunter and Mark streets will also be installed.

The Street Commissioner, Mr. Evans, brought the matter of sheds before the Board. He stated that there was at present no room for some of the city's property, and advocated the building of more sheds. Ald. Morgan stated that there was room for a shed that would probably hold the remainder of the city's property, at the rear of the Fire Station. No action was taken in the matter.

The City Trust Commissioners wrote that they requested the Council to remove the pig pen on the market and keep the square in a sanitary condition. The matter was referred to the Market Committee.

A communication from the City Trust Commissioners stated that they could not see their way clear to draw from their sinking funds for the purchase of a city hall site. The East City and south park propositions, however, will go through

THE $85,000 BY-LAW FOR NEW SCHOOLS IS PASSED BY COUNCIL

Measure Was Carried Last Night After a Motion That it Should First be Submitted to the People Had Been Defeated---Some Objection to the Proposed Site of New School for the West Ward.

At last night's meeting of the Council, the by-law to borrow the sum of $85,000.00 for school purposes, was read and passed. Before it was passed Ald. Metheral moved, seconded by Ald Graham, that a new by-law be framed and submitted to the people. This motion was lost.

Ald. Bradburn offered some objection to the site for the new West school being outside the city. Dr. Morrison, Chairman of the School Board, explained that they were unable to secure a site large enough inside the city limits. He stated that the boundary line could be extended and this part taken in. However, he stated that as yet the site had not been chosen and the people would be taken into their confidence in the matter. As far as distance is concerned, he stated that the children going to the King Edward and up to the North Ward, had to walk further than children going to the new school would have to. Mr. Hill pointed out that they had taken into consideration the fact that modern equipment would have to be adhered to. They wanted large playgrounds for the boys and girls, and not have them, as are some other schools in the city, where the boys occupy all the grounds, and the girls are forced to go out on the streets.

The by-law passed without further discussion.

CLAIMS $500 FROM CITY ON ACCOUNT OF ACCIDENT

At the meeting of the Council last night, a claim for $500.00 from O'Connell and Gordon, on behalf of Mr. John Scott, for injuries received by him as the result of an accident, for which absence of street light was alleged to have been responsible, was dealt with. On the night of October 21st, it was stated, Mr. Scott was struck by a horse and vehicle, at the corner of Mark and Maria streets, and received injuries which, it is claimed, will detain him from work for some time, and may leave permanent injuries, and as a result he enters this claim for $500.00 and medical expenses. The matter was referred to the Legal Committee.

THOSE PILLARS ARE STILL IN THE CIVIC LIMELIGHT

Mr. G. W. Hatton waited upon the Council last night, on behalf of the Rutherford Bros. He asked that the $300.00 be paid, that was still owing for work done at the Public Library. He stated that everything was done according to agreement, and if the pillars were not straight it was the fault of the architect, as he asked that the pillars be made with a bulge and it is impossible to make pillars perfectly straight in the manner required, with brick, unless the brick is rounded for the purpose. Mayor Morrow stated that the Rutherford Bros., themselves, requested that the $300.00 be withheld until the pillars were fixed. He further stated that he would not like to see a wrong done the Rutherford Bros., as he considered that they did an extra good job, and cheap. The matter was referred to the Property Committee.

GENERAL MASSACRE IS NOW FEARED IN CHINA

Special to The Examiner:

LONDON, OCT. 28. — News from China to-day is very contradictory. The Manchu officials in Pekin give it out that the imperial forces very successfully attacked the rebel position in the Hankow district, but other reports vary. For safety, all the leading Manchus are sending their families back to Manchuria, fearing a general massacre in many places where the rebels are securing the upper hand.

LEADER OF REVOLUTIONARIES IN NEW YORK AFTER FUNDS

special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, N.Y., OCT. 28.—Dr. Sun Yet Sen, the real leader of the present revolution in China, arrived here this morning after a rush campaign among the Chinese of big United States cities for more funds to carry on the revolution. It is said he has raised a quarter of a million dollars in two weeks. He is a little man, with round shoulders and a very slim moustache, and is not at all attractive, but if the revolutionists win, he will undoubtedly be president of the most populous republic in the world. He had a meeting of his associates early to-day, and it is thought he will leave soon for China to assume the supreme direction and command of the revolutionary forces. "Concessions won't do," he told interviewers. "It must be down with the Manchus and up with the republic."

Examiner Special

LONDON, ENG., OCT. 28.—The report of naval enquiry into the collision between the liner Olympic and the British cruiser Hawke near Southampton last month, has completely exonerated the officers of the Hawke and assess damage against the White Star Line for half a million, which, in addition to the Olympic's own loss, will mean a million dollars out of the pockets of the White Star Company.

BLACK HAND LETTER

Another black-hand letter has made its debut in the city. This time it was sent to a prominent local merchant. In view of the fact that the recipient of the communication has received information that he thinks will assist him to bring the guilty party within the reach of the long arm of the law, it was deemed prudent to withhold the publication of the contents for a few days. In the meantime a strenuous effort will be made to apprehend the guilty party.

Drank And Smoked More

OTTAWA, OCT. 28.—Figures given out to-day indicate that Canada's consumption of liquor and tobacco was a marked increase during the last year. The spirits, per capita consumption, was 9.50 gallons, as against 8.15 gallons last year. Of beer per capita 5.434 gallons as against 5.276 gallons last year. The total amount of tobacco consumed was nineteen million pounds, against eighteen million pounds last year; cigarettes a total of 566 million, against 451 million, and cigars, 227 million, against 205 million.

FARQUHAR McRAE GIVEN LIFE SENTENCE IN PENITENTIARY

Special to The Examiner.

CORNWALL, OCT. 27—In pronouncing sentence this morning of life imprisonment for Farquhar McRae, convicted of manslaughter, in connection with the death of Wm. Shaw, who was one of Dr. Magee's automobile party, coming to recover his child, Mr. Justice Sutherland said he could not agree that a nominal sentence would fit the crime of a man who deliberately shot another. Said His Lordship. "I have given this question my closest attention all through the night, and I can see nothing else than to sentence you for life at Kingston penitentiary." The aged prisoner took the sentence without flinching, though he had spent a lonely, sleepless night. The crowded courtroom was stunned at the severity of the sentence. Lawyer Pringle put in an eloquent plea for mercy for his client.

SPECIAL CONCERT ON THE PEOPLE'S CHIMES MONDAY

The dedication festival of St. John's Church, which was reopened after restoration on All Saints' Day, 1884, will be kept to-morrow and Sunday week. The church was built in 1834-35, and restored in 1884. At the services to-morrow, sermons will be delivered by one of the most distinguished clergymen in Canada, in the person of Dr. Paterson-Smyth, of Montreal. He is an Irishman and held an important post in Dublin before coming to Canada. Dr. Paterson-Smyth is a well-known lecturer, and a popular author. He will preach at 11 a.m. and 7 p.m. The public generally are invited. A short Thanksgiving service will be held on Monday morning in St. John's.

A special programme will be given on the People's Chimes on Thanksgiving Day from 3 to 4 p.m.; the chimers will be Mr. R. J. Devey, Mr. J. Butcher, Cyril Devey. Following is the programme:

Changes on ten bells.
"God Bless the Prince of Wales.
"Home ,Sweet Home."
"Believe Me if All Those Endearing Young Charms."

MR. BORDEN AS A "TRUST-BOOSTER."

When the electors of Canada responded to the appeal to defeat reciprocity, and save Canada from the United States trusts, they did not think they were uniting to put themselves under the thumb of the Canadian trusts. The onus of the objection of the good Tories of Toronto against Mr. Borden's Finance Minister, Mr. White, is that he is a representative of the trusts. The people were warned against Mr. Taft, but he is now appearing in the role of a "trust-buster," while our own Mr. Borden is, according to Toronto Tories, coming out strong in the role of a trust-booster.

GIVING A FREE HAND.

The Toronto World has a cartoon representing Mr. Borden sitting alongside a basket of cabinet apples, and exclaiming: "It's hard, when you only got one basket and there's so many big apples." So we are to conclude that the Nationalists are "big apples," or, why didn't Mr. Borden select some good, sound apples if he had so many to hand. The fact is, Mr. Borden surrendered his right of choice. We are now told that "Mr. Borden gave Mr. Monk the entire liberty of choosing the three representatives of Quebec in the Cabinet." That is, instead of curbing and controlling the treasonable ambitions of the Nationalists of Quebec, as his mandate from the British Born, the flag-wavers and the protectors of religion in Ontario, especially commissioned and commanded him to do, he gave the Nationalists free hand; with the result that for the first time in the history of Canada, an element, treasonable to British and Imperial ideals, is recognised, and given the strongest possible recognition in a cabinet in a British dominion.

THINGS TO BE THANKFUL FOR.

His Royal Highness, the Governor-General: That though his name and titles take twenty lines of the Canada Gazette, there is some one at Rideau Hall who can call him Arthur.

The Hon. R. L. Borden: That there is only one Henri Bourassa.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier: That he now has an opportunity to take up his unfinished literary work.

The Liberals of Ontario: That Sir James Whitney's majority cannot be much bigger, anyway.

The Editor of the Toronto Telegram: That Leeds is out of his beat, and it will not be necessary to go down there to oppose "Tom" White.

The Minister of Finance: That it is no longer necessary to display his proficiency as a strap-holder.

The Hon. Sam Hughes: That he will now have a larger market for his contributions to the gaiety of nations.

Old Man Ontario: That he is still permitted to sell hogs instead of giving them away.

All the rest of us: That it has been a delightful autumn, and the coal bin is almost full still.—Globe.

The increase in the expenditure has been greater during seven years of Conservative rut than it was on thirty years under Liberal rule.

NOT BOLDNESS, BUT "BLUFF".

Another day has passed of the "two or three days" in which Sir James Whitney announced two weeks ago, that he would make a statement of his reasons for bringing on a general election, and would fix the date. Sir James is bluffing, as usual. He does not need the time to concoct reasons, or daily over the date. He is serenely deceiving the people and trying to lull his political opponents into inaction. All this time, while Sir James is "considering," the work of party organization and preparation on the part of the Government is going on in an underground way. Sir James claims that he is "honest enough to be bold." He shows this "boldness" when he rushes on a general election in order that he may have the advantage of the "Borden sweep of victory," nor does he show it in withholding the date, so that he may make secret preparations, and take his opponents at a disadvantage. Sir James is, corporeally, rather substantial, not to say, dense, but the people are beginning to see through him.

THANKSGIVING.

The moral significance and value of thanksgiving to order, may reasonably be questioned in the religious abstract; but looked upon in the light of a recognition of divine favours, it can easily be justified. A great deal of our religious sentiment derives its chief value from its being a recognition, a recital of our Creed. A man may live an indifferent, moral, or religious life, and may say his prayers perfunctorily, but this very act is an indication that he owes fealty to a Higher Power, and recognizes the claims of a Higher Power. A man who does this may be morally adrift, but he is not hopelessly derelict. There is better hope that he may reach the haven safely some time than for the man who, in his life and action, does not appear to believe that there is a haven. A day of national thanksgiving may be a formality, but it is a magnificent recognition of the overruling of a beneficent Providence, and it is about the only way that a nation can officially, so to speak, gain recognition of what it owes to Divine Providence. For, out of the millions in Canada, how many use Thanksgiving Day for its ostensible object—to give thanks in a devotional manner? In a few churches there may be sparsely-attended thanksgiving services; and in Peterborough we are showing a good example by holding union thanksgiving services—an exemplification of the only real and effective church union that seems to be practicable, and which, in itself, at once a subject and act of thanksgiving; something that will do more to draw the churches into closer union than any organic bond.

We have much to be thankful for as a nation; thankful that we are living in Canada, a country of magnificent resources and of inconceivable possibilities of noble national development; that we have the best laws, the best administrated, of any country in the world; that we are, as a people, a law-abiding and moral people; that we have peace in our borders, when other lands are drenched in blood. Our condition, compared with other lands, does not, however, justify the publican's attitude altogether. It is well for us that we can thank God that we are not as other nations are; but this very condition gives us cause for introspection. If we examine ourselves we will find that there are many things in which we can improve ourselves, and that, as in the lives of ordinary men, there is no point when a nation can sit down, content with what it has done, but that the call for advance is always appealing, always to be heeded.

SELF-CONDEMNED.

The address of Hon. Adam Beck on tuberculosis on Thursday night, was one of the series of public addresses he is addicted to delivering, for political purposes, in the interests of his party and government. The address served a double purpose; it served to emphasize the terribly destructive nature of the "white plague," and it also served to condemn the evils of the policy of inefficiency and indifference of the Whitney Government in dealing with it. The people of Peterborough and of the country at large find no excuse for commendation of the Government's policy of trifling with so important a question; and Mr. Burnham, in his candid condemnation of the Government policy only gives expression to what has long been felt. He was quite correct in his charges that the Whitney Government has failed to grasp and deal with the subject, as its virulent importance demands. Their attitude towards tuberculosis is similar to their laissez-faire attitude to a great many other questions. In this matter, as in others, there has been no progress since the Whitney Government came into power and responsibility. There has been no advance in confirming and extending the initial policy adopted under the late Government, in regard to tuberculosis. When Hon. Mr. Stratton was Provincial Secretary, he took the first step in extending Government aid in fighting tuberculosis, by putting the Gravenhurst Sanitarium on the list of institutions to be assisted by a grant of provincial funds. Since then, the question has become more acute; continued discussion and investigation have given us new light upon the dangers and actual ravages of tuberculosis, and more strongly emphasized the necessity of governmental action and cooperation. But nothing has been done except the perfunctory administration suggested by Mr. Beck, and so justly ridiculed and condemned by Mr. Burnham. Sir James Whitney, in this matter, adopts his favourite tactics—assumes an air of superior wisdom, and bluffs the matter out—pooh-poohs the contentions of scientists, and says, in effect, that the anxiety and solicitude of those who know, in regard to the prevalence and dangers of tuberculosis are an outcome of hysterical sentiment. Sir James Whitney is wrong in assuming this attitude; and the man who has shown him to be wrong is Hon. Mr. Beck. The more effectively Mr. Beck, in his address on Thursday night, shows the evils of tuberculosis, the more vividly Mr. Beck paints the evils and dangers of tuberculosis and the extent of its ravages, the more he condemns the inaction and indifference of the Whitney Government. The people are beginning to learn that their high and mighty airs and loud claims to honesty and progresiveness, are the cover for a vast deal of governmental neglect of matters that count and of inefficient and perfunctory administration. The people are beginning to show a realization of the fact that the function of a government is not to vain-glorify its members and its party, but to administer its trust to all the interests of all the people.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Why is Sir James Whitney keeping back Dr. Merchant's report on bi-lingual schools?

Legislation is a queer game. The United States passed laws that permitted the establishment of a steel trust; and the law is now being invoked to destroy the fruit of the law.

If the suit of the United States Government to dissolve the Steel Trust doesn't travel a little faster than the trial of the California dynamiters, the Trust will die of old age before legal dissolution is reached.

It would make, says the Port Hope Guide, interesting reading if Mr. Culverwell were to tell all he knows about the underground current of this Hydro-Electric commission history along the lake front. The public would then know why Adam Beck did not serve the East Lake Front and Midland Districts instead of the Seymour Power Company.

Ontario's highways have been paved with silver. Over nineteen millions of dollars in money have been spent on the township highways of this Province, besides over twenty million days of labour. But in most cases, remarks the Globe, you cannot see any results except mud. The City Engineer might compile statistics to show how many hundreds of thousands of dollars have been spent on the streets of Peterborough, and, with the same result—mud.

(Toronto Star)

Mr. Bennett, M. P., of Calgary, is to move, and Mr. Sevigny, M.P., is to second the address in reply to the speech from the throne, when Parliament meets. Mr. Bennett is a Conservative and Mr. Sevigny a Nationalist.

There will be unconcealed satisfaction in Conservative circles over the firm way in which Mr. Borden is forcing the Nationalists to take second place. In this case a Conservative has precedence. It was the same with the Speakership. Dr. Sproule got that post, and the Nationalist, Mr. Blondin had to be content to rail in as deputy. Mr. Borden's resolute attitude must be considered a concession to Toronto opinion, where the Conservative papers have been so resentful of French domination. Having an Ontario majority so large as to render him quite independent of Quebec, the Prime Minister is giving the Nationalists nothing unless they point at it.

Mr. Bennett is known in the West as an eloquent speaker. They say he can talk for hours on any subject, and fill each moment with eloquence. When he used to arise to speak in the Legislature at Edmonton, every telephone got busy, and before he had done—long before—the galleries were crowded with the best people of Strathcona and Edmonton. They do not understand why he is not in the Borden Cabinet. But we gather from the Edmonton News that it is expected that at the conclusion of his first speech in Parliament, Mr. Borden will snatch a portfolio from his nearest colleague and go over and give it to Mr. Bennett. Such is his power of eloquence. Such is his hold upon the Western imagination.

And Mr. Sevigny is quite a speaker, too. He says things which are not forgotten. As he will second the address in reply to the speech from the throne, and as that speech will surely contain a reference to the navy question, Mr. Sevigny will certainly touch on that, as it is his favourite topic. After Mr. Bennett has given the Conservative view of naval matters, the seconder of the address will probably give the point of view of the Nationalists. As to what these views are we cannot do better than quote Mr. Sevigny himself, and we make the extract from Mr. J. Castell Hopkins "Canadian Annual Review." In his speech he will probably say, as he did at Tingwick, P.Q., on Oct. 31, last:

"The Navy bill is an attempt by Ontario and the Provinces of the West to coerce Quebec and enslave our people forever. What has England ever done for you? She has no need of your help. She is strong enough to defend herself.... You must protest against helping England in her wars; unless you do, conscription will come next."

Or Mr. Sevigny may break out as he did at Arthabaska on Nov. 1st, last, when he exclaimed:

"The Navy belongs to his Majesty. Is that a Canadian navy? Who is his Majesty? Have we any Majesty here? This navy is wanted by the Lords of England who will not pay taxation there and are striving to get it out of the colonies'

Perhaps Mr. Sevigny, if he speaks in this, his favourite way, might stir to protest some champion of Ontario's cherished sentiments in Parliament. Perhaps Capt. Tom Wallace, M.P., of West York could stand this no longer and would appeal to the Speaker on a point of order. The Deputy Speaker, Mr. Blondin, might be presiding at the moment. If we seek to gather what his attitude would be towards an interruption of Mr. Sevigny by Capt. Wallace, we find that in a speech at St. Louis de Blandford, Oct. 29, last, the man who has been made Deputy Speaker is reported as having said:

"We owe nothing to Great Britain. England did not take Canada for love or to plant the cross of religion, as the French did, but in order to plant its trading posts and make money. The only liberties we have won are those we won by force, and to-day England tries to dominate her colonies as Imperial Rome once did."

As the Deputy Speaker is the gentleman who, in addressing the habitants, reminded them that the English were those "who disembowelled our ancestors on the Plains of Abraham," it would perhaps be idle for Capt. Wallace to try, to get a point of order across the board as against Mr. Sevigny, more especially as the Minister of Public Works, the Minister of Inland Revenue, the Postmaster-General, and the Solicitor-General would be prepared to take the floor and express views not very different from those of the gentleman who was seconding the address, and the Deputy Speaker who was ruling that his remarks were quite in order and highly meritorious in themselves.

It is, therefore, quite evident that with Mr. Bennett's eloquence and Mr. Sevigny's fire, the speeches on the address will this year possess an uncommon interest for all present.

ITALY'S LAST GREAT WAR WAS IN ABYSSINIA SUFFERED HEAVY LOSSES

Italy has transported her soldiery o the northern coast of Africa before in ages past ,for all Mauretania, he land of the Moors, was once a Roman provinct. Tripoli was originally a Roman colony, although there were inhabitants before that epoch of occupation who were akin to the Berbers. It was Greek at one time, and its name, which means "three cities," reveals its Hellenic origin. In its early days it relied for protection on Carthage, later destroyed by Rome, which was in the neighbouring Tunis. The Italians in their desire to maintain the balance of power in the Mediterranean have always held that they should have a sphere of influence in the realms which lie across the sea from their own lands.

Fortune did not smile upon the last war in which Italy participated. When Britain was engaged in 1884 in pacifying the Soudan, Italy was invited to take part and to lay claim to an influence in Abyssinia. A large Italian expedition was sent there a year later, an dhe red, white and green flag was carried bravely into remote parts of the kingdom beyond the desert. Two years later the Italian forces were overwhelmed by the armp of the negus of Abyssinia, and 500 men were left dead upon the field.

The defeat caused tre downfall of the Italian ministsy ,and the whole nation aws aroused. Within a short time a credit of the equivalent of $5,000,000 had been voted and Italy was pledged to extensive military operations. Reinforcements ewre hurried to Abyssinia, and no expense was spared to retrieve the losses.

With Menelik was concluded a treaty between Abyssinia and Italy which contained a clause which later was to be the subject of much discussion. It was concluded in 1889 at Accialli and ocntained the clause "His majesty the king of kings of Ethiopia consents to amke use of the government of his majesty the king of Italy for the treatemnt of all questions concrning other powers or governments."

On the strength of this Italy announced that she had a 'protectorate over Abyssinia. She established a colony in certain territory given to her under this treaty by Menelik and gave it the name of Eritrea. Coins bearing the image of the Italian ruler were prepared for this new colony.

Menelik ,however, becaem suspicious and soon regretted the signing of the treaty. He had addressed communications to both Geramny and England that he was emperor of Ethiopia, and in reply had been told that his notification should have been sent through the Italian Government. It occurred to the monarch that the translation of the treaty had been faulty, and that he did not intend to say consent, but merely emant to imply that he might use the Italian governemtn in his foreign relations. He had these misgivings first in 1893, and the question of interpretation puzzled him and the Italians greatly. General Baratieri arrived in the territories in 1895 ,about the time that General Toselli's force of 2,000 men had been practically cut to pieces by a force of Abyssinians twenty times its size. General aBratieri found opposed to him a force of 100,000 under Menelik, most of whom were armed with rifles. The force had plenty of artillery. The italians had 25,000 men who were operating in a wild and mountainous country and at least 200 miles from a base of supplies.

At this point the Italian commander was in a quandary and in order to gain time he manoeuvred from place to place His plan was not approved by the Government and it was decided to send General Badisseria to supplant him. The knowledge that another was to take his place and a sharp message from the premier, Signor Crispi, stirred General Baratieri to decisive action. His force was divided for attack into four parts. Three columns were sent against Adowa and a fourth was held in reserve. The three columns were quickly repulsed with great loss, and the reserve column in the confusion that followed was not of any use. The generals of the columns were captured or slain. The Italians left 6,000 dead upon the field and 4,000 were taken prisoners. The loss produced consternation and rage throughout Italy. The Crispi ministry went down to defeat.

Peace was afterwards made with Menelik on the basis of eliding article No. 17 pertaining to the protectorate. The enemy lost 5,000 men and the Italians gave such a good account of themselves in battle that the king of kings was glad to make peace. The colony of Eritrea was not enlarged.

Sunlight As A Cure For Drunkards Of Great City

Father Knickerbocker, emulating Moses Cleveland, is soon to establish a Home for Inebriates. The special committee of the New York Board of Estimate which has been considering the advisability of establishing a hospital and industrial farm for drunks has reported in favour of the plan. Mayor Gaynor has appointed a board of inebriety, which will formulate the plans for the proposed home. Its members include Dr. John Dorning, Dr. William Browning, the Rev. William Morrison, the Very Rev. John J. Hughes, Thomas J. Colton, president of the board and the commissioners of charity and correction. Within a fortnight regular meetings of the board will be begun. So before the end of another year, unless something unforeseen prevents, New York will have a farm colony where its "jags" will be treated, and, if possible, cured.

Sunlight, employed successfully as a cure for certain diseases, will be used to cure New York drunkards. Prisoners convicted of drunkenness will be sentenced to 30, 60 or 90 days in the sunlight and the open air. Instead of being locked up in narrow, damp, dark cells on Blackwell's Island, they will be confined in "sunlight dungeons" large, airy cells with hot and cold running water and large windows which will be kept open whenever the weather permits. During working hours the "jags" will have to till the soil on the big farm which will surround their hospital or prison, whichever one chooses to regard it. The plan calls for an initial expenditure of $450,000 and $80,000 a year for maintenance.

This is the newest idea in treating "drunks." The proposed "jag colony" for Father Knickerbocker will be modelled after the Cleveland farm colony, which is the first institution of its kind in America. Its principal feature will be the sunlight treatment.

At the present time 26,000 persons are arrested annually in New York for drunkenness. Of that number it is estimated that fully 15,000 are chronic inebriates. The proposed farm colony will be able to accommodate only 500 at first, but if its cure proves effective it will greatly lessen a serious civic problem. First offenders, of course, will not be sent there, only those with whom drunkenness is a disease.

Cleveland's farm colony of 1,500 acres, on which are being grouped in separate villages the city workhouse prisoners or "jags," the infirmary wards and the tubercular patients, is attracting the attention of every city in the United States.

The population of this city farm, already numbering into the hundreds, will ultimately reach 2,000. The present area will probably be increased to 5,000 acres when all the city's penal, sanitary and philanthropic institutions shall have been moved into the country.

The site of this new city farm is some ten miles from the central part of Cleveland, near the little town of Warrensville. It formerly comprised twenty farms, and includes a high plateau which separates the Chagrin and Cuyahoga valleys, 600 feet above Lake Erie. The air is said to be good for inebriate patients, and the land produces the crops which are most needed in the maintenance of city institutions, while, in addition to farming occupations for the prisoners, there are large stone quarries.

A mile of electric railway has been built by the city from the centre of the farm to an interurban road leading into town. The farm has also its coach, which has the privilege of running over all the electric lines of the city. The coach is equipped with cots for patients unable to ride in the seats, and also has an apartment for freight.

Nearly a mile to the west of the field terminal of the colony railway seventy inebriate prisoners are living in cottages, where iron bars are unknown. One young man there was hauling turnips last week. The turnip crop had been planted, cultivated and dug by prisoners from the Cleveland workhouse. Across the road other prisoners were burying large quantities of potatoes and cabbages for the winter.

The corn in another field was just sprouting, and there were many acres of it. On a distant hill were thirty cows belonging to the city of Cleveland. "Stay until 4.30 and you will see the prisoners milking," remarked one of the city's wards. Already the colony is furnishing not only supplies for its own existence, but is shipping milk and vegetables to those divisions of the city's institutions which have not yet been moved to Warrensville.

Right in the heart of the woods a trustees' lodge is being erected at a cost of $10,000. The prisoners are building it under capable supervision. This plant will be within an enclosure, and with the prisoners as the workmen will provide the power for lighting and operating all the institutions of the colony. All prisoners that can be trusted will have work on the farm. All others will work within the enclosure.

About 5.30 p.m. the present corps of prisoners come in from their various activities and get their supper. After supper they sit around and talk and at 8.30 they retire. Their beds are arranged in rows as in a hospital ward. When all are in bed the superintendent calls the roll and then the inmates sleep till early morning.

On Saturday afternoon they quit work at 2 o'clock and take a bath. Near the stone quarry is a bath-house. Shower baths are provided. Each man takes a change of clothing provided by the city with him, and his old clothes go to one of the other city institutions to be washed. The men go and come across the fields to the bath-house as they please, and not under guard. Once in a while one escapes, but not often. Most of them appreciate their new surroundings so much over real workhouse life, that they have little thought of running away. On Sunday they sit about the cottages or fields.

Nearly a mile and a half from where the seventy prisoners are at work, the temporary buildings of the tuberculosis hospital are rising. The dining-rooms, kitchen and such departments are all in a new two-story frame building. A sunhouse is going up near by, and grouped about are one-story frame houses with beds so arranged that the patients can sleep in the fresh air. One hundred patients from the city are already taking this fresh air treatment in this beautiful spot. Within a year or two arrangements will be complete to take care of 100 or 200 more.

Three-quarters of a mile south of the tuberculosis village at Warrensvillle is the infirmary department of the colony. Here, too, are some of the horses. Eventually the city farm is expected to raise all the hay that is needed for the horses in the fire and police departments of the city. Wheat is to be grown, and a grist mill established, which will furnish flour for all the baking for the different villages in the colony.

The permanent infirmary building is one of the finest and best arranged in the world. It is built around a quadrangle, with sleeping rooms on the outside, the part nearest the quadrangle being occupied by a wide corridor running all around. A wide verandah is in the front, where aged persons may bask in the sunlight. From the second story it is possible to see both the city of Cleveland and Lake Erie. The quadrangle is paved with flagging, and there is a fountain at the centre and plenty of plants and flowers.

Not all the inmates of the infirmary, however, will live in the main building. Some will live in cottages; in fact, many cottages will be built. Each cottage is to have a separate plot for a garden. Those who occupy these cottages will be grouped partly according to age and partly with reference to other qualifications. There will be, for example, a cottage for the old women; another will be given to a group of men of a like degree of intelligence and similar tastes; in order that their companionship may be congenial, and other groups will be made up in a similar manner. With the buildings grouped about the kitchen, the meals will be served with greater ease and satisfaction than otherwise would be the case.

Oldest Skull Dug Up In France

PARIS, OCT 27.—The skeleton of a man far older than any ever found before has just been dug from the ground at Quina, in the Department of Charente, Western France. The region, as has long been known, is rich in fossil remains.

This, the latest discovery of the "first man," was made by Henry Martin, grandson of a famous French historian. He unearthed the first of the bones on Sept. 27, and since then he has discovered enough to make it possible to reconstruct the entire frame. Thus he is enabled to realise one of the fondest dreams of science.

The Quina skeleton dates from the pallolithic or stone age, from the time of the mammoths, when man first fashioned implements from stone with which to protect himself from wild beasts.

The skull bulges out over the eyebrows like that of a gorilla, the frontal bone making a greater curve than was found in either the Chapelle Aux Saint's skull or that found in the cave in Neanderthal. The jaws are powerful, with the under jaw projecting. The teeth show that mankind at that distant age already had learned to chew its food thoroughly. The surfaces of the teeth are much worn.

CITY COUNCIL WILL GO TO OTTAWA IN REGARD TO POWER MATTERS

This Step Was Decided Upon at Meeting Last Night---Considerable Amount of Routine Business Transacted --Reports of Different Committees Adopted.

The city fathers met in regular session last night in the Council Chambers and transacted considerable business. There were present: Mayor Morrow, chairman; Ald. Buller, Kernaghan, Graham, Morgan, Anderson, Brown, Edgar, Bradburn, and Metheral.

A south end resident drew the attention of the Council to the condition of the sidewalk on Albert street, west. She stated that it was in a dangerous condition, and stated that a few days previous she had fallen seriously hurting herself, as the result of the defective walk. The matter was referred to the Board of Works.

The City Treasurer's list of receipts and expenditures was read:

A communication was read from Mrs. Spence, stating that owing to poor system of drainage, one of her lots remained under water most of the summer. She asked the Council to do something in the matter. It was referred to the Chairman of the Legal Committee and the City Solicitor.

A communication from A. Lowe, re the bad condition of Bethune street was referred to the Board of Works. He recommended that the city fill up some of the big holes near his establishment, etc.

Re the old drill shed grounds, it was moved by Ald. Morgan, and seconded by Ald. Anderson, that as the land had formerly been conveyed to the Crown and as it is now unused, it be reconveyed to the Corporation of the City.

Ald. Buller moved that the City Council go as a deputation to Ottawa to interview the Minister of Railways and Canals, in regard to power for the city. He included in the motion that the date be set by Mr. J. H. Burnham, M.P. It was suggested that they go when the Hydro Electric Commission was there, but it was thought that this might delay matters, so it was arranged as stated.

It was moved and seconded that an account of Ross and Holgate, for $700.00 be paid.

Ald. Brown gave a short account of his trip to the West, and thanked the Council for his holidays. The Mayor gave him a hearty welcome back on behalf of the Council.

Committee of the Whole.

The Committee of the Whole Council reported as follows:

(1) That a letter was received from J. H. Burnham, M.P., in regard to the Trent Canal and calling attention to a report of the Chief Engineer of the Department. We recommend that the matter be referred to the Power Committee to deal with.

(2) We recommend that a reply be given to the Ministerial Association to their request in regard to the observance of Thanksgiving Day; that the Council is of the opinion that it is a matter which can be better carried out by that Association.

(3) We authorized the Chairman of the City Hall Site Committee, Ald. Graham, to have Mr. Langford obtain options on property between Charlotte and King streets, and east of Louis street, for a market square.

The report was adopted.

ONE MORE ADDED TO THE GREAT ARMY

WHO ARE SHOUTING THE PRAISES OF DODD'S KIDNEY PILLS.

Chiswick, Ont., Oct. 27.—(Special)—Rheumatism, which developed into Diabetes, had made life a burden to Octave Labracque of this place. Dodd's Kidney Pills cured him and he is added to that great army of Canadians who glory in telling their neighbours that Dodd's Kidney Pills are the one sure remedy for all kidney ills.

"My limbs would swell and I had a dragging sensation across the loins," Mr. Labracque says, in giving his experience, "I could not attend to my work properly as I had to keep resting and I was troubled with rheumatism, and my troubles finally developed into Diabetes.

"I tried different medicines and doctors but got little relief till I began to use Dodd's Kidney Pills. Ten boxes made a new man of me."

All Mr. Labraque's troubles came from diseased kidneys. They speedily ceased when he commenced to use the one sure cure for diseased kidneys — Dodd's Kidney Pills.

Strange Letter

Special to The Examiner

NEW YORK, OCT. 26.—Knowing that letters he received from Florence Bromley, of Philadelphia, are in the hands of the police, Allison McFarland, through his counsel, Frank M. McDermit, gave out extracts from two of the epistles to-day. His object, he said, was to forestal whatever effect they might have if given out by the prosecution.

According to McDermit, who says he thinks his client is a slave to bromides, McFarland got a letter from Miss Bromley about two months ago that he is anxious about. The letter, it is believed, was seized with others in McFarland's house. A paragraph reads:

"Be careful. You know what they did to Dr. Crippen."

"While McFarland was in New York last Tuesday night," said Mr McDermit, "his wife broke into his trunk and got out and read a lot of his personal letters. McFarland found them strewn all over the floor around the trunk when he got home the next morning and his wife was dead in the next room.

"She read a lot of letters that Miss Bromley had written McFarland. In some of these letters Miss Bromley urged McFarland to hurry up and get his divorce.

"Besides the letters from another woman to her husband, Mrs. McFarland found correspondence which showed that $2,000 worth of jewelry her husband had pawned in Milwaukee some years ago had been lost because he had not kept up the interest.

"McFarland says he had repeatedly assured his wife that his pawnbroker's interest had been paid. He thinks the shock of finding that her jewelry was lost and that her husband had been trying to divorce her in order that he might marry Miss Bromley might have led her to suicide."

Peterborough The Gridiron City

BY ROY GILRAY

A City Hall at last!

For at least a decade Peterborough and Brantford have been the laughing stock of other cities when the matter of accommodation for the municipal offices is mentioned.

However, we cannot think the council are in earnest when they listen to the proposal of placing it on a side street up against a hill.

The unsuitability of this location at the corner of Water and Brock streets is at once apparent.

It is not near the business centre of the city.

It is getting away from the centre of population, instead of keeping up with it.

The civic buildings should be near the centre of the mercantile section, so that business could be transacted with as little loss of time as possible; this location would be a decided hardship for those located below Charlotte street,—and who can close their eyes to the fact that our city is growing to the south and west?

Then, again, the convenience of the citizens must be carefully considered. The city buildings should be so situated that every citizen, no matter from what part of the city he comes, could step from the street car to "City Hall Square" without having to transfer or walk half a mile; and as Peterborough continues to adopt the fashions of other cities in acquiring its electric lighting and power plants, street railways, telephone systems, and the many other frills of municipal ownership, its citizens will be compelled more and more to journey to the City Hall to "pay their homage to Cæsar."

Without going to the expense of having an expert determine the exact centre of population, we have but to turn to the two telephone companies and profit by their experience. Before they purchased their present properties they had their engineer go over the entire city, mapping out its stores and houses, with the approximate number of people living therein.

The Bell Telephone Co. were influenced in keeping away from Charlotte Street owing to their desire to have a "quiet" location, whereas the machine company being automatic, and not requiring any operators, did not have to consider the question of "noises," and chose Charlotte Street near George Street.

The fact that the main lines of the Street Railway converge at this point would influence the selection of this corner as the civic centre.

Another matter that must engage the attention of the city authorities very soon is the question of a direct route to the south-western portion of the city. Did you ever try to reach the vicinity of the Canadian General Electric Works from the northern part of the city? If you rode on the street cars you must have had an hour or two to spare; if you walked —which you would do if you were in a hurry—you must have been impressed with the roundabout method of reaching your destination.

Unfortunately, Peterborough was laid out when the gridiron or square plan was in vogue. No one, not even Surveyor Birdsall, ever dreamed that its citizens might, some day, be rushed for time or cramped for room, and desire a short cut.

Every large city is brought face to face ,sooner or later ,with this colossal mistake ,and many of them have spent millions in opening up diagonal streets.

Detroit seems to have been very fortunate in this respect. Instead of calling upon her citizens to pay immense sums in taxes to rectify the mistakes of the past, she finds herself enjoying the proud distinction of being the model city of the American Coninent; and this, despite the act that she is to a large extent a manufacturing city. So great has the automobile industry grown that it is estimated that a complete car is turned out every fifteen minutes of the day!

If she had not been laid out like a wagon wheel, the streets radiating like the spokes and the business centre with its city hall occupying the position of the hub, affording all citizens alike quick access to the business centre, she could never have assimilated with such ease, without congestion, the mighty influx of population of the last ten years. In fact, the transportation facilities are so perfect ,and distances so uniform from all suburbs that the workmen can live ten or twenty miles away from the turmoil of the city and yet be within easy reach of his work.

In Belgium a man may live forty miles from his work and yet journey back and forth night and morning owing to the splendid transportation facilities and the many short cuts to the large centres.

The citizens of the south and west must have a better and quicker method of reaching the business centre. The only practicable way is to open up a diagonal street, starting from the corner of George and Charlotte Streets and ending in the vicinity of the Electric Works. This, with another line of street cars would be the main artery of travel from the south and west. The property through which this highway would pass is not very valuable, and never will be cheaper than it is at the present time. The expense could be met by debentures, which would be taken care of by the increase in taxation owing to the rise in land values along the route.

A block of land extending from the White House on Charlotte Street to the Lundy Block on George Street should be bought by the city and the City Hall built in the centre, with a wide open space on all sides, such square to form the junction point of north and south George Street, Charlotte Street, and the new "Broadway."

POLICE COURT

John Hitch, John Smith and Stanley Lovinsky, three Poles, who were arrested while engaging in a drunken row on the corner of Charlotte and Aylmer streets yesterday morning, were fined $2.00 each in the police court this morning. They stated that they had been in the country three months.

Henry Brooks was allowed to go. He was drunk yesterday, but had a good job to go to to-day.

Mr. George McCullough was charged with keeping a vicious dog, which bit little Alice Douglas on the leg. He stated that he had never known the dog to bite any person before, and as it was only a bull pup, he thought it was only playing, and not really vicious. Dr. Brown gave evidence re the wounds. He cauterized the wounds, there being two through the skin and one tooth mark on the surface. McCullough stated that he had sent the dog to the lumber camp and he expected that when he came back in the spring he would be quiet. The case was dismissed.

POST CARD COLUMN

(To the Editor of the Examiner.)

Dear Sir,—J. J. Turner & Sons' letter is good reading, and I am sure we citizens of Peterborough will agree with the writers in wishing their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught to visit our city. Our city is one we are justly proud of, and would not only interest but also greatly please our distinguished visitors. I think the idea of extending an invitation to the Duke and Duchess to visit our city and our truly wonderful lift lock is a splendid one and should be acted upon by the Mayor and City Council without delay. It is an opportunity that should be grasped with both hands. I hope our leading men will get busy and take steps to see the suggestion o fMessrs. J. J. Turner & &Sons is carried into effect. We should all be glad to welcome their Highnesses to our city.

PERCIVAL G. S. WEBB.

Dear Editor,—Wouldn't it be a good idea to devote a whole page of your valuable paper for the use of some "would-be" sky pilots," or do you think the church is the proper place to discuss such subjects. I, for one, enjoy reading the Examiner, but it gives me the "Pip" to hear night after night, discussions on the Bible. I think, Mr. Editor, in your spare moments, it would be a good idea to try and find a church for some of those "would-be" sky pilots to preach in, instead of taking up space in your most valuable paper.

(Signed) A Good Christian.

"THE RICH FOOL"

There is no doubt about the popularity of that little meeting that is held every Sunday afternoon in the Y.M.C.A. The topic for discussion to-morrow will be "The Rich Fool"; and it promises to be a good, warm discussion. "Alone with God" will be the subject at the morning class. This one meets at 9.30.

Services At Knox Church

Interesting services will be held in Knox church to-morrow, morning and evening. The choir will render special music at both services. In the morning Rev. D. A. McKenzie of Centreville, will conduct a Thanksiving service. In the evening there will be a Thanksgiving service of song during which the old familiar hymns will be sung by the choir and congregation.

Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, principal of the Collegiate Institute, who is a most interesting and eloquent speaker, will give an address on "The Great Hymns of the Church."

Rev. Mr. Keith is convalescing and hopes soon to be able to return to his duties.

For a quarter of a century Campbell's Varnish Stains have been used by housekeepers everywhere for refinishing Furniture, Floors, and Woodwork. Nothing else will give as good satisfaction as the original. Insist upon getting "Campbell's". The Peterborough Hardware Co. carries a line of all colours.

VISITING IN CITY

Mr. J. A. McKone, principal of the Riverdale branch of the General Business College, Toronto, and formerly of the Peterborough Business College, is in the city for the holiday, the guest of Mr. G. L. Hay. To the Examiner, Mr. McKone stated that he finds a brisk demand for stenographers and bookkeepers in Toronto and the calls upon the Business College, are too numerous to be filled. There is always an opening for a graduate as soon as his course is completed. Mr. McKone is accompanied by his wife and little daughter Arleigh.

CLOTHES THAT SATISFY

"Clothes That Satisfy" is the one best phrase we can find to describe our Ready-to-Wear Clothes for men. They satisfy the most critical dressers as to the style, fit and service and they satisfy them at a lower cost than any others. No matter how particular you may be as regards correct style, or how exacting you may be concerning fit, or how critical you may be about your clothes withstanding hard and long wear, our clothes will satisfy you better than any other clothes you have ever worn, because we are striving to make Small profits build up a Big business. You can buy clothes at the same prices anywhere, maybe, but you can't get such values as ours. Don't wait until the last minute to get your winter clothes. Get them now and LeBrun's the place.

We are positive that our values are unsurpassed. Our economical methods of doing business and our willingness to accept a very small margin of profit, make it possible for us to undersell all other stores. If you find upon investigation that you can get a little better service here than any other store, we shall expect to get your trade. Therefore we shall expect soon to have the pleasure of showing you some of the new fall goods now on display here.

COLLEGIATE PUPILS GAVE MR. HODGSON A SEND-OFF

Mr. J. E. Hodgson, the popular former science teacher at the Collegiate, and Mrs. Hodgson, left for Lethbridge last evening, where Mr. Hodgson has secured the principalship of the Lethbridge High School. Mr. and Mrs. Hodgson will be greatly missed in this city, and Mr. Hodgson's departure is regretted by the pupils of the Collegiate, who evidenced their regret by the hearty and rousing send-off they gave him and Mrs. Hodgson last evening. The Collegiate Cadet Bugle Band was in attendance and amidst the cheers of the large crowd of boys, the train conveying Mr. and Mrs. Hodgson to their new home, pulled out from the station. Mr. Hodgson carries with him the best wishes for success and the congratulations of a very large circle of friends in Peterborough.

AN INTERNATIONAL SOCCER GAME ON MONDAY

Lovers of the noble game of football will be pleased to hear that this city is to be honoured with an international match, which will be played on Monday afternoon on the Park Street Athletic Club's well-known ground. J. Donnell of Park Street and the wee Geordie Dickson hae gotten a team of Scotsmen together, the like of which hasn't been seen in Peterborough since the Barracas' match with the C.G.E.

We have it on good authority that in addition to "Scotty" Gribb, "Red" Donnell, and Allan of the Auburn curls, they will have the services of the dreaded "C.G.E." Miller, the penalty king.

The people who have had the misfortune to be born south of the Tweed are said to be trembling in their shoes, but Arthur Pagett—the master of craft—still wears that eight-inch smile, and in spite of all alarms seems confident. Perhaps a glance at the English line-up accounts for his placidity. It has been rumoured that a prominent sport has offered medals, but on this point we are not certain.

This team will do battle for England:

Goal.
"Kiderminster" Moriaty
Backs.
"Big Bill" Hull — Phil Braun
Halves
Jimmy Simmonite — Vickers
A. Pagett (captain)
Forwards.
B. Smith — E. Dawson
T. Monk — A. French
"Brum" Turner

The following are asked to be in readiness in case Thanksgiving festivities prove too strong: Renshaw, Res. Back; Sharman, Res. Half; Wag Hotston, Res. Forward.

TYPICAL THANKSGIVING MARKET TABLES PILED WITH FOWL

A complete jam, is an appropriate description of the market to-day. It was a typical Thanksgiving Saturday market, with tables piled high with fowl of all kinds and at all prices. The demand was very great for every variety of feathered denizens of the barnyard, and the prices were within the reach of those of the most modest means. Geese of the very best quality, turkeys of all sizes, chickens that pleased the sharpest critic, butter and eggs in abundance, were piled on tables and on the floors and on benches, in fact everywhere that an inch of space was available. Geese were selling at the usual prices, with the exception of some very large fine ones, which had been held in reserve for this special market. They sold up as high as $1.65 but were exceptionally fine ones. Butter and eggs were the same as last Saturday, 28c to 30c. Potatoes on the outside market were sold at $1.40 per bag. Lamb was selling at the usual price, 12c and 13c. The following were the prices:

Inside Market.

Butter, 28c to 30c per lb.
Eggs, 28c to 30c per doz.
Geese, $1 to $1.65.
Chickens, 70c to 90c per pair.
Ducks, 65c to 75c each.
Wild ducks, 60c per pair.
Turkeys, $1.75 up to $3.50 according to size.
Lamb, 12c to 13c.
Snow apples, $3.25 per barrel.
Pork, 11c and 12c.
Baled hay, 85c per cwt.
Loose hay, $15 per ton.
Farmers' hides, 8c and 8½c.
Butchers' hides, 9c.
Dressed hogs, $8.50.
Live hogs, $6.

Grains.

Wheat, 85c to 90c.
Oats, 45c.
Barley, 60c and 75c.
Buckwheat, 50c to 60c.

The difference in price is due to the different qualities.

It was reported that at the first of the market some geese were sold as low as 75c. None of these came under the observation of the reporter, however, and while it is just possible that they may have sold at this price, it was the opinion of the numerous salesladies that the goslings must have been several years old.

Outside Market.

Cooking apples, 90c per bag.
Cabbage, 60c per doz., 5c per head. One man purchased one dozen at this price. There was a great demand for cabbage and other such vegetables.
Onions, 35c per pk.
Beets, 20c per pk.
Carrots, 20c per pk.
Carrots, 20c per pk.
Turnips, 30c per doz.
Potatoes, $1.40 per bag.

The fellow who can be late when his own interests are at stake, is pretty sure to be late when yours are.

SPLENDID WINDOW

Of the many artistic windows in Peterborough just now, there is none more effective or tempting than the display that Messrs. Coleman Bros., confectioners and caterers, 426 George street, have arranged for Thanksgiving Day. Macaroons, fancy biscuits and wedding cakes are displayed in an artistic manner and make one's mouth water, while this window also contains a turkey, goose and ox tongue, dressed, cooked and piped with creamery butter in a fashion that proves conclusively that Messrs. Coleman Bros. are living up to their high reputation as chefs and confectioners. The splendid window is a good index to the magnificent stock carried by Coleman Bros., which is unsurpassed in variety and quality. A thorough and quick service tends to enhance the popularity of this well-known store.

WEDDING BELLS

ALLISON—ARMSTRONG.

The marriage of Miss Florence Armstrong of Rochester, N.Y., daughter of the late Mr. John M. Armstrong, to Mr. Philip L. Allison, took place very quietly at 4 o'clock this afternoon, in St. Paul's church. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Pogue, in the presence of the immediate relatives. The bride and groom left on the afternoon train for a southern trip.

New Billiard Parlours To Be Opened

The new high-class billiard parlour which is now being fitted up over Moncur's Drug Store is fast approaching completion. The capacious room has every appearance of being a warm and comfortable one. It has a hardwood floor, lavatories, washbasins, and heating appuratus. A consignment of billiard tables (in parts) arrived this morning, and the parlour is expected to be open about Saturday next.

The promoters are understood to be Messrs. Graham and Martell.

GOOD-BYE WRINKLES

BEAUTIFUL BUST

Superfluous Hair Vanishes Like Magic by a New Discovery

Pimples and Blackheads Removed Forever.

Let this woman send you free, everything she agrees, and beautify your face and form quickly.

She Looks Like a Girl of 16.

This clever woman has not a wrinkle upon her face; she has perfected a marvelous, simple method which brought a wonderful change in her face in a single night. For removing wrinkles and developing the bust, her method is truly wonderfully rapid.

She made herself the woman she is to-day and brought about the wonderful change in her appearance in a secret and pleasant manner. Her complexion is as clear and fair as that of a child. She turned her scrawny figure into a beautiful bust and well developed form. She had thin, scrawny eye-lashes and eyebrows, which could scarcely be seen, and she made them long, thick and beautiful by her own methods and removed every blackhead and pimple from her face in a single night.

You can imagine her joy, when by her own simple discovery, she removed every wrinkle from her face and developed her thin neck and form to beautiful proportions.

By her new process, she removes wrinkles and develops the whole figure plump and fat.

It is simply astonishing the hundreds of women who write in regarding the wonderful results from this new beauty treatment, which is beautifying their face and form after beauty doctors and other methods failed.

Ethel Baker, of N. Y., writes: "My bust which was once flat and scrawny, is nicely developed."

E. Waibel, of N.J., writes: "I was always troubled with hair on my arms, but now they are as clear of it as the palm of my hand."

The valuable new beauty book which Madame Cuningham is sending free to thousands of women is certainly a blessing to womankind, as it makes known her remarkable methods of beautifying the face and figure of unattractive women.

All our readers should write her at once and she will send you absolutely free, her various new beauty treatment and will show our readers:

How to remove wrinkles.

How to develop the bust quickly;

How to make, long, thick eyelashes and eyebrows;

How to remove superfluous hair instantly;

How to remove dark circles under the eyes;

How to quickly remove double chin;

How to build up sunken cheeks and add flesh to the body.

How to darken gray hair and stop hair falling;

How to stop forever perspiration odour.

Simply address your letter to Evelyn Cunningham, Suite A747, 82 E. Randolph St., Chicago, Ill., and don't send any money, because particulars are free, as this charming woman is doing her utmost to benefit girls or women in need of secret information which will add to their beauty and make life sweeter and lovlier in every way.

BOTH HAD ABILITY

A man left his umbrella in the stand in a hotel, with a card bearing the following inscription attached to it: "This umbrella belongs to a man who can deal a blow of two hundred and fifty lbs. weight. I shall be back in ten minutes." On returning to seek his property he found in its place a card thus inscribed: "This card was left here by a man who can run twelve miles an hour. I shall not be back."

PRICE OF MILK WILL ADVANCE

A meeting of the Milk Vendors' Association was held in the Oriental Hotel last night, and as a result, the price of milk will be raised on and after November 1st, to six cents per quart for public institutions, and seven cents to the private individual. A local dairyman stated to the Examiner to-day that this action was the outcome of the high cost of feed and the correspondingly high price of good dairy cows.

In Lindsay and the surrounding towns milk has been selling for six and seven cents per quart for some time. While in Toronto, milk sells for nine and ten cents.

BOYS CREATED DISTURBANCE

Four young boys, also running from police court this morning on a charge of being disorderly. They were allowed to go. The Magistrate gave them a warning, however, that if they came before him again they would be severely dealt with. For some time past complaints have been coming in about boys in the north end of the city creating disturbances by throwing stones at windows, pulling the trolley pole off the wire on street cars and other mischievious pranks that caused considerable discomfort. The police will keep a strict watch on that part of the city in future, and any boys caught damaging any property by throwing stones, or any other harmful pranks, will be brought before the Magistrate, where they need look for no leniency.

STARTLING RUNAWAY

A pandemonium reigned supreme on Simcoe street for a short time last night, between the hours of five and six o'clock, when a carter's horse made a bolt for freedom. The scene was spectacular while it lasted. There were a few parcels in the rig and every time the horse made a leap forward the parcels would aviate into the air for about three or four feet. The performance was brought to an abrupt end when the wagon collided with a telephone pole, when it required the assistance of several men to extricate the struggling animal. Very little damage was done.

INFLUX OF VISITORS

There was a tremendous influx of visitors to the city to-day. They came in from all quarters of the Dominion and continent. Among the nationalities which were represented at the C.P.R. station to-day at noon were Italians, Greeks, Turks, French and representatives of the British Isles. The first section of the Toronto express brought in about two hundred visitors, while the second section brought in as many more. A great many of these were local people coming home to spend the holiday. The regular trains ran in two sections and even then the seating capacity of the cars was at a premium.

For a few hours this afternoon George street presented an animated scene, as the vast crowds surged up and down the thoroughfares, invaded the stores and took the market by storm. It was a banner day for the merchants and a strenuous one for the clerks.

IMPRESSIONS OF THIS YEAR'S HARVEST IN THE WEST

Mr. and Mrs. Fred Clarke, of Fraserville, returned from British Columbia on Thursday last, after spending several weeks in the western provinces. Mr. Clarke was in the city to-day, and from all appearances the trip had a beneficial effect. Mr. Clarke was very much impressed with the west, although he was somewhat disappointed at the vast amount of grain that is completely destroyed in Saskatchewan and Alberta, especially in the former province. He visited Victoria and Vancouver, spending several days in both cities. He was greatly impressed with their beauty and stated that their present possibilities are very great, having every advantage a large city could possibly have. During his trip west and his stay there, Mr. Clarke experienced fine weather, with the exception of a few days, but he was informed that prior to his coming, the weather had been very bad, rain falling almost incessantly for some time. This was particularly so of Saskatchewan, where thousands of acres of what would have been vast crops of grain, were drowned, the grain being flattened out on the ground. In some places, where the grain had been cut, it was rotting in the stooks.

Mr. Clarke said it was a pitiful sight to see the grain, some of it, and practically acres of it, being five and six feet high, destroyed. Some farmers, he stated, would not have a sheaf that would be of the slightest bit of good. In that particular part of the country, there were numerous threshin goutfits, that had not turned a wheel during the whole season. In Alberta, it was somewhat better. The season, however, was very late, and it was somewhat difficult to ascertain just how the crops would turn out. Manitoba seemed to have turned out the best, fields of wheat yielding fifty to sixty bushels to the acre. The potato crop in Manitoba was splendid, and the yield very heavy. The potatoes grow very large, some of them weighing as much as three pounds. These are not as firm or as good as Ontario potatoes, however, being of a softer and more spongy variety. Of the three provinces, Manitoba, Alberta and Saskatchewan, the latter probably came out the worst this season, all due to the heavy and incessant rains.

STOMACH DISTRESS IS ENDED FOREVER

No Dyspepsia, Heartburn, Gas or Indigestion in Five Minutes

Take your sour, out-of-order stomach—or maybe you call it Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Gastritis or Catarrh of Stomach; it doesn't matter—take your stomach trouble right with you to your Pharmacist and ask him to open a 50-cent case of Pape's Diapepsin and let you eat one 22-grain Triangule and see if within five minutes there is left any trace of your former misery.

The correct name for your trouble is Food Fermentation—food souring, the Digestive organs become weak, there is lack of gastric juice; your food is only half digested, and you become affected with loss of appetite, pressure and fullness after eating, vomiting, nausea, heartburn, griping in bowels, tenderness in the pit of stomach, bad taste in mouth, constipation, pain in limbs, sleeplessness, belching of gas, biliousness, sick headache, nervousness, dizziness or many other similar symptoms.

If your appetite is fickle and nothing tempts you, or you belch gas, or if you feel bloated after eating, or your food lies like a lump of lead on your stomach, you can make up your mind that at the bottom of all this there is but one cause—fermentation of undigested food.

Prove to yourself in five minutes that your stomach is as good as any; that there is nothing really wrong. Stop this fermentation and begin eating what you want without fear of discomfort or misery.

Almost instant relief is waiting for you. It is merely a matter of how soon you take a little Diapepsin.

BABY'S OWN TABLETS USED FROM BIRTH

Mrs. H. V. Ossinger, Tiverton, N. S., says: "We have used Baby's Own Tablets since our little boy was three years old and know of nothing to equal them. He is now twelve months old and has always enjoyed perfect health. Baby takes the Tablets easily and we always keep them in the house." Mrs. Ossinger's experience is that of thousands of other mothers. An occasional dose of the Tablets will keep the well child in excellent health, or if the baby is ill with any of the many ailments that afflict little ones, they will speedily restore him to health again and make him thrive and grow fat, rosy and strong. The Tablets are sold by medicine dealers or by mail at 25c. a box from The Dr. Williams Medicine Co., Brockville, Ont.

JEAN'S ADVICE

Jean's man had just been made a deacon, and Jean was the proud woman, although to awkward, difficult John it was not altogether an unmixed blessing. Getting ready for his first session meeting, John said somewhat anxiously, "I winder whit I'll say if I hae tae speak, Jean?" to which he received the sensible but suggestive reply, "Noo, John, I dinna think ye need tae speak unless ye like, and my advice tae ye is—jist you say naething, but try and look as wise like as ye can, and ye'll get credit fur far mair sense than ye hae."

ENTRANTS LAST YEAR WHO START AGAIN THIS YEAR — Frank Leahy, Cecil Armstrong, Tommy Barnett, J. B. Mann, Chas. Telford.

It all depends on the weatherman. If he favours the Examiner Road Races with the same brand of beautiful autumn weather he has handed out in the last five years, the Thanksgiving Day events will be the best in the history of the two competitions. Every arrangement has been completed for the races, which give promise of being the most exciting contests yet held. With favourable weather there is no doubt that there will be a record-breaking crowd on hand to see the finish in front of the Examiner office, and the Examiner is making arrangements to ensure the road being kept clear in order that the contestants may have a chance to finish, unhampered by the crowd. This can only be accomplished by the co-operation of the spectators themselves who are asked to remember that the race is not over when the first man finishes, and that the other contestants should be given an opportunity of battling for the other prizes. Ample police protection will be provided and the pavement will be roped off from the Examiner office to Brock street at the time of the finish of the races, and drivers are asked to bear this fact in mind and turn off at Brock street.

Both races will start at the same time, sharp at 10.30 o'clock Monday morning. The junior runners should reach the Examiner office a few minutes before 11 o'clock and the seniors should finish their long grind at approximately 11.25 o'clock.

Souvenir programmes, giving the names and numbers of the contestants in both races are being printed by the Examiner and will be given out on Monday morning, which will assist the spectators in following the results.

The Y. M. C. A. has very kindly thrown open the privileges of their splendid building to the runners, who will be allowed to use the dressing rooms and shower baths in the "Y." Runners who desire to do so, may dress at the Y.M.C.A. and leave their street clothes there, returning after the race for a bath. The busses start from the Y.M.C.A. for both races and will bring the clothes of the contestants back to the building, so that the senior runners who may prefer to dress at Lakefield will find their "goods and chattels" at the Y.M.C.A. after the race.

A bus will leave the Y.M.C.A. sharp at 8.30 for Lakefield, for the benefit of the senior runners, who are invited to go out to Lakefield in this way if they desire to do so. Those who prefer to go by train may go out on the 7 a.m. G.T.R. train at their own expense. The junior busses will leave the Y.M.C.A. at 9.15 o'clock and the youngsters are reminded that they must be on hand sharp on time. The size of the field means that it will take some time to distribute the numbers and give instructions. Busses will follow the runners in, to carry back the clothes and pick up the stragglers.

E. N. McWILLIAMS,

The Senior Race.

The great question in the senior race is, "Can Albert Smoke come back?" The speedy Indian from the shore of Chemong Lake seems to be the fancied one among the squad on account of his record-breaking jaunt last year and the fact that he has twice won the senior race. He is said to be in the pink of condition and if he is, the man that beats the strong, galloping Indian will have to step to town. However, Smoke's reputation and prowess have not daunted other runners and he has a much harder field to beat than he met in either of his two previous races. Charlie Thorpe, who chased him home twice, is an absentee, but in Harold Smith of the Y. M.C.A. and W. Willis, recently of the Y., but now of Toronto, he has two experienced runners to contend with. Smith has a number of good races to his credit, perhaps his best performance being in the Ward Marathon a couple of years ago, when he led the whole squad including the famous Tom Longboat, for over ten miles. He has been training faithfully and is on edge for the race. Willis is an old country runner who has carried off a lot of prizes since coming to Canada. His latest race was at the Labour Day sports here, when he won the five mile event, in commanding fashion. There is not one of the dozen starters that should be overlooked in sizing up the probable result. J. Worthley, the Ennismore boy, gave Smoke a fine battle in the ten mile race from Peterborough to Ennismore in connection with the Ennismore picnic early in the season and he has put some hard, consistent training beneath his belt since that time. Will Miller of Peterborough is an old Tottenham, Eng., Harrier with a grand record as a seven-miler. The extra three miles may bother him but his record entitles him to consideration. Holnbeck, the Cobourg boy who ran second in the junior race last year, is an all round athlete who runs easily and has lots of staying power. He is only a few months too old for the junior event this year. He ran the five miles last year without turning a hair. Morris Montgomery is no stranger to Examiner race fans.

WILLIE EDWARDS
The Keene Boy, who holds the record for the Junior Examiner Road Race. He negotiated the five miles in 28 minutes, 30 seconds, two years ago.

W. E. WASSON,
Who will, as usual, be timer in the Examiner senior race Monday.

FRANK LEAHY,
The Douro boy, who won last year's junior race on the disqualification of Willie Edwards, and who will be a contestant again this year.

He is a runner of the plugger type, who will be especially dangerous if the going is heavy. His younger brother, Scott, will also face the starter Monday, as will Sidney Knott, an English runner about whom little is known. The strong finish made by J. E. Lean, the little Cambourne runner, last year, will be remembered by those who saw the race. He was about the most unruffled runner who breasted the tape in the senior event, and he ran the ten miles with very little training, too. He may upset the calculations of some of the wise ones. The whole field is in good shape, the men having been training consistently for weeks and the race should prove the best yet. If Smoke's record last year is not broken, it will be badly shaken up at least, from present indications.

The Junior Event.

With Frank Leahy, last year's winner, Cecil Armstrong who finished third and J. B. Mann, who was fourth, all starting again this year, there is the nucleus of a red-hot contest in the junior race. Add to this trio a score of other youngsters and then try to pick a winner from that squad. Leahy, of course, would be the logical favourite on account of his good performance last year and because of the fact that he is a big, sturdy youngster who is fully capable of going the distance. He will have opposition all the way down the line. Little Cecil Armstrong, third man last year, will bear watching. The kid was only beaten a short distance last year and should show improvement on Monday. Mann, who is running under the colours of the T.A.S. this year and who captured the Eastwood trophy at the recent meet, is another likely youngster. He was right up with the leaders last year. There is not much line on the other runners, although the Y.M.C.A. squad are all in good shape and a dark horse is liable to be discovered anywhere in the list. The Lakefield Preparatory school has two entries in Beresford Hamilton and Morgan Benett and it may be counted upon that these boys are in the best of condition and will prove dangerous starters. Men of character are the conscience of the society to which they belong.

CECIL ARMSTRONG,
Of the Y.M.C.A., who was fourth last year in the junior race, and who is greatly fancied as a winner on Monday.

Many a man going up the hill of prosperity, has met his soul coming down.

There may be some substitute for good nature, but so far it has not been discovered.

No man has a right to scatter his griefs around where other people will fall over them.

The world is so full of a number of things that I'm sure we should all be happy as kings.

Character is a bundle of habits. Habits originate in the mind and are registered on the body.

GRANTS DEMANDS

Chinese Throne Promises Everything Asked For

CABINET WITHOUT NOBLES

Pekin, Oct. 31.—The demand of the National Assembly for a complete constitutional government has been acceded to by the throne. An Imperial edict was issued yesterday, apologising for the past neglect of the throne, and granting an immediate constitution with a Cabinet, from which nobles shall be excluded. A second edict grants pardon to political offenders connected with the revolution of 1898 and subsequent revolutions, and to those compelled to join in the present rebellion.

The Imperial edict, which is from the hand of the Emperor, Hsuan-Tung, says: "I have reigned three years and have always acted conscientiously in the interests of the people. But I have not employed men properly, as I am without political skill. I have employed too many nobles in political position, which contravenes constitutionalism.

"On railway matters one whom I trusted deceived me. Hence public opinion was antagonized. When I urge reform, officials and the gentry seize the opportunity to embezzle. Much of the people's money has been taken, but nothing to benefit the people has been achieved.

"On several occasions edicts have promulgated laws, but none of them has been obeyed. The people are grumbling, yet I do not know. Disasters loom ahead, but I do not see."

After referring to the uprisings in various places, the edict continues:

"The whole empire is seething. The spirits of our nine deceased emperors are unable to enjoy the sacrifices properly, while it is feared that the people will suffer grievously.

"All these things are my own fault, and I hereby announce to the world that I swear to reform, and, with our soldiers and people, to carry out the constitution faithfully, modifying legislation, promoting the interests of the people and abolishing their hardships, all in accordance with their wishes and interests. The old laws, that are unsuitable will be abolished. The union of the Manchus and Chinese, mentioned by the late emperor, I shall carry out now. Finance and diplomacy have reached bedrock.

"Even if all unite, I still fear that we may fall. If the empire's subjects do not regard and do not honor fate, and are easily misled by outlaws, then the future of China is unthinkable. I am most anxious day and night. My only hope is that my subjects will thoroughly understand."

The throne promises to organize a Cabinet without nobles forthwith. The Manchu Prince Shih Shu, President of the Assembly, is permitted to resign, the Chinese Li Chia Chu, succeeding him. The Manchu Kuei Chun, Minister of Constabulary, has been removed, and the Chinese, Chao Ping Chun, supersedes him in that office.

The lines around Pekin are tightening. While there is no great panic observable in the capital among the higher classes and the foreigners, there has been a perceptible tensioning everywhere. The legation quarter is preparing for emergencies and in some cases temporary fortifications have been placed in position. These consist largely of bags of sand.

Strong detachments of troops guard the palace and the gates of the city but while the throne has made haste to comply with the demands of the 20,000 soldiers of the Third and Twentieth Divisions and the Second Mixed Brigade, composing the Second Imperial Army, for the Yangtse campaign, which were presented by the National Assembly, it cannot be said that Pekin is yet safe from attack.

The Imperial edict has been widely discussed and it is generally believed that it was issued in order to provide Yuan Shih Kai with a powerful lever to use in his negotiations with the rebels. Its effect in Pekin already is good. The fear of the people, which was great yesterday morning when it became known that the capital was threatened with an attack unless the Government acceded immediately to demands of far-reaching importance, had somewhat subsided last night, although 600,000 Chinese continue to fear a massacre, while 100,000 Manchus are in dread of a Chinese attack.

At Tien Tsin yesterday the foreign troops marched around the concession for the purpose of impressing the natives with their numbers, armament and general preparedness for trouble. The customs commissioner received a letter signed Shur Yen Fang in behalf of the Tien Tsin branch of the revolutionary committee, announcing the intention of the committee to take possession of both Tien Tsin and Pekin.

Struck By Train, May Die.

Toronto, Oct. 31.—M. Shea, 1,269 West King street, 55 years of age, was picked up about twenty yards east of the Brock avenue crossing beside the C.P.R. tracks at 7.20 last night. He was unconscious and there was a severe fracture at the back of the skull and a deep gash in his hand. He was attended by Dr. Gillan, 1,435 West King street, and removed to Grace Hospital in a private ambulance. He is unlikely to recover.

He appears to have been struck by a train while walking on the tracks.

New Allan Liners.

Montreal, Oct. 31.—The Allan Line yesterday placed orders for two new vessels, which will be placed on the Montreal-Liverpool route.

The vessels will be 570 feet in length, will have a tonnage of 15,000 and will be able to maintain a speed of 18 knots.

Beardmore & Co. received the contract for one vessel, and the Fairfield Shipbuilding & Engineering Co. were successful tenderers for the other. The expenditure is $5,000,000.

Vaniman's Flight Postponed.

Atlantic City, Oct. 31.—McIvin Vaniman ordered his huge dirigible balloon, the Akron, taken from its hangar at Inlet Park yesterday, but was unable to make his expected trial flight because of engine trouble. Workmen were busy all afternoon trying to adjust the difficulty. It was almost nightfall when Vaniman finally announced that the flight would have to be postponed.

LEAPED TO DEATH

CAR HIT A STONE

Toronto, Oct. 31.—Jumping from a motor car in which he was riding with four other persons between Eglinton and St. Clair, in Dufferin street, Melrose F. Morrison, chief accountant of the Dovercourt Land & Savings Co., was fatally injured at 7 o'clock last night. His companions picked him up unconscious, but still breathing and rushed him in the car to the office of Dr. Walter McKeown, College street, only to find upon their arrival that their speedy trip had been in vain, for the young man was dead.

The story of the accident told by the others in the car is that the car was running swiftly down Dufferin street with its four passengers when it swerved alarmingly upon striking a stone or knoll in the roadway. The car careened, and Mr. Morrison seems to have believed that it was going to overturn, for he jumped headlong from the car. His skull was fractured, and the doctor believes that death must have been almost instantaneous. The body was removed to the morgue.

William Stewart, 584 Brock avenue, says that he was walking south in Dufferin street when he was overtaken by the car. Just as it came abreast of him it seemed to strike a knoll in the roadway and swerved so that it mounted a bank at the side of the road. He saw Mr. Morrison jump from the car, but thought that he had been thrown out. As he struck the ground the machine slid back from the bank, crushing him beneath it. A messenger was sent for a doctor, but when he arrived with a near-by physician, the man had been hurried away in the car.

Mr. Morrison was 30 years of age and single. In speaking of him last night W. S. Dinnick, president of the Dovercourt Land & Savings Co., said he was one of the best men the company had, was a general favorite with its patrons, and would be sorely missed by the company.

Part of Tripoli Recaptured.

Washington, Oct. 31.—The Turkish embassy received unofficial despatches yesterday confirming reports that the Turkish troops have recaptured part of the city of Tripoli. These messages came indirectly, and do not represent an official Turkish statement on the subject.

The State Department received a message from Consul J. J. Wood at Tripoli, stating that Italian forces have not treated Arabs so badly as some reports indicated.

Rome, Oct. 31.—The Italian nobility, like the people, are paying tribute in blood in the African conquest. Word has reached here of the death in action at Homs, Tripoli, of Duke Riccardo Grazioli Lante Della Rovere, a lieutenant in the army, and of the serious wounding of Count Pompeo Di Campello, a lieutenant in the cavalry, and gentleman-in-waiting to the king. Both of these officers were well-known sportsmen.

Killed By Train.

Hamilton, Oct. 31.—Another railroad accident, with fatal results, occurred here yesterday, when the C.P.R. train from Toronto early yesterday afternoon ran down and instantly killed an unknown man near the high level bridge. The train was stopped within a short distance when the accident happened, and Dr. Phelps of the Toronto General Hospital staff, who was a passenger on the train, rushed back to the unfortunate man, who was dead when the doctor reached him.

The man was apparently about 30 years of age and wore a black moustache. Two G.T.R. switch keys were found in his pockets, which, in connection with the clothes he wore, suggested that he was a brakesman.

Urge Death-Defying Trip.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 31.—Although he declared after his rapids' shooting trip in his motor boat Saturday that he would never attempt the feat again, Capt. Klaus Larsen will be waited upon by a committee of business men to-day, who will urge him to make another death-defying trip Sunday. They will offer him a purse.

FORESEES DEFEAT?

Taft Talks In a Lugubrious Vein at Chicago.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—President Taft surprised a large audience at the dinner of the Hamilton Club yesterday by what most of his hearers construed as an admission of the possibility of Republican defeat in the coming national election. He was speaking to an unusually enthusiastic audience of Republicans.

"Now we are at—some people think—the crisis in the Republican party with reference to its continuance in the guidance of the nation," the President said. "I am hopeful that the good people of the country who know a good thing when they see it, have only chastened us in an off year, in order that we may be better hereafter—but with no intention of shifting from shoulders that are fitted to bear the burden of the present problems and carry them to a successful solution, to those which are untried and which have new theories of action that we do not believe in, and that we don't believe the people believe in.

"However, if so be it they desire to make a change, we shall loyally support the new Government under any conditions, with the hope it will inure to the benefit of the country, but with the consolation, that, if after one trial the people think they ought to go back to the other party that has served them so well in the progressive days of the nation, they will do so—we can bear that, my friends; that is all."

After his address the President retired to his hotel for rest. Though he professed no weariness the three-days steady strain had told on him, and it was a tired man who led the Presidential party out of Chicago at 5.30 p.m. over the Pennsylvania Railroad for Pittsburg.

Federal Help Promised.

North Bay, Oct. 31.—Hon. Frank Cochrane, Minister of Railways and Canals, stated at a convention at North Bay that it would be his endeavor to see carried out the pre-election promise of the Borden administration, that the same energetic immigration policy heretofore applied to western Canada would be given to northern Ontario. He also promised earnest consideration to the question of Federal contribution to trunk roads in New Ontario, and also that a strong effort would be made to settle long standing disputes between Provincial and Dominion Governments, such as jurisdiction over the islands of Georgian Bay, conservation and control of streams, and other matters, which would be settled by conference if possible, but failing that, by an appeal to the courts.

A subsidy to the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway would also be considered, the opinion of the Minister of Railways and Canals being that the provincial railway was entitled to the same consideration as a private company from the Federal Government.

North Bay Power Problem.

North Bay, Oct. 31.—North Bay is considering entering the list of towns served by the Hydro-Electric Commission. The franchise of the local electric lighting company has expired, and the Town Council seriously contemplates establishing a municipal system and has entered into negotiations with the local company with that object in view.

In the meantime the lightning company has been absorbed by the Nipissing Power Co., controlled by Smith Kerry & Chase of Toronto, but virtually part of the merger of Ontario power companies. The new company asks for a 21-year franchise, and offers very low rates if the franchise is granted.

Representatives of the Hydro-Electric Commission have also been in consultation with the Council, and Hon. Adam Beck has promised to come here in the course of a week and lay a definite proposition for a supply of power before the Council.

Not Eager to Sell.

Winnipeg, Oct. 31.—Sir William Mackenzie, who arrived yesterday from the east, declared that he was not keen to sell the Winnipeg Electric. He was surprised at the novelty of the scheme recently mooted to extend the Canadian Northern Railway north to take in the Hudson Bay Railway.

New Factory For Aylmer.

Aylmer, Oct. 31.—The Aylmer Canning Co. has purchased land on the G. T. R. tracks, just west of the station, and will build a new factory there in the spring. It is expected that work will be commenced on the foundation this fall.

ELECTION ON DEC. 11

Sir James Whitney Announces Date of Provincial Polling

PROGRAMME GIVEN OUT

Toronto, Oct. 31.—Sir James Whitney last night announced that the Provincial elections are to be held on Monday, Dec. 11, the nominations on the previous Monday, the 4th.

The new Legislature will be the thirteenth since 1867, and may be counted upon for some ill-luck for one side of the House or the other. The Legislature dissolved on May 2, 1908, had endured for three years and a quarter; the present Legislature has already exceeded that term by about two months.

Formal dissolution of the House and the issue of the writs for the new Legislature will take place shortly, the delay being intended to give the municipal officers the longest possible time for the preparation of the polling lists.

This duty should have been undertaken during the summer, but, as usual, was generally allowed to go by default.

A statement to the press accompanied the announcement of the election date, and in it the record of the Government was outlined along with the proposals for the future.

Premier Whitney gives as the more important questions upon which the people of the province should have an opportunity of pronouncing:

(1) As to the advisability of further provincial appropriations if necessary to any scheme of development by reason of the financial aid to be given by the Dominion Government, and also of any statutory enactment which may be found to be necessary under the circumstances.

(2) Whether the Government of the province shall continue to urge upon the Dominion Government the payment of a bonus or subsidy on account of the construction of the T. & N. O. Railway.

(3) Whether a department of the Government shall be created, with a Cabinet Minister at its head, to take over and carry on the work heretofore done by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission.

The question of the opening up of Northern Ontario is said to be obviously of great importance and should be dealt with without delay. The only result of the addition to population in the newer districts is to increase the provincial expenditure while the Dominion derives an increased income from the greater consumption of goods paying tariff duties. The Provincial Government, therefore, notes with satisfaction Mr. Borden's announcement, that he would favor the giving of financial aid by the Dominion to the province in the work of immigration to Northern Ontario; the construction of permanent highways for the province, and for providing practical instruction in agriculture. Legislation to provide for the disposition of any sums voted by the Dominion for these purposes is contemplated and mentioned as "the enactment of statutory provisions of a very important character."

The T. & N.O. Railway policy is an important feature of the address. An engagement has been entered into with the Grand Trunk Railway for running rights of its trains over the line, in consideration of which the company assumes an equitable share of the general maintenance of the road, and pays the sum of $300,000 per annum as rental for such running rights, this sum representing one-half of the interest on the total cost of construction of the railway.

Sir James refers to the "bitter and relentless opposition" to the Hydro-Electric power scheme, which is intended to furnish power at cost to all sections of Ontario, and the great efforts which "have been made by interested individuals to hamper and prevent the carrying out of the intentions of the Government in the central and eastern parts of the province. So far have these efforts gone that in all probability we shall be compelled," says Sir James, "to use the powers given us by statute with reference to expropriation."

Sir James refers to the "very patriotic and unselfish exertions of Hon. Adam Beck, Hon. J. S. Hedrie and Mr. W. K. McNaught to the commission, and announces the discontinuance of the commission, and the establishment of a new power department with a Cabinet Minister at its head.

New York's Low Death Rate.

New York, Oct. 31.—New York city's death rate last week reached the lowest rate on record. The death rate for the entire city was 12.13 per 1,000 of the population, a decrease of 1.41 from the corresponding week of last year, and lower by 1.20 per 1,000 than the previous low record, for the week ending Nov. 5, 1910. The deaths totaled 1,156.

In the Borough of Queen's the death rate was 8.40 per 1,000 of the population, the lowest death rate any of the boroughs has ever shown.

Insurance Bill and the Dominions.

London, Oct. 31.—In the House of Commons yesterday the Chancellor of the Exchequer, in defending clause 26 of his insurance bill, which provides that uninsured persons emigrating to the dominions shall have the right to take their transfer value to similar societies abroad, described the provision as an attempt to bring about reciprocity with the dominions and foreign countries in the matter of insurance. This was to be regarded rather as a general offer to the colonies than as a final settlement.

Tug Struck a Rock.

North Bay, Oct. 31.—The tug Zephyr, owned by Thomas Darling & Sons of Callander, struck a rock in Lake Nipissing on Saturday while towing a scow, and sank in fourteen feet of water. The crew escaped to the scow and were taken off several hours later by a passing steamer. The bow of the wrecked craft is resting upon a shoal, and no difficulty is expected in the task of raising the boat and taking her to the drydock for repairs.

Boys Escape From Mimico.

Toronto, Oct. 31.—Two lads, one black and one white, escaped last night from the Mimico Industrial School. They were Stanley Lee, colored, 14 years, and John Fagan, also 14 years of age. Neither wore any hat or coat.

"The Gun Runner"

By ARTHUR STRINGER

"Oh, believe me," she told him, in her tense and low-toned voice, "believe me, I am not a coward! . . . . . But anything, anything, can happen on this ship to-night!"

The intentness with which he was studying her face brought her wondering eyes up to his.

"I'm afraid you've got to be very brave," he said, as gently as he could.

"Yes . . . . I know," she said, a little brokenly.

"But braver in a different way," he amended.

"Why?" she asked.

"Because you and I are going to break this quarantine to-night!"

She looked from him to the smoke-columns that hung over Parroto, and then back at the carbine-rack and the brass guns of the comandante's smoke-belching ship-of-war.

"We can't," she said, with a little gasp of despair. "We would have no chance. There is no place to go to—and they will have orders to shoot. It would be giving them the chance they are waiting for. We can't go!"

"We've got to!" McKinnon said, doggedly.

"But where could we go? Where could we find safety?" she demanded as her hopeless and unhappy eyes swept the inhospitable country that confronted them. In all that country, she knew, there was not a hamlet or town, not a valley or jungle, that could offer them safety. There was not a square mile of it, outside the beleaguered walls of Guariqui itself, that would offer them harbour.

"We're going to Guariqui to-night—you and I!" said McKinnon, meeting her wondering gaze with his clear and steadfast eyes.

CHAPTER XXVI.
THE DEAD-LINE.

Alicia stood on guard at the door of the wireless room, waiting for McKinnon's return. More and more, in those last strange hours of uncertainty, she dreaded being alone. There seemed something ominous and bodeful in the very quietness of the midnight ship, as she rocked and grated against the pier in the long and sullen ground-swell of the roadstead. The screw no longer throbbed, the engines no longer pulsed and churned. The quietness seemed deathlike. It was broken only by the steps of De Brigard's sentries, as they sleepily paced the long deck, one to port and one to starboard. Yet even these two figures, with their shouldered carbines, seemed ghost-like, presaging vague evils. The heat, too, was oppressive, for not a breath of air seemed to stir in the quiet ship. But incomparably more oppressive was the silence so rhythmically broken by the spectral tread of the pacing sentries. Then the infinitely minute sound of another movement crept in to her straining ears. She took up the heavy revolver as McKinnon had warned her to do, and crouched back into the remotest corner of the cabin, listening and waiting.

The girl's heart stood still as McKinnon himself quietly swung back the cabin door, dodged inside, and as quickly closed and locked the door behind him. He stood there with his back to her, listening, without so much as a glance in her direction. He heard the pacing steps pass and die away, and pass still again. Then he murmured a grateful "Thank Heaven!" took a deep breath, and turned slowly about to the waiting girl. His gaze was impersonal and abstracted; he scarcely seemed conscious of her presence as he stood there, deep in troubled thought.

"I was right," he said, with the look of perplexity still in his studious eyes. "Eighty-eight boxes of fluxing-slag have been passed out from the hold and piled along the pier. They've been standing there covered with a tarpaulin."

"Is any one there?" she asked.

"Five of De Brigard's men—four men and an officer. The four men are moving these boxes now. They are lifting them in through the east door of the weigh-scales shed. The south door has been kept shut; and the United Fruit Concern's track-motor has been kept there waiting. They have divided the eighty-eight boxes into two lots. They intend to take out only one-half of the shipment to-night. I counted the boxes from under the lifeboat. Forty-three were left; that means they are taking off forty-five."

"That means almost three hundred thousand rounds of ammunition!" she exclaimed, with a little hopeless gesture of the hands.

"The Remington rifles, of course, they can't touch. The forty-five boxes, I imagine, have completely loaded the body of their car, filled it up!"

"But what are we to do?"

He looked at her, and laughed a little, recklessly.

"They have to run those boxes of slag out through Puerto Locombia to De Brigard's headquarters to-night. They have to get them out there quietly, very quietly. The track, doubtless, has been cleared for them. It has to be cleared for them, for even an eighty-horse-power motor can't side-track an ore-train or switch a string of banana cars. And there is no longer any telegraph between this port and the inland points they have to pass."

"No, there is no telegraph," she said, still at sea.

"There are four men and an officer," he mused irrelevantly. Then he looked down at his watch, and turned abruptly to the girl again.

"You have a revolver?" he asked. She showed him the weapon. He looked it over, saw that it was fully loaedd, and handed it back to her.

"Have you ever learned to use it?" he asked. She looked at him with growing wonder.

"I don't think I could kill a man," she said, very quietly and very slowly.

"But could you protect yourself, at a 'pinch? Could you shoot round a little with it, I mean?"

"I have learned to shoot," she said, white-lipped.

"Good; then that makes three!" he exclaimed. Her wide eyes, following him as he crossed to his trunk and opened it, detected the fact that, for all his assumption of jocularity, his hand was shaking a little as he held Ganley's huge revolver and his own under the electric light. He first saw that these two revolvers were fully loaden. Then he overturned a green cardboard box and counted his cartridges. There were one hundred and eighty-three, all told.

"What must I do?" she asked, as bravely as she could, taking the handful of cartridges he had doled out for her.

He stood once more studying her with his impersonal and abstracted eyes.

"Could you run a motor, a truck-motor like this?" he asked, with a side-jerk of his head toward the pier.

"I have run one, often," was her quiet answer. "There is no steering-wheel. It is simply a starting and speed lever and the brakes—though we always took a boy to blow, to keep the tracks clear!"

"The boy will not be needed, to-night," was his grim rejoinder, as he once more studied his watch. She drew back from him, slowly, step by step, aghast.

"You are not going to try to take that motor from them?" she asked.

"We've got to take that motor. It's our only way out. And with your help I can do it."

"But these sentries! And there are five men! And forty-eight miles of country held by De Brigard!"

"Listen," he said, so simply, so matter-of-fact in the facing of the problem, that his very quietness brought her stampeding thoughts back to her. "There are just two danger zones. The first is in the weigh-scales shed where those five men will be. The second will be in De Brigard's lines."

"Yes," she said, doing her best to meet his mood of calm-eyed practicality.

"The officer will be the only man armed, of those five. I'll attend to him. Before the other four can get to their carbines we'll be off—you'll be off, I mean, for remember, whatever happens, you are to get to that starting-lever and get away with the car. I'll be holding the men off until we're clear."

"Clear of what?"

"Clear of that shed—and of the wharf. Then, once out of the town, we've got a clear run until we strike De Brigard's outposts. It will be simply a matter of rushing them—and trusting to luck."

"It's hopeless," she sobbed.

"To stay six more hours on this steamer is more hopeless!"

"Even if we did get through," she tried to explain, "we couldn't get into Guariqui. They would fire on a car breaking into their lines—they would fire on a car breaking into their lines—they would kill us both, before they could understand!"

He shook his head dissentingly.

"We'll have to warn them in some way . . . . that is only one of the smaller problems!"

He caught up his coat, and dropped a revolver into each side pocket, and after them the loose cartridges, in handfuls.

Then, after another moment's thought, he crossed the cabin again, and leaned over the open trunk.

"I've got a pocketful of milk tablets here," he explained, "and a pound or two of German army chocolate."

"And I'm terribly sorry, but it isn't sweetened!" he said. Although there was no answering smile on her face, he thought he saw a fleeting look of gratitude in her eyes, as though she was struggling to thank him for even his foolish and futile efforts at lightheartedness. And while she still gravely looked up at him he slipped his huge wicker-covered brandy flask into his hip pocket, and once more consulted his watch.

"Our time is up!" he said, with every semblance of levity suddenly fading from his face. It tortured him to see such resigned hopelessness in her quiet eyes, but he knew it was pedilous to surrender to his feelings.

"I know it's hard," was all he said, "but it has to be done."

"I understand," she said.

He turned, with his hand on the light-switch. "Is there anything you feel you ought to take along with you?"

"Nothing," she whispered.

"Then are you ready?"

"Quite ready," was her answer.

She heard the snap of the light-switch. She heard him quietly turn the key in the cabin door. She knew as she stood with her hand on his sleeve, that he was listening and waiting for the sentry's steps. He waited until they passed and died away toward the bow of the ship. Then he noiselessly opened the door and drew her out after him into the blackness of the balmy, musky-odoured midnight air

CHAPTER XXVII.
THE FLIGHT.

They crept across the deck, hand in hand, to where the shadowy outlines of one of the lifeboats blocked their path. They slipped in under the bow of this lifeboat, groping their way to the davit, where the ship's rail ended. Before them was a drop of six feet, from the ship's deck to the string-piece of the pier, against which the rusty side-plates were creaking and groaning.

McKinnon made a sudden motion for the girl to wait, for dark figures were moving about on the pier below. She could make out the gloomy mass of the weigh-scales shed, its oxid-red paint leaving it black by night. She could see that the west door of the shed was open, and that a figure stood just inside this door, holding a lantern. She knew it was the officer, for she could see the light glimmer on the sword-scabbard that moved back and forth with every movement of his body. She could see, too, that he was contentedly smoking a cigarette. She could even smell the tobacco smoke, mingled with the heavy odour of a decaying shipment of bananas that rotted farther out along the pier-edge.

She could hear low voices, now and then, speaking cautiously in Spanish, as two barefooted soldiers padded past the swinging lantern, in through the door. They carried a heavy box that reminded her of a baby's coffin; and as they came out again two others passed them on their way in.

Then she felt McKinnon touch her arm, warningly, and heard his quick whisper for her to be ready. She could also hear the slow tread of the sentry's feet behind her, to the north of the shielding lifeboat.

"Now's your chance," McKinnon was saying in her ear. He dropped silently over the deck-edge. She could just make out the white patch of his face as he stood there waiting to lift her down.

She knew no emotion, beyond a vague and persistent anxiety, as she felt his arms clasp her surrendering body. The moment's intimate contact brought her neither joy nor repugnance. She only knew that McKinnon was leading her by the hand to the far end of the shed that faced the west. Then he took away his hand, and drew a revolver from his pocket. It struck her that the odour from the rotting banana pile was becoming almost unendurable.

She followed him blindly, her outstretched fingers keeping in touch with his coat sleeve. She saw him step in over the railway tracks that were bridged by the shed. A broken right angle of light, from the lantern within, outlined the huge, loosely fitting door that covered the west-end of the black-boarded buildings. In this huge door a smaller one had at some time been cut; it was through this smaller door that McKinnon led her, cautiously, noiselessly.

The track motor stood backed almost against the eastern end of the shed, next to the door through which the barefooted soldiers were carrying the heavy boxes. The officer with the lantern still kept his position, just inside this door, placidly smoking his cigarette.

The girl and McKinnon had to stoop low to keep in the shadow of the square-topped, heavy-bodied motor car. They crouched in under its acetylenes, close to the rust-covered, many-dented circulating coil, as a cartridge box was lifted into the body of the car by the two barefooted carriers, with a muffled thump as the weight was released, and then the grating of wood against wood as the box was pushed and twisted and jerked into position. They could hear the sigh of one of the men, the pad of bare feet, and the nonchalant "Forty-three, forty-four" of the counting officer.

It was then that McKinnon lifted her bodily into the driving-seat, whispering to her to sit low, even catching at her outstretched hand and conveying it to the starting-lever.

"Start as the door opens," she heard him whisper, and she knew that he had crept forward again, and that she was alone in the car. She tried to school herself to calmness, to coerce her attention on which was the starting-lever and which the speed-lever, to force into life the hope that all might still turn out well. Once free of that door she felt she could breathe again.

Then the quietness was broken by the sudden sound of metal rasping on metal, of a falling piece of wood that echoed cavernously through the high-roofed shed

"Who is there?" cried the startled officer, in Spanish, as he swung about with his lantern. He whipped out a revolver from his belt as he repeated the challenge. The door had not opened; they were shut in, trapped.

The officer sprang forward, holding the lantern out at his side as he ran. The girl's heat stopped beating; it was over—it was the end of everything!

Then a sudden roar of sound filled the shed, followed by the crash of glass. It was a shot from McKinnon's revolver, a deliberate and well-put shot that shattered the lantern and left the place in darkness.

"Quick—come ahead!" called McKinnon, out of the darkness. As he spoke the officer emptied his revolver toward the sound of the intruder's voice. The shots in rapid succession, filled the shed with tumult, left the air stifling with powder smoke. Quick calls and counter-calls came from the ship. The four barefooted soldiers springing for their carbines, charged in through the narrow east door. They fired as they came, but only into utter darkness.

"Come ahead!" called McKinnon still again out of the darkness—she could not tell where. "Sit low, and take the door on the run!"

She hesitated, bewildered, for the command seemed a foolish one. The carbines were spitting close about her. She heard the cries of alarm, the deafening detonation, the crash of wood.

"For God's sake, come ahead!" implored McKinnon. She knew he was still safe. She no longer hesitated. She threw the starting-lever back, threw the speed out full, and crouched low in the bottom of the car front. She knew that somebody was clubbing at the seat above her with a musket-end. She could hear the guns of the Laminian's sentries giving the alarm. Then she closed her eyes and crouched lower, for she knew the car was under way.

It had some fifteen or sixteen feet of headway before it struck the huge pine door that barred the tracks. There was a sudden rending and splintering of pine, a crunching of wood, and the car had gone through the door like a hound through a paper hoop.

A Marvel Of Healing

Salt Rheum of Ten Year's Standing Healed as if by Magic

Hands Cracked so Could Not Work —Cures Effected by

Dr. Chase's Ointment

It does not take long for Dr. Chase's Ointment to prove its magic healing power. A single night is often sufficient to produce the most startling results.

Internal treatment for skin diseases is nearly always disappointing. By applying Dr. Chase's Ointment to the diseased parts relief is obtained almost immediately, and gradually the sores heal up and disappear. Here are two letters which will interest you:—

Mrs. Chas. Gilbert, Haystack, Placentia Bay, Nfld., writes:—"I was a sufferer from Salt Rheum for ten years, and had about despaired of ever being cured, so many treatments had failed. Reading of the wonderful cures effected by Dr. Chase's Ointment, I commenced using it, and was entirely cured by eight boxes. I want to express my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Ointment, and to recommend it to all sufferers."

Mr. Stanley Merrill, Delaware, Ont., writes:—"For years I was troubled with my hands cracking, often becoming so sore that I could hardly do any work. I got some of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and happily find that one or two applications of same to the affected parts make them well. I have had no trouble since using the ointment for sore hands."

SAVED FROM AN OPERATION

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Peoria, Ill.—"I wish to let every one know what Lydia E. Pinkham's remedies have done for me. For two years I suffered. The doctors said I had tumors, and the only remedy was the surgeon's knife. My mother bought me Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and today I am a healthy woman. For months I suffered from inflammation, and your Sanative Wash relieved me. Your Liver Pills have no equal as a cathartic. Any one wishing proof of what your medicines have done for me can get it from any druggist or by writing to me. You can use my testimonial in any way you wish, and I will be glad to answer letters."—Mrs. CHRISTINA REED, 105 Mound St., Peoria, Ill.

Another Operation Avoided.

New Orleans, La.—"For years I suffered from severe female troubles. Finally I was confined to my bed and the doctor said an operation was necessary. I gave Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial first, and was saved from an operation."—Mrs. LILY PETROUX, 1111 Kerlerec St., New Orleans, La.

The great volume of unsolicited testimony constantly pouring in proves conclusively that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is a remarkable remedy for those distressing feminine ills from which so many women suffer.

MONTREAL, 22nd February, 1909.

I HEREBY CERTIFY that I have drawn by my own hand ten samples of the St. Lawrence Sugar Refining Co's EXTRA STANDARD GRANULATED SUGAR, indiscriminately taken from four lots of about 150 barrels each and six lots of about 450 bags each. I have analyzed same and find them uniformly to contain 99-99/100 to 100 per cent of pure cane sugar, with no impurities whatever.

Unfortunate Family Jars

"Bettina came to me the other day with a troubled countenance. "We do nothing but quarrel in our family," she said. "Bob and I never agree about anything, and mother takes Bob's side and father takes mine, and before we know it, we are at it, and all of our meals are one long round of argument. I am sick of it, and I don't know how to stop it."

"Why do you and Bob disagree?" I asked her.

"Oh, he hates girls' things, and I hate boys' things, and mother thinks I'm hard on Bob, and father thinks Bob's hard on me, and we all take sides, and it makes life anything but pleasant.

"For example," she continued, "we are going to get a dog. Bob wants a fox terrier and I want a French bull. We might get together on the kind of dog, but we'll never get together on the name for it. I want to call him 'Kelly' and Bob has a preference for 'Jack.' Father ended our argument the other night by saying that if we didn't stop fussing he wouldn't get a dog. Then mother flared up, and stated that as the dog had been promised us, the promise could not be broken. Father retaliated that to make us all happy he would have to get two dogs, and there wasn't room for them in the house. He said he might get a cross between a fox terrier and a French bull, but he didn't think even then Bob and I would be satisfied. He joked about it, But there was a sting in everything he said, and finally I cried, Bob was sulky, mother looked hurt, and there we were, as unhappy as could be."

The picture that Bettina painted is one that we would all recognize. So many meals are spoiled by family jars; so many otherwise happy homes are torn by constant dissensions.

I fancy that the mother and father can, if they will, regulate the attitude of the family at the table. When the children are little they can show them that uncomfortable topics must be left for other times. I am willing to admit, however, that there is an age when boys and girls seem to disagree about everything.

In my opinion there is a dreadful lack of self-control where children are allowed to see or hear quarrels between their parents. If there must be disagreements let them at last be in private. The impression received by a sensitive child is often much graver than the subject deserves. When the father and mother have forgotten their little misunderstanding, the child will hold the memory of the bitter words, which were not meant, but which seemed to him to carry with them a lack of love as well as harmony.

I know a woman, who has told me that as a little child she went to bed night after night, utterly miserable because she feared that her parents did not love each other. She had heard something of divorce and of separation, and it seemed to her that if the quarrels continued her father and mother could not live together. As she grew older and learned something of philosophy, and of human nature, she learned that the family jars were not serious. Her father was argumentative, and her mother quick tempered, and the combination caused sparks to fly.

It would seem that the exercise of self-control ,of patience and of firmness would bring about in almost any family a harmonious condition. Parents should see to it that differences of opinion be held within bounds, and that their own tempers and irritations are checked in the presence of their children. D. M.

GRANDMOTHERS USED SAGE TEA

To Darken the Hair and Restore Gray and Faded Hair to Its Natural Color.

It is easier to preserve the color of the hair than to restore it, although it is possible to do both. Our grandmothers understood the secret. They made a "sage tea," and their dark, glossy hair long after middle life was due to this fact. Our mothers have gray hairs before they are fifty, but they are beginning to appreciate the vision of our grandmothers in using "sage tea" for their hair and are fast following suit.

The present generation has the advantage of the past in that it can get a ready-to-use preparation called Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy. As a scalp tonic and color restorer this preparation is vastly superior to the ordinary "sage tea" made by our grandmothers.

This remedy is sold under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

This preparation is offered to the public at fifty cents a bottle, and is recommended and sold by all druggists.

HAVE WIPED OUT HELL

Our lively contemporary, the Burk's Falls "Arrow," says:

Eminent dignitaries of the Methodist Church—lay and clerical—from all parts of the world, have been discussing religious matters at Toronto for some time. Judging by the discussions, the "Higher Critics" are growing in numbers rapidly. It seems to be taken as an evidence of ripe scholarship to be ranked with the men who have wiped out hell and are now earnestly and scientifically undermining the foundations of Heaven itself! After a time, perchance, it will not be necessary to go to church, for there will be neither a Heaven to gain nor a Hell to shun. But what will become of the preachers and churches when that takes place?

Two decades ago, Col. Ingersoll was regarded as an awful man because he lectured on the "Mistakes of Moses." Had he lived to-day, he would have been regarded as a bright and shining light by the "Higher Critics." So that it is evident that the only mistake the Colonel made was in being born a little ahead of time.

One good brother at the Conference was much pained because the lay brethren did not pitch in and help the preachers to save souls as they used to do. Doubtless the brother will have his eyes opened before he departs for home—the "Higher Critics" will see to that.

If religion is merely a matter of guesswork, it is a waste of money to pay preachers and keep up churches. And if religion is purely a matter of morals in this life, preachers are entirely unnecessary, as experience is the only teacher people would seriously heed under such circumstances.

And yet the Bible is the most wonderful book in all the world. Sir Walter Scott, when dying, said it was the only book.

"Bring me the Book," he said.

"What book?" was asked.

"There is only one Book," was his answer.

The Bible was the comfort and solace of this great scholar and writer all his life down to the hour of his death ,as it had been the comfort and solace of hundreds of thousands before and since, and will be until the end of time. There is much in the Bible that passes human understanding, just as there is much in the great problem of life itself which cannot be grasped or comprehended by the finite mind. The brightest minds of the ages realized this and bowed to the inevitable. It remained only for the "Higher Critics" to regulate the affairs of the illimitable universe and master its mysteries!

SUGGESTIONS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Rice to be a useful article of food should be stewed with milk, butter or stock, which will supply the want of natural fat.

Lemon juice will clean a luminum. If your aluminum pans and kettles become blackened, just put a little of the juice on a cloth and rub the utensil well.

To starch black lawns boil two quarts of wheat bran in six quarts of water for thirty-five minutes. Let it cool and then strain. No soap is necessary where this is used, as it both cleanses and stiffens.

A good way to wash bottles or vinegar cruets is to put crushed egg shells and warm soapy water together in them and shake well. This will clean the glass well and will not scratch it.

To protect your rolling pin and board in absolute cleanliness make coverings for them of unbleached muslin, having drawing strings and loops sufficiently strong to hold them when the bags are hung up.

A loaf of bread will keep fresh much longer if placed in a covered stone crock. Wrap in a large cloth to exclude air and keep the crock in a cool place. It is nicer than a tin vessel and much better than keeping the bread in a refrigerator.

To preserve unused yolk of eggs put the yolks in a cup or basin, drop a piece of kitchen paper into cold water, and place over the top of cup or basin. This will prevent the yolks from getting hard and they will keep for days.

To deodorize saucepans after cooking onions, cabbage or fish, try this plan: Wash and dry the pan, then place a piece of thick brown paper on the stove, set fire to it and turn the saucepan over the blaze. After a few moments remove it, and the odor will not be noticed.

An easy and quick way of dropping oil when making mayonnaise dressing is to cut a small groove in each side of the cork in the olive bottle. The air will enter the groove at the top and force the oil out of the lower hole in slow, even drops. Lay the bottle on the table with the cork and projecting well over the edge. You can sit down and do your beating, and the oil will come out just right.

SEWING ROOM SUGGESTIONS

It may surprise most women to learn that it is not conducive to good health to sit in a rocking chair while sewing if the material has to be kept on one's lap. A rocking chair throws the body out of balance by pitching it backward at an unnatural angle. In it the muscles of the front of the body —the muscles of the chest and diaphragm—are contracted, the chest is made hollow, the ribs are pulled down, and the back is rounded.

A chair with a straight back should be used, and the body should be held in the same erect position that the cutting table requires—chin and abdomen in, back straight, chest out. Of course, it is necessary when sewing on the lap to bend forward, but the bending should be done from the hips—the back should not be rounded. Sewing at the machine properly conducted is an admirable exercise. Be sure to sit erect, bending only at the hips, and you will find the rapid pedalling will be beneficial as a healthful exercise.

Correct sewing is really governed by a few simple rules, which, if followed out, make the plying of the needle and thread an exercise which deepens the chest, improves the carriage, strengthens the back and shoulders, clears the complexion, and brightens the eyes.

In the first place the sewing room should be well ventilated. The air in it should be as fresh and pure as the air out of doors. Three operations go on in the sewing-room, viz.: cutting, the seamstress standing at the table; stitching, seated at a machine; sewing, with the material in the lap. In cutting the manner in which the seam stress bends over the table is everything.

The following exercise taken two or three times a day is a wonderful help toward correct bending at the work table, that is, bending without constricting the chest or abdomen. Stand perfectly erect with the heels together, the chin and abdomen in, the chest out, the back straight. Slowly filling the lungs with air, raise the arms, held stiff, from the sides outward, until the hands meet over the head, and at the time the hands meet the lungs should be filled to their fullest extent with air. Slowly exhaling the air, lower the arms to the sides again. Repeat this movement twenty times.

There is a right way and a wrong way to sew, and she who pursues the right way arises from her sewing after a day's work greatly benefited. She may be weary, but her weariness is that derived from healthful work, like the weariness which follows a game of tennis, for instance, but the woman who habitually takes the wrong position runs a great risk of developing indigestion, to say the least, if not more serious lung trouble.

Stops a Cough Quickly --Even Whooping Cough

If you have an obstinate, deep-seated cough, which refuses to be cured, get a 50-cent bottle of Pinex, mix it with home-made sugar syrup and start taking it. Inside of 24 hours your cough will be gone, or very nearly so. Even whooping-cough is quickly conquered in this way.

A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, when mixed with home-made sugar syrup, gives you 16 ounces—a family supply—of the finest cough remedy that money could buy, at a clear saving of $2. Very easy to prepare—full directions in package.

Pinex soothes and heals the inflamed membranes with remarkable rapidity. It stimulates the appetite, is slightly laxative, and has a pleasant taste—children take it willingly. Splendid for croup, asthma, bronchitis, throat tickle, chest pains, etc., and a thoroughly successful remedy for incipient lung troubles.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of Norway White Pine extract, rich in guaiacol and other healing pine elements. It has often been imitated, though never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. Simply mix with sugar syrup or strained honey, in a 16-ounce bottle, and it is ready for use.

Anyone who tries Pinex will quickly understand why it is used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy. MEXICO'S SECRET SERVICE DUEL IN WASHINGTON

Thomas F. Hopkins, Head of the Law Firm That Managed the Washington End of the Mexican Revolution.

NOT on the plains about Juarez, not in the turbulent streets of Mexico City was the recent Mexican revolution fought, but in the quiet avenues of our own national capital, Washington. That was the nerve centre from which the blows of the fighting men in the field were directed. There, in hotel corridors, lobbies of theatres and law offices, the decisive engagements between the old régime and the new were fought and won and lost.

This was but natural when you think of it. The supporters of Madero, confident of the justice of their cause and banking on the general sympathy of Americans, selected Washington as the base from which they were to obtain not only their supplies and munitions, but advice and example as to how to proceed from the diplomatic viewpoint and information as to what the Diaz government would do to outwit them. The very boldness of the idea of transacting their illicit business under the eyes of the Secret Service and the Department of Justice favored them.

The Mexican government, being immediately informed of this plan, naturally relied upon its embassy in Washington to frustrate the plans of the revolutionists and to keep tab on every movement of the enemy. If arms were sent as such from the United States it would be the duty of the government to inform the Mexican government, whose agents would be prepared to seize the goods as they entered Mexico. Shipping arms not correctly labelled was against the law and an offence to be dealt with by the Department of Justice.

So from the nature of the affair it was to be a question as to which side could obtain the first and most reliable information regarding the aims and purposes of the other. Without arms the Madero faction was powerless. With them it was a serious menace to the Diaz government.

At the outset General Madero sent his brother, Gustavus Madero, and Señor Don Sanches Azcona to Washington. They engaged the law firm of Hopkins & Hopkins as their representatives. Thomas S. Hopkins and S. G. Hopkins were legal advisers in the United States of the Chilian revolutionary party which in 1891 overthrew the Balmaceda government.

The Mexican Embassy immediately requested the Department of Justice to use every legal means to prevent the delivery of arms to the insurgents, and the State Department promised to employ the greatest vigilance to prevent illegal traffic in arms. The Department of Justice assigned some of its most expert Secret Service men to keep it informed of every move of the revolutionary agents in the United States, and the Mexican Embassy employed a force of private detectives from the Burns and Pinkerton agencies.

Then the Secret Service duel began. In his office in the Hibbs Building Captain S. G. Hopkins began to receive mysterious visitors. All sorts of men disappeared behind the ground glass door of his private office, and clerks and stenographers speculated in whispers until the stranger emerged. The elevator boys told weird tales of queer men and women loitering about the Hibbs Building at night, and told each other with an air of bravado how they had been offered amounts ranging from $20 to $50 if they would pass some mysterious person into Captain Hopkins' room.

The revolutionary committee relied upon its secret service to inform its members of any danger, but there were many narrow escapes from disastrous discoveries. One morning Captain Hopkins was preparing a despatch to General Madero, stating that a shipment of arms labelled "Furniture fixtures" was on its way. A clerk entered his office with a card inscribed "Chester V. Lord."

"Show him in," said the lawyer.

A middle aged man, engaging and attractive in appearance and manner, entered the office.

"My business is purely confidential," he said. "I am an agent for Francis Bannerman, a New York dealer in arms and ammunition."

"Yes," said Captain Hopkins, with a rising inflection.

"Of course," continued the man, "I am trusting you not to give me away. As an agent of Bannerman I have sold to the Mexican government 7,500,000 rounds of cartridges. The contract was first made orally with Ambassador de la Barra and later was confirmed in writing. At the last moment the Mexican government has declined to pay our price and we stand to lose $38,000. Now, the reason I have come to you is that I believe I can make you an attractive offer for these arms."

The revolutionists were sorely in need of arms and ammunition. The offer seemed sound and was very tempting. Captain Hopkins told "Mr. Lord" to call the following day, as he must consult others before signing a contract. As the visitor stepped toward the door it opened and a messenger boy entered with a telegram.

"Pardon me but for a second," said the lawyer. "This may be important."

He tore open the little yellow envelope and read:—

"Look out for James D. Hallen, who left here this morning for Washington. He will pose as a man having a contract to sell arms to the Mexican government, but is in reality a detective whose instructions are to worm himself into your confidence for the purpose of finding out how your arms are shipped."

The telegram also gave a full description of James D. Hallen and stated that a copy of his instructions had been mailed. It was signed Harvey Phillips. Captain Hopkins read the message in a casual manner. One would never have dreamed from his expressionless face that the description of Hallen applied exactly to "Mr. Lord."

"Pardon me for keeping you waiting," he said pleasantly. "Some of this business is so urgent. Be sure to come to-morrow. I am greatly interested in your offer."

A Mystery by Telephone.

James Hallen had not left the building before a secret service man of the Madero faction was on his trail and every movement was watched. So bold were his methods that in a few days the revolutionary agents were able to take legal means to force him to leave Washington. It was alleged that he plotted to have confederates concealed in the office of the revolutionary committee.

Through the most mysterious channels, in the strangest ways, valuable bits of information came to Captain Hopkins. One morning he had just entered his office early, before any of the clerks were there, when the telephone jangled.

"Is this Captain Hopkins?" came over the wire.

"Right here," said the lawyer.

"Don't ask who this is," said a voice, "but do as I say. Walk out of the office over to Fourteenth street. Stand outside the window of Kiluedinst and look at the photographs. Don't look around and pay no heed to any who may pass you."

What was he to do? It might be a ruse to get him from the office for some purpose. He tested all the locks of the doors, locked his desk, thrust papers he had been working over into the safe and hurried to the street, worried lest he might be doing wrong.

For a few seconds he stood looking in the big plate glass window, which reflected objects in the street like a mirror. A man brushed lightly against him, whispering as he passed:—

"Can you see that man across the street walking by?"

Who his informant was Captain Hopkins did not know. Probably some secret agent of the revolutionists, unknown even to him.

Often after that the lawyer saw the familiar figure of the man who was shadowing him. Then he disappeared. For a few days the lawyer wondered, then forgot about it in the press of affairs. But the vigilance of the agents of Diaz had not relaxed. Captain Hopkins was one day working over some cipher despatches when he was called on the telephone.

"Hurry to your bank," said a voice which did not sound like the one which had told him to go to Kluedinst's shop. "Change a ten dollar bill?"

Captain Hopkins called his partner to the private office. Hurriedly explaining the matter, he said:—

"Please stay in here till I come back. Don't leave the room for an instant; we can't be too careful."

At the bank a man next in line to him whispered:—

Captain Hopkins did not glance at the man who offered the information, but he photographed his watcher in his mind.

Perhaps the most active of the revolutionary agents and Captain Hopkins' most capable ally was Harvey Phillips. Not only was he successful in the cunning with which he checkmated the moves of the Diaz agents, but he got consignment after consignment of arms and ammunition to Madero's army.

The revolutionists needed imperatively 55,000 rounds of ammunition. Mr. Phillips was assigned to the deal because of the urgent need for the supplies. He divided the entire shipment into three parts. A third of the whole consignment he packed in three large drummer's trunks and carried with him as excess baggage. Another batch was packed and labelled "Furniture Fittings" and sent to an agent in El Paso. The remainder was expressed as "Furniture Castings" through the same channels.

So carefully did he cover his tracks that the goods were delivered to the insurgent army, but the Department of Justice ferreted out the moves that had been made. He had violated the interstate traffic law by shipping ammunition labelled "Furniture Fittings" through the States and across the border.

The Department of Justice assigned a detective, A. Scully, to track down Mr. Phillips and arrest him. With a dealer in arms who had sold goods to Phillips, Scully went from New York to Washington. The dealer was to identify Harvey Phillips, but upon arriving in Washington the detective set about to do a little quiet work by himself. He gained entrance to Captain Hopkins' private office on the plea of urgent confidential business and represented himself as Mr. Alfred Stephens.

"I am a dealer in arms," he said, "and if I can get in touch with Mr. Phillips I believe I can make an attractive offer."

"I believe I can put you in touch with Mr. Phillips," said the lawyer. "If you will call back here at five o'clock this afternoon."

"All right," said the detective, and he toyed with his hat so that Captain Hopkins noticed the initials "A. S."

The lawyer was suspicious of every one, and his appointment with the man who called himself Stephens gave him seven hours in which to work. The detective had not been half an hour from the office when Harvey Phillips was closeted with Captain Hopkins. The two men began to suspect trouble. Some way the whole affair did not seem quite right. The initials in the hat argued in favor of the man who had called, for the lawyer was sure that the manner in which he had twirled the derby was entirely natural and was not done with a purpose. It was all but decided that Harvey Phillips would meet the dealer in arms at Captain Hopkins' office. They were only to wait for the report of men who were trailing Stephens. By noon one of the revolutionary secret service men called at the office and reported that "Stephens" had met several strangers in the Union Station and that his actions had been very suspicious. That was enough.

It was decided that Phillips should not meet Stephens.

Arrested and Fined.

Meanwhile the detective had learned that Mr. Phillips was expected to be at the Arlington Hotel between eight and nine o'clock in the evening. Scully and his confederates went to the hotel. The dealer was there to identify Phillips.

"Do you know if Mr. Phillips is around?" asked Scully of Jim Brest, who was at the desk.

"Mr. Phillips? Mr. Phillips?" he repeated. "Oh, yes. He has an engagement here with a Mr. Johnson. He will surely be here at nine o'clock."

Patiently Scully, his colleagues and the dealer who was to identify Phillips waited until nine o'clock. Many a black cigar they smoked before three o'clock in the morning, still waiting for Phillips, who never came. He had left Captain Hopkins' office in disguise and was on his way to New Orleans by the time Scully reached the hotel. Some time later he was arrested in a theatre in Washington, where he was recognized by an agent of the Department of Justice. His case did not come up until after the revolution had been settled and he was fined only $100.

"Look Out for Him," Continued the Voice; "He's Your Shadow."

Captain F. G. Hopkins, the Active Worker for the Success of the Madero Cause.

That was the first important part in the game played by Jim Brest. Later he developed a genius for transmitting information by telegraph. The Secret Service men were marvels at ferreting out codes, and everything depended on being able to inform the revolutionists of how arms were being shipped and when and how they would be delivered. It was a matter almost of minutes, sometimes the getting of ammunition to its destination, before the Diaz agents discovered the scheme. Jim Brest was the originator of the so called "Hebrew drums" of exporters of arms, fictitious business houses which sent bewildering telegrams to fictitious agents in El Paso.

The Secret Service men employed by the Department of Justice watched telegrams closely. Once they came upon the following message sent to Frank Cody, El Paso, Texas:—

"We shipped to-day five hundred tubes, two thousand pills for same. You must be careful not to let any one know you are in communication with our firm. "JULIUS WETSTEIN."

This telegram was sent from the Arlington Hotel, and soon after several others were intercepted. They were of like import and were signed with such names as Sol Lowenthal, Cohen Commercial Company and Isaac Rolusvensky. It was like exploding a bomb in the midst of the secret agents of the Department of Justice and the Mexican Embassy. They had what they deemed a clew to work on. Clever detectives surmised that tubes meant guns and that pills meant cartridges.

A Secret Service man was sent to the Arlington to investigate. At the desk of the telegraph operator of the hotel he said he had a message for Julius Wetstein and asked how he could deliver it.

"You had better see Mr. Brest," said the operator.

At the clerk's desk the detective asked Mr. Brest, "Do you know Mr. Julius Wetstein? I am looking for him."

"Know him?" echoed Brest. "I should say I did. He is a fine fellow and comes in here often."

The detective was encouraged. He asked cautiously:—

"Do you know Mr. Lowenthal—Sol Lowenthal?"

"Sol Lowenthal?" said Brest heartily. "He is the best ever. He and Wetstein are pals—just like brothers. They'll probably come in together."

The detective was pleased. He and his colleagues waited and waited for Julius Wetstein, who never came. While they were waiting agents of the revolutionists obtained a group photograph of them.

Brest and Captain Hopkins had sent the fictitious telegrams to find what detectives were working the telegraph end and to give them something to occupy their minds while real messages were sent. While the Secret Service men were watching for Sol Lowenthal and Julius Wetstein to saunter into the hotel arm in arm a message was sent and an answer received right in the Arlington Hotel. The message read as follows:—

"Andrew Cullie, El Paso, Texas:—

"Raita Yaxon yawek zelir kusun abob kagif occig modix acid rotaw shigs okjol stehx.

"ARMSTRONG."

Translated, this despatch reads:—"Have ordered 2,500 Winchester repeating rifles, .30; will arrive El Paso about January 9 consigned Western Furniture Company. Prepare receive and dispose of same.

"CAPTAIN HOPKINS."

This transaction, which was manipulated under the very eyes of the detectives, was successful, as were many similar ones. The code used was arbitrary for the most part, so that a cipher could not be worked out. Messages signed with real names were only used to lead the investigators astray. Some of the conventions used were Obag for General Francisco I. Madero, Aabo for Gustavus Madero and August Carrol, Armstrong and other names for Captain Hopkins.

It was an open secret, however, that Captain Hopkins and his partner were acting for the revolutionists, and it was only when they wished to hide their movements that the code was used. Showing how close Captain Hopkins was in touch with the heads of the revolution, he sent a telegram at the time an assault was expected on Juarez to Dr. F. Vasques Gomez, who represented the Maderist cause and was at the time in El Paso. Captain Hopkins telegraphed:—

"Should attack Juarez result loss life destruction property El Paso, president might present question Congress attitude of which is uncertain though generally opposed interference. In case intervention authorized Congress, such would be limited prevention fighting frontier. If peace absolutely fails, you should, however, strike immediately if circumstances permit using all means avoid complaints American interests. We are working. S. G. H."

A Woman Takes Part.

One of the biggest scares the revolutionary agents had was caused by a young woman, who brought about an extremely dramatic scene, which all but proved to be a denouement. She was young and very beautiful, and one day she called on Captain Hopkins in his office on the usual "confidential business." She seemed perfectly at home and lost no time in getting to the pith of her mission.

"I am greatly interested in the cause of Madero," she said, "and, being of an adventurous turn of mind, I would like to do some secret work for the party. I understand," she continued casually, "that Harvey Phillips is working for you."

The lawyer was caught off his guard and almost gasped in astonishment. It was before any knew that Phillips was working for the insurgents. Captain Hopkins caught himself just in time.

"Who told you that Mr Phillips was working for us?" he asked sceptically.

"Why Pratt, a detective at headquarters," she remarked carelessly. "I know him and he happened to mention it to me."

Captain Hopkins asked the girl, who had given her name as Miss Wells, to call the following day. She promised to.

Captain Hopkins immediately called Pratt at headquarters on the telephone. He repeated the substance of the conversation with Miss Wells.

"Why," said the detective, "I don't even know myself whether Phillips is working for you. As for Miss Wells, I never heard of her."

"She will be here to-morrow," said Hopkins. "I would like you to meet her."

Miss Wells kept her appointment to the minute. She asked again for work and was explaining that she had no experience when Captain Hopkins interrupted her with the question:—

"How did you say you knew Mr. Phillips was working for us?"

"Why, Pratt, at headquarters, informed me."

"Mr. Pratt," called Captain Hopkins.

The detective entered the office and glared at Miss Wells.

"Do you know this young lady?" asked Captain Hopkins.

"No sir," said Pratt, and the girl blushed and seemed about to faint. "I'm going to take her to headquarters, though."

"Why, what have I done?" stammered Miss Wells, tears welling to her eyes.

Captain Hopkins had had a terrible scare, for at that time the knowledge that Phillips was working for the insurgents would have been almost fatal to the cause, but he argued with the detective in favor of the young woman. At last Pratt consented to let her go. When he had left the office, the girl held out her hand to Captain Hopkins.

"Thank you," she said simply. "You have saved me from disgrace. I was actuated purely by the desire for a lark. I can only repay you by warning you to keep an eye on Mr. Rossi, stopping at the Gordon Hotel."

Then the girl hurried from the office and was not seen again. Gustavus Madero and Señor Azcona were stopping at the Gordon Hotel and investigation showed that Rossi, who posed as a wine agent, was really spying upon them.

Such were the inner workings of the revolution which resulted in the overthrow of the Diaz régime. Surrounded with mystery, wrapped in darkness, those who were thickest in the plot did not even know who their friends were or who to thank for many bits of information which perhaps barely saved them from catastrophe.

HINTS FOR HOUSEWIVES

Keep the cake griddle in good condition by the vigorous use of sandpaper, occasionally using very little grease for frying the cakes.

When making a steamed or boiled pudding, put a pleat in the cloth at the top to allow for the pudding to swell.

A bit of codfish added to salsify, or vegetable oyster, gives that delicate vegetable a flavour that heightens the resemblance to the bivalve.

An unusual but delicious salad is made by combining a sliced onion with a chopped tart apple served with mayonnaise or cooked dressing.

Let eyeglasses lie in alcohol for a few moments, then polish with chamois. If the glasses are set into gold frames a fine camel's hair brush will lift the dust from the edges and make them look like new.

Apples will not turn dark when pared if dropped into water to which lemon juice has been added.

Freshen stale rolls or crackers by tying them in a paper sack apd putting into a hot oven.

A teaspoonful of lemon juice to a quart of water will make rice very white and keep the grains separate when boiled.

When flannel garments must be dried indoors, by all means keep them away from a fire or they will instantly shrink. Hang them in a warm room, but ntver near the fire. —Albany Journal.

GLOVES FOR WASH DAY

Don't go out barehanded to put your clothes on the line in cold weather. It is a foolish and unnecessary tax upon the system, and injurious to the hands.

Gloves and mittens worn on ordinary occasions are apt to be more or less soiled and are not suitable for handling clean clothes. Have a pair for this very purpose.

Cut them from clean white flannel and line them with another thickness of flannel—or make them double—if the material is thin.

They should be kept in a clean place ready for this prticular business and for nothing else. A handy place for them is the clothes-pin bag.

Just a Little Diapepsin Ends Indigestion in Five Minutes

The question as to how long you are going to contniue a sufferer from Indigestion, Dyspepsia or out-of-order Stomach is merely a matter of how soon you begin taking some Diapepsin.

If your Stomach is lacking in digestive power, why not help the stomach to do its work, not with drastic drugs, but a re-enforcement of digestive agents, such as are naturally at work in the stomach.

People with weak Stomachs should take a little Diapepsin occasionally, and there will be no more Indigestion, no feelings like a lump of lead in the stomach, no heartburn, Sour risings, Gas on Stomach or Belching of undigested food, Headaches, Dizziness or Sick Stomach, and, besides, what you eat will not ferment and poison your breath with nauseous odours. All these symptoms resulting from a sour, out-of-order stomach and dyspepsia are generally relieved in five minutes after taking a little Diapepsin.

Go to your druggist and get a 50-cent. case of Pape's Diapepsin now, and you will always go to the table with a hearty appetite, and what you eat will taste good, because your stomach and intestines will be clean and fresh, and you will know there are not going to be any more bad nights and miserable days for you. They freshen you and make you feel like life is worth living.

POSED AS AN OFFICER

Examiner Special:

PARIS, OCT 27.—Germany's famous "Captain of Kopenick," who, by posing in a uniform, took possession of a town a year or two ago and held a military review, has been outdone in France.

An ex-convict named Cognel has just been arrested after posing for several months as a high official of the colonial ministry, and receiving all the honors due to that position. All he had to show was a gorgeous uniform and a bogus Legion of Honour decoration.

Under the name of Durande de Belleford this brazen scamp appeared at the town of Coutances and announced his intention of establishing a school there to train young men for service in the colonies. Very naturally, there was nothing in the town too good for him.

A visit to the general commanding a detachment of the French army stationed near by was but one of his picturesque escapades. The Legion of Honour decoration won him entry into exclusive homes.

After exhausting the social side of the situation the "official" proceeded to establish his school by appointing as head master the father of the woman with whom he had found lodgings.

Not until last week did the trusting townspeople begin to suspect—and even now they will not admit they were fooled except when they gaze at the unpaid bills that have sprung up from all sides. But the police records show their distinguished visitor has had an eventful career, eclipsing that of the world-famous Mme. Humbert in its cleverness and daring of his operations.

Nearly ten years ago the convict Cognel started the Mutual Benefit Society in Paris, but soon fled with $7,000 of the society's money. Later, under another name, he opened a bank in Mano, where he handled funds estimated at $20,000,000. He lived in great style for a time and then fled with $100,000. He escaped from officers who had arrested him by leaping from a boat and swimming ashore. Two years later he was again captured and sent to prison for three years.

The resourceful fellow began operations again as soon as he was free by representing himself as an agent of the Peruvian Government to sell securities. He inveigled hundreds into investing, some heavily, but got away before the fraudulent nature of the securities was discovered. His next appearance was at Coutances.

SOME LINES TO KITTY

Oh, Kitty ,Kitty, where are you now?
My heart for you doth ache;
In vain I search each tree and bough.
Alas! It is too late.

You know I told you not to stray
From out the garden gate,
But then, you see, you disobey;
And now—what is your fate?

Have you gone looking for those boys
Whose names are Arthur and Willie?
If so, you'll frighten at the noise
Of car and puffing Billy.

So come back now and don't delay;
Your milk is waiting here.
What shall I say on Saturday
When both they reappear?

I know that Arthur will feel sad,
And Willie! He will cry;
For how could anyone be glad,
Yes! even though they try.

For you have such a sweet, sweet face,
And eyes as blue, as blue;
And paws so swift to run a race,
And such nice whiskers too.

I know Mr. Mouse he'll not cry
To think that you are gone;
He'll run about and say, "Oh, my!
What fun we've been kept from.

"But now we'll run into the flour,
And look for sweet things, too;
Well have such fun from hour to hour—
I like this, Mrs. Mouse, don't you?"

And what will Arthur's mother say
If she sees you no more?
She might blame me you've strayed away.
Oh, dear! My heart is sore.

If you'll come back this very night
I'll shut you out no more;
I'll close the door so very tight,
And then your trouble's o'er.

SOME LARGEST THING IN CANADA

Canada has the largest wheat field in the world, the largest elevator and the largest mill, says Oakville Star. The largest lift lock in the world is at Peterboro'. The longest bridge span is being built at Quebec. The largest railway yard in the Empire is at Winnipeg, and the largest collieries in the world are at Nova Scotia. Canada has the most prolific and extensive sea fisheries in the world, the largest silver, nickel and copper mines and the thickest known coal seam in the world.

RACE FOR MOTHERS

A feature of some sports at Great Bramley, Essex, was a Marathon race over a distance of five miles—for mothers of not fewer than six children. Each competitor was required to wheel her youngest child in a perambulator.

TOOK OATH AND TESTAMENT

After taking the oath at Rhyl a witness was placing the Testament in his pocket, when the clerk exclaimed: "We shall want that again."

EELS AS FOOD

The Scottish refusal to regard eels as food may possibly have a further explanation than instinctive repugnance to the snake-like appearance of the fish. Dean Ramsay, speaking of the horror of swine formerly general in Scotland, recalls hearing an old Scottish gentleman gravely ask, "Were not swine forbidden under the law and cursed under the Gospel?" Now, one finds many Scots at any rate who refuse to touch shellfish of any kind, as crabs or lobsters, as well as eels. All this looks very like obedience to the prohibition in Leviticus of "all that have not fins and scales in the seas and in the rivers." For the eel's scales are not apparent and its fins inconspicuous.

Special Train Menagerie

A special train recently left Nairobi for Zanzibar containing a record shipment of wild animals intended for a menagerie at Hamburg. The game was collected by a hunting party in British and German East Africa. This is the largest shipment of game which has ever left the country. It embraces eight giraffes, 11 hippopotami, two rhinoceroses, and about 50 antelopes and gazelles.

A GOOD WANT AD.

Is, of course, one which will bring the greatest number of replies or answers. It is a law that increased demand makes certain the quickest sale.

The Want Ad. is the briefest kind of an ad. that is ever written, and hence, in its brevity there must be wit-wisdom. The Want Ad. can only interest the reader on the basis of his interest. Each reader is interested in each and all of the five essentials every Want Ad. These essentials, in the order of their importance, are, first, the names of the article or thing advertised; second, the quality of the article or the kind of thing advertised; third, the price of the article or thing advertised; fourth, the address, ('phone, or street number) of the advertiser, and, fifth, the name of the advertiser.

When the above essentials are fully and truthfully stated in the Want Ad., the best results are obtained; but in proportion to the number of these essentials omitted from the Ad., does the advertiser curtail the results to his ad. Each Want ad. is an opportunity; look for them in The Examiner. 'Phone 57.

BAFFLES DOCTORS

Girl in Strange Plight as Result of Falling Into Mysterious Sleep, Following a Party

CANNOT BE AROUSED

MIDDLETOWN, N.Y., OCT. 26.—Falling into a comatose state after attending a dance last Friday night, Miss Tillie Williams, 17 years old, a governess in the family of Rev. Francis S. Haines, pastor of the Presbyterian Church at Goshen, has been asleep for more than seventy-five hours, and every effort to revive her completely has been futile. The case is baffling physicians.

In many respects the case resembles that of Miss Hazel Schmidt, a young woman of Vandalia, Mo., who lay in a comatose state for 105 days. Although Miss Williams has yielded to medical treatment sufficiently to awake for a moment at times, she has never fully regained her faculties. As soon as efforts to revive her were abandoned, she again sank into the state of catalepsy which has marked her condition from the beginning of her peculiar trance.

Miss Williams attended a moving picture show at Goshen Friday evening, and was one of many dancers at the party given by the management after the show. She appeared to be in excellent spirits, and there was nothing in her manner to indicate that she was later to fall into a death-like trance. She returned to the parsonage and retired for the night, and it was only when she failed to arise and prepare breakfast on the following morning that her condition was discovered.

Mrs. Haines went to Miss Williams' room and found her apparently asleep. She sought to awaken her, but in vain. A physician was called in, but after an hour's hard work he, too, was forced to abandon the task. Three hours later, when it was found that the girl still slept soundly, another physician was called in, but was unable to awaken the young woman.

Miss Williams opened her eyes about 6 o'clock on Saturday evening, looked about her in a bewildered manner, then lapsed into her state of somnolence, which continued until late Sunday afternoon. The physicians who were on watch applied restoratives and managed to revive her sufficiently to enable them to take her to the home of her grandfather, Silas H. Case, in Greenwich Street, where she was put in bed. Despite the efforts of the physicians to prevent it, she fell asleep almost immediately and lay immovable until Monday afternoon, when she partly awoke with symptoms of delirium.

Since yesterday afternoon Miss Williams has slept fitfully, and although she opens her eyes at intervals, it is evident that she recognizes no one. Friends of the young woman who were with her at the dance Friday evening say that nothing unusual occurred and that Miss Williams seemed to be enjoying herself to the utmost. In her fits of delirium the young woman talks of nothing but dancing, and it is thought her enthusiasm over this form of entertainment may have occasioned the strange stupor.

Dr. Cook Driven From The Stage

COPENHAGEN, Oct. 25.—Dr. Frederick A. Cook's theatrical attempt last night to vindicate his reputation by a lecture in the hall where two years ago he addressed the Royal Family and some of the most prominent people of Denmark under the auspices of the Geographical Society on the occasion of his triumphal entrance into the capital, resulted in extremely riotous scenes. Dr. Cook was finally compelled to retire ingloriously by the back door.

Ever since it was announced that Cook was returning to this city for the purpose of lecturing, the newspapers and the people have been strongly stirred, and threats of violence were freely circulated. Fifteen hundred persons assembled in the hall, and a great crowd surrounded the approaches o the building. Those outside greeted Dr. Cook's appearance with an uproar of insulting cries. He was escorted by police, however, and no actual violence was attempted.

The meeting within the hall was turbulent throughout. A small fraction of the audience supported Dr. Cook and applauded his efforts. The others hissed continually, with the result that the two sides almost came to blows. Count Holstein-Ledreborg, son of the former premier who entertained Dr. Cook at his historical castle on the explorer's previous visit, was chairman.

The lecturer talked for an hour, illustrating his recital by means of lantern slides, and repeating for the most part his original lecture.

Dr. Norman Hansen, the Danish explorer, who formerly was a warm supporter of Cook, started the trouble by loudly denouncing Cook as a pure swindler. The climax was reached when an alleged picture of the North Pole was thrown upon the screen. The audience was so hostile that Cook stopped his lecture and withdrew. He was escorted by a strong detachment of police to his hotel by the side streets.

You have to hand it to Albert Smoke.

Galloping home a mile ahead of his field, the wonderful Indian runner carried off the senior Examiner road race for the third year in succession yesterday, and did it in such decisive fashion and in such magnificent time that he may rightly and justly be pronounced one of the best, if not the best, ten miler in Canada. His form may be judged by the fact that he broke his own record for the distance by 1 min. 16 4-5 seconds, negotiating the ten miles in the marvellous time of 53 mins. 58 2-5 secs. Figure it out for yourself. In a field which he totally outclassed and with no opposition to force him to go the limit, the young Mississauga, running by himself, tore off ten miles in time that is getting pretty close to Canadian track records for the distance. Had he had any one to make him extend himself, he would have undoubtedly bettered even this wonderful time, as he was full of running at the finish and flashed across the line like a quarter-miler. Undoubtedly Smoke is one grand natural runner, with a long, easy stride, pretty to watch, and superb endurance. The faster he goes, the better he seems to like it, and this boy (he is barely twenty-one) would seem to be the logical successor to Tom Longboat. Certainly his performance yesterday entitles him to this designation.

The senior event yesterday was in two divisions, one composed solely of Smoke, and the other comprising the balance of the starters, with Lean and Willis as the leaders. There was no one to give the great Indian a battle. He simply went away from the crowd after looking them over for a mile, and when he started to cut loose he shot ahead so fast that his rivals were soon out of sight and they never saw him again until the race was over. Mile after mile he tore off never faltering, his long easy stride eating up the distance with no apparent exertion, and his legs and arms moving like a piece of well-oiled machinery. His action is the poetry of motion and he never seems to know the meaning of tired—the word is apparently not in his dictionary. He evidently had the shattering of the record in his mind, for even with the race well in hand, he kept up the same speedy gait, and his lead steadily grew until at the finish, he was over a mile ahead of his nearest opponent. It was the easiest victory in the history of the Examiner races.

The junior race was a much better contested affair, with a battle royal for the first positions. Douro and Ennismore fought it out for first place, and the honours finally went to the township on the east side of the Otonabee, when Frank Leahy, winner last year, breasted the tape a scant yard ahead of Tommy McAuliffe, an unknown Ennismore starter who ran a beautiful race. These two, with plucky little Cecil Armstrong of the Y.M.C.A., made a runaway affair of the junior battle, the trio going away from the bunch at the start and having the contest between themselves. The Ennismore-Douro team outlasted the Y.M.C.A. youngster, and for the last mile it was between Leahy and McAuliffe, with the former finally carrying off first prize for the second time. Fifteen juniors lined up before the starter and eleven negotiated the five miles to the Examiner office. Although the size of the junior field was cut down by the new rule which the Examiner enforced this year, of not allowing boys under fourteen years to compete, it was unanimously agreed that this condition was a good one and provided a classier field and a better race. Leahy, the junior winner, is a strong boy of good stride and he showed ability to go the distance and head-work at the same time. Too much credit cannot be given to McAuliffe for the hard battle he gave the winner. The Ennismore boy was running his first race, knew nothing of the course or of the runners he was up against, and his good race will earn him the admiration of all who saw the struggle. Armstrong also deserves credit. He is lighter and smaller than the other two and in addition had the handicap of a bad boil which interfered somewhat with his chances.

The races were highly successful from every point of view. Although the decisive way in which Smoke carried off the senior, prevented an exciting finish such as the memorable clash between Ernie Wilson and Ben Howard of Hiawatha, yet the wonderful performance of the three times winner, more than made up for the absence of a brush at the climax. The junior race provided the thrills at the finish. There was an enormous crowd on hand for the races, the greatest congestion being from the Y.M.C.A. to the Examiner office, although the street was lined all the way to Smith street, and even the country road had its share of spectators. At Lakefield there was a crowd out to see the start and everywhere along the line there were groups watching for the runners to go by. Bicycles, motor cycles, autos and buggies were everywhere on the road, but kept out of the way in good style, at least there have been no complaints heard from the runners. The crowd at the finish was handled in splendid style by the police, under the direction of Chief Thompson, who had officers stationed at Brock street and kept all vehicular traffic above that corner while the finish was on. The pavements on both sides of the street had been roped off and the crowd was kept back in fine fashion. Every window in the block had its group of watchers and the roofs of the buildings were converted into temporary grand-stands, affording a splendid view of the finish.

The weatherman viewed the Examiner races with a kindly eye as usual. It was bright and cool, with only a slight wind, while the roads could not have been in better shape. They were in splendid contrast to the slippery going last year.

As a result of his three victories in succession, Albert Smoke becomes the permanent possessor of the Examiner Trophy, which the Examiner will hand over to him most cheerfully, feeling that the Indian boy richly deserves the cup. He has not only won the race three years in a row, but has also broken the record twice. In addition to the cup he receives the beautiful diamond ring that was offered for first prize.

THE EXAMINER TROPHY,

Emblematic of the road racing championship of the Midland Counties which was won by Albert Smoke for the third time in succession yesterday, and which now becomes the permanent property of the Chemong boy. The Examiner Cup was first put up for competition in 1906. The other winners were Ray Best in 1906, Ernie Wilson in 1907 and J. H. Adams in 1908.

CORNER STONE OF THE NEW PROTESTANT HOME LAID

Interesting Informal Event Took Place on Saturday Afternoon —Historical Address Was Read and Placed in Cavity.

PRESENTATION MADE

Now that the erection of the structure of the new Protestant Home has so far advanced as to warrant the ceremony, the corner stone of that building was laid at 3 o'clock on Saturday last with the usual formalities attendant upon such an occasion. It was, however, quite an unofficial affair, as the formal opening of the Home will not take place until the early spring of 1912. The assembly was therefore an impromptu one and consequently small.

The Rev. Canon Davidson opened the ceremony with a solemn invocation and psalm, after which Mr. J. H. Burnham read the following address:

Following is the history of the Peterborough Protestant Home, from 1862 to 1911:

This Association, which began its work as the Peterborough Relief Society, was organized on Nov. 26th, 1862. The first meeting was held in Col. Haultain's office with Mrs. Wallace as President, and Mrs. Haultain as Secretary.

On December 2nd, 1863, by permission of the Mayor, a meeting was held in the Town Hall, when Mrs. James Hall was elected President.

In May, 1865, Mr. R. A. Morrow generously gave the use of one of his houses on Sherbrooke street to the Society, and on that account the name was changed to the Peterborough Protestant Home.

In 1870, the late Sheriff, father of the present Sheriff, and the City Solicitor, purchased the building on Stewart street, and presented it to the Board of the Home. In July, 1870, the inmates moved into this building and it has been occupied since that date.

The original intention was only to care for children and destitute old women, but as cases of old men who were in need, came before the Board, from time to time, it was decided to admit them.

There being no endowment, the Home was entirely dependent for support on the generosity of its friends. About the year 1866, the late Mr. Carnegie, then M.P.P. for this riding, used his influence with the Government, and secured a grant of 7 cents a head per diem, supplemented by 2 cents for adults and 4 cents for children over ten years of age.

In 1890, Mrs. Nicholls, an old and faithful friend of the Home, passed away, leaving a handsome Endowment Fund of twenty thousand dollars, the interest of which has enabled the Board to keep free from debt, and which is to be kept intact in future for the maintenance of the Home.

Miss Roger, the late President, was connected with the work from its earliest days, and no other member of

TURKS ATTACK

Aided by Their Arab Allies They Make Onslaught on Italians and Drive Them Back into Fortifications

SHOWED PROWESS

Special Wire to The Examiner.

TORONTO, October 31.—Constantinople despatches received here indicate that the Turkish troops with ally Arabs, made several fierce onslaughts on the Italian outposts on Monday, driving several regiments of these troops to the inner fortifications of Tripoli. The attacks took place outside the range of the guns of the warships in the harbour, and on equal term, without naval assistance. The Turks proved themselves skilful and most courageous fighters. It is said that no quarter was given on either side, the Arabs being highly incensed over alleged Italian indignities to the native women and children. After inflicting severe punishment on the Italians the Turks withdrew.

SHOOTING ACCIDENT

Geo. James Injured While Hunting With Several Companions at Wallis' Grove Yesterday Afternoon

BULLET IN LEG

George James, a lad employed and living at 505 Sherbrooke street, was the victim of a painful shooting accident yesterday. He, with some other boys, were out shooting in the woods, about five miles west of the city, when one of them stumbled over a tree stump, and having his finger upon the trigger of his gun, discharged it. George, who was near by received the bullet in his leg. He was taken to his home, where Dr. Young and Dr. Boucher placed him under chloroform and extracted the bullet, which, it was found, had passed right through the bone. The lad is now doing well.

Hon. Mr. MacKay Has Resigned

Special to The Examiner:

TORONTO, OCT. 31.—Previous to a general meeting of the Ontario Reform Association this morning, the Liberal members of the Provincial House and some of the prospective candidates, held a caucus, at which Hon. A. G. MacKay tendered his resignation as leader of the Liberal party in Ontario. The caucus at first passed an unanimous resolution declining to accept the resignation, but finally accepted it by a resolution proposed by Mr. J. C. Elliott, seconded by Col. Atkinson. The resolution expressed the opinion that the attacks made in the courts and on the streets were without foundation and cowardly. In making a statement, Mr. MacKay said that the action recently launched against him in the Ontario High Court was absolute blackmail. He assured all his friends that an investigation would prove this.

TOTAL PROHIBITION PROPOSED AS LIBERAL PLATFORM UNDER DISCUSSION TO-DAY

Special Wire to the Examiner.

TORONTO, OCT. 31—Pres. H. M. Mowatt's address, practically proposing the adoption as the first Liberal plank, the abolition of all barroom licenses in the Province of Ontario after 1913, was the great point of discussion at the Ontario General Reform Association meeting today. Delegates from various parts of the Province expressed a variety of ideas on the subject. Some thought it was too drastic; others expressed the belief that the tradition of the Liberal party demanded such a policy.

Arthur Henderson, of Sarnia, said Ontario would be under prohibition in ten years, and the Liberal party should row the Temperance lifeboat to shore. Hugh Guthrie, of Guelph, also made an eloquent speech and advised an immediate platform of total prohibition. This seemed to meet the general opinion of the meeting, although definite action was left to the parliamentary candidates. Regarding the bilingual question there seemed a general opinion that it should be left to the Conservative Government to worry out. As to the leadership it is thought N. W. Rowell, K.C., of Toronto, is most likely.

ROUSING RALLY HELD IN INTERESTS OF MR. HALL STIRRING ADDRESSES

Splendid Meeting Held in the Liberal Committee Rooms on Saturday—Speeches by the Candidate, Hon. J. R. Stratton and Mr. G. N. Gordon---Whitney Government and its Policy Arraigned.

A large attendance of workers was at Mr. Hall's Committee rooms on Saturday night.

Mr. G. N. Gordon occupied the chair in the absence of the president of the Association. He opened the speaking by referring to the excellent manner in which the campaign in Mr. Hall's interests had begun.

He referred to the fact of the elections being likely to be held early in December — nominations on the 4th and polling on the 11th. He urged the electors to be prepared to show their resentment at the unfair action of Sir James Whitney in bringing on the elections at so inopportune a time. He referred to the fact of the local Conservatives appointing a patronage committee to relieve the tension that existed over the spoils of office. They had met, and, after solemn deliberation, had done their duty by Conservative workers, by appointing the members of the committee to important Dominion offices that were not vacant. The personnel of the offices was decided upon; but the axe was not to be used to create vacancies till after the elections. The other workers were to have hopes held out to them to stimulate them to exertion during the campaign. Mr. Grain urged the appointment of energetic working committees, who would relieve the candidate of a great deal of work, and leave him more free to carry on his share of campaign work—he would, even with the best support, have enough to do, and he would do it—and all the better if he did not have also to do the work that should fall upon his friends. He then called upon the candidate, Mr. Hall to address the meeting.

Mr. R. R. Hall, the candidate, after thanking his supporters for the interest they were manifesting in his candidature, said, after referring to the excellent support he was receiving for those who had not been on the Liberal side at the last provincial election, he entered into a general discussion of the issues of the present contest. In dealing with the question of education, he pointed out how the Public Schools of the country had been demoralized. The abolition of the Model Schools, said Mr. Hall, was one of the most shortsighted steps that the Whitney Government has ever taken. It has had the effect of demoralizing our Public School system. It had wrought a great injury to the rural population in depriving pupils of the advantage of being taught by trained and experienced teachers. It has worked a great injustice to the poor man's son and daughter, who desire to enter the teaching profession by placing the obtaining of a certificate entirely out of their reach. Moreover, the Whitney Government have admitted their folly and are again restoring some of our model schools. They should restore more. In order to appreciate the extent to which the rural population has suffered, we have, he said, only to look at the reports of the different inspectors of Public Schools, showing the large proportion of unqualified teachers in them.

Unqualified Teachers.

Mr. Hall presented a list of a number of the inspectorates giving the number of rural school teachers in each, and the number of unqualified teachers in each, and the percentage of unqualified teachers in each.

Inspectorate	No. of Rural School Teachers	No. of Unqualified Teachers	Percentage of Unqualified Teachers
Frontenac and Addington	79	61	70%
Hastings, N.	86	57	66
Parry Sound, S.	90	52	65
Haliburton, Parry Sound, Muskoka, E.	93	58	63
Nipissing, N.	50	31	62
Manitoulin Island	74	45	60
Muskoka, W.	83	44	53
Peterborough, E.	74	31	42

Carleton N. and Lanark E.	94	24	25
Grey E.	93	23	24
Grey W.	74	16	21
Galway and Cavendish	5	2	40

It was apparent, said Mr. Hall, that in a large number of our public schools the proper education of children is being neglected, not only that of French pupils, but English pupils as well. In Nipissing, Manitoulin Islands, and Parry Sound, where there are large French settlements, it is evident that the French people were being deprived of the advantage of receiving a thorough knowledge of the English language. The Government should take proper steps to remove that handicap so that they would have the opportunity of acquiring a proper knowledge of the English tongue.

Educational Policy Denounced.

The Educational policy of the Whitney Government, during the past seven years had on a standing disgrace to the Province, which once boasted of having the finest educational system in the world. It will be remembered that on the occasion of the visit of the present Lord Chief Justice of England to Ontario during the Chicago Exhibition, in 1893, he made the pronouncement that the educational system in the Province of Ontario was one of the finest systems in use in the world.

"I regret," said Mr. Hall, "to assert that it is now one of the worst "and it has become so bad, and is "so rapidly declining that there is a "widespread, deep-rooted dissatisfaction with the Whitney Government "in every city, town and village, and "in every township in the Province "of Ontario. Even some of their own "candidates, in the present campaign "are condemning their educational "policy and are hastening the fall of "the Government. It is a standing "disgrace to the fair fame of the Pro"vince of Ontario that under the "Whitney Government a thorough "elementary education is not being "given in our Public Schools, and "that a thorough knowledge of the "English language cannot be obtained".

The Whitney Government were seeking to avoid the just condemnation that awaits them by prematurely dissolving the house and seeking to take advantage of the Borden wave of victory, but the awakened public indignation against them on their educational policy was so strong and so irresistible that they would be overwhelmed in the undertow of the Borden wave.

Trained Qualified Teachers.

It was inconceivable why the Whitney Government had not taken steps long ago to train up a body of teachers having the special qualifications and knowledge necessary to teach French, German, or other pupils of foreign extraction the English language along with their elementary education. On account of the fact that these teachers would have special qualifications, they naturally should receive larger remuneration than is usually paid to the ordinary rural school teacher and inasmuch as the whole Province is interested in having all its citizens able to speak the English Language, the Provincial Government should supplement such teachers' salaries, according to the successful results attained. By pursuing such a course our French, German, and other foreign fellow citizens would be placed on an equal footing with the English-speaking people in the Province, and in a short time every man, woman and child would be able to speak the English tongue.

Why Does Peterborough Not Get New Industries?

Leaving the educational question, Mr. Hall adverted to the industrial situation, and asked what obstacles stand in the way of Peterborough attracting new industries? What were the difficulties that our City Council and Board of Trade have to contend with in inducing new industries to locate in Peterborough? There must be some substantial reason. We have had the Canadian General Electric Company located here because Peterborough was a splendid distributing point and furnished splendid facilities for water power. The Quaker Oats Company located here for like reasons, with the additional reason that the Trent Canal would prove to be a valuable freight regulator when completed. Within the last few years manufacturers who proposed to locate in Canada, have looked over the ground, have left Peterborough alone, and have located in the Niagara Peninsula. Why? The reason could easily be found. Down to the 31st of October, 1910, the Hydro-Electric Power Commission had expended upon transmission lines and transforming stations, in the Niagara Peninsula, $3,287,441.69, and since that time this same commission had expended over a million dollars more. These large expenditures had been made out of the general funds of the Province to enable the Niagara Pen-

POLICY, NOT PRINCIPLE.

The Ontario friends of Mr. Borden who waved the flag and threw up their hats for Mr. R. L. Borden as the champion of Ontario principles, and as an antidote against "French denomination," will be pleased, no doubt, to see how Mr. Borden has held "French aggression" at arm's length, by the manner in which he has positively toadied to the baser,—the disloyal—element, of French Canadians. He has taken three poisonous French Nationalists—typical leaders of the Nationalist "nest of traitors," into his cabinet, giving the best and most responsible portfolios in the power of a Premier of Canada to give. He has made another of this brood Deputy-speaker and selected still another to voice loyal Canadian sentiment in the reply to the speech from the throne, delivered by a Royal Governor-General; and he has further toadied to "French influence" by appointing Hon. A. C. Lariviere, of St. Boniface, Manitoba, to a life berth in the Senate. In all these preferments and appointments, Mr. Borden has consulted the feeling and preferences of his Ontario friends, less than he has consulted the political advantage of himself and his party. He has certainly, from their point of view, consulted policy more than principle.

BACKWARD AND FORWARD?

A statement has recently been issued, showing the enormous sums spent upon the navies of the world in the past ten years; the total reaching, in round numbers, 3,389 million dollars. The following are the details:

	Expenditure.	New construction
Great Britain	£362,380,000	£117,975,000
United States	230,136,000	73,410,000
Germany	147,539,000	70,202,000
France	132,139,000	47,286,000
Russia	111,346,000	32,858,000
Italy	60,229,000	16,550,000
Japan	57,701,000	15,231,000
Austria	30,814,000	14,833,000
Total	£1,122,284,000	£388,343,000

Of this tremendous total, nearly a third has been spent by Great Britain. This has not been spent in the interests of aggression, but of the protection of her trade and commerce, and that of the several dominions. To this expenditure, Canada has contributed practically nothing, till under the Liberal government we made the beginnings of a navy, though the trade of Canada that needs protection in the matters of trade is nearly one-seventh of that of the United Kingdom. How can Canada, in decency, in the matter of self-respect, fail to recognise her responsibility in the matter of bearing a share of the burden of Imperial defence? We need a navy of our own, to not only do our duty in this regard, but to protect our own coasts. We have entered upon both aspects of these duties; we have the beginning of a navy established by parliament, and have let contracts for adding to our navy. Shall we go back and ask the people if we shall go back upon a deliberately decided policy and play fast and loose, not only with our imperial obligations, but with the matter of protecting our coasts and our valuable fisheries, in respect of which we lose more in one year without protection, than the whole cost of our naval expenditure. Shall we go backward or forward?

BILINGUAL SCHOOLS.

Mr. W. J. Johnston, building contractor, Mr. Dawson Kennedy, Mr. W. A. Kindred and Mr. Wilfrid Shiner, interviewed Mr. R. R. Hall, Liberal candidate on Saturday afternoon last, as to his attitude on the bilingual school question. After a discussion of a general character, in which the deputation and Mr. Hall, considered the improbability of a French child ever learning the English language properly unless it begin in its early years, Mr. Hall stated that he would take the earliest opportunity to make his views public. He did this, incidentally, at Saturday night's meeting, as will be seen by reference to a report of his remarks in this issue. Mr. Hall will take an early opportunity to state his position upon the bilingual schools question, explicitly and definitely.

NO IMPROVEMENT.

In spite of the large addition made every municipal election to the dry districts of Canada, it seems that the consumption of strong drink and beer increases. The inland revenue returns show a decided increase in consumption of liquors and tobaccoes. Last year the consumption of strong drink per head, was 880 thousandths of a gallon; the previous year it was 815 thousandths of a gallon per head. A simila rincrease in the quantity of beer drunk is shown. The total quantity of tobacco used was nearly 19 million pounds as against nearly 17 millions in 1910. The cigarette shows an increased popularity. Last year the enormous quantity of 600 million cigarettes was smoked, as against 451 millions in 1910, and the cigars smoked grew from 208 millions in 1910, to 227 1-2 millions in the fiscal year of 1910-11. Does it seem that the limitation of freedom of access of the public to strong drink and tobacco removes the desire for their use any more than making food scarce will remove hunger. The reform that does not come from within, from principle and the exercise of good will, is not likely to be valuable and permanent.

THE BI-LINGUAL SCHOOLS.

There are more than three hundred schools in the Province where the French language is used to some extent; that is, it is used by the teachers for the purpose of instructing French pupils in the English language. There are no schools legally in which French is taught in place of English.—London Free Press

That's the whole point. Is the French language used in that way and for that purpose in those three hundred schools?

Or, its use having been introduced for that purpose, is the purpose being shouldered aside, and is French being taught on its own account, and is the right to teach it instead of English being established in parts of the Province where French is the language of the teachers, trustees, parents and children?

Evidently Bishop Fallon, when he wrote his famous letter in regard to which his confidence was so grossly abused, was of the opinion that French was not being used as the medium for teaching English, but that the language of Quebec had entered Ontario and was engaged in a campaign of conquest—was spreading, entrenching itself, and would soon be strong enough, if it is not so already, to throw off all disguise and become the exclusive school language of those who choose to use it.

The Free Press says some Liberal newspapers are seeking "to stir up strife" by talking about the bi-lingual schools. There is no room for strife if French is being honestly used as a means of teaching English. There will be no strife unless there ought to be. There will be none unless the liberality of the present arrangement is being abused.

There is something altogether childish in the complaint that Liberal newspapers are trying to make strife when they ask the Ontario Government to produce Dr. Merchant's report and face the issue instead of hurrying on the elections with the document hidden behind their backs. A Premier of whom the boast is made that he cannot live up to the words of his poet by evading the only issue calling for boldness that has arisen since he entered office.

Is bold enough to be honest,
And honest enough to be bold,

SIR JAMES WHITNEY'S MOUSE.

Sir James Whitney has repeated, in his own pompous and consequential way the legend of the mountain in labour bringing forth a mouse. For a month or so, Sir James has been hatching a manifesto, which was to serve three purposes; to justify his bringing on the elections at an unreasonable time and unseasonable time to announce the date and to be a declaration of policy that would justify the people in renewing their confidence in his government. His manifesto was issued to-day and is truly a ridiculus mus. It is a disappointment to his friends and a subject of laughter to his opponents. Sir James' manifesto is largely a matter for the dead, rather than the living. It consists, in the main, of a reference to and a justification of, if not apology for, his past administration. It recounts what his government has done, and takes credit for many things that on investigation and examination will not be to his credit. The future is but scantly touched upon, and Sir James, in view of his scant fulfillment of the expectations raised, when he came into power, has veen very cautious in making promises. He speaks of improvement of provincial highways, practical instruction in agriculture, and better work in developing New Ontario. He proposes to do some of these things by enlisting the help of the Dominion Government—a humiliation for a magnificent, self-entained and resourceful province like Ontario, which should be able, at this day, to stand alone, and would be, if it had a Government at its head with initiative enough to start a wheelbarrow. Sir James Whitney's manifesto is strong in words, but weak in promise of progressive legislation. It fails to touch many vital and important questions. The working man and legislation in his interests, are left severely alone; the burning question of bilingual schools is studiously ignored. While nominating conventions pin down Conservative candidates to definite grounds on this subject, Sir James does not give a hint of what his government will do. On the whole, Sir James Whitney's long expected manifesto is weak and disappointing, and as a battle cry will little serve to rouse enthusiasm amongst his friends, or discourage his opponents.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

The rural population of Ontario under the Whitney government, is decreasing.

In 1875 there were 6,185 licenses granted in the Province of Ontario. To-day there are about 1875.

If succession duties are increased, the funds should be applied to the help of the consumptive poor.

The Hydro-Electric power schemes of the Ontario government are detrimental to the City of Peterborough.

Some different arrangements should be made, by which the Hospitals receive greater assistance from the Ontario Government.

A CANADIAN NAVY NEEDED FOR SELF-PROTECTION

Twice the Price of a Cruiser Stolen for British Columbia Fisheries Every Year, in Default of Effective Naval Protection.

(From the Vancouver Sunset.)

The newspapers are asking what the Government intends to do about the Canadian Navy. The future of the navy is of more interest to British Columbia than to any other part of Canada. This province was looking forward to the building on this coast of battleships, or cruisers, at least, and all the profuse money-spending that it would mean. Now all these great expectations are likely to melt away like smoke from the Rainbow's funnels. The Pacific Coast half of the Canadian navy has made herself useful. The Niobe may be a bigger ship and her officers may be better dancers and more ornamental when they are ashore, but the Rainbow has done real work, and has shown that she is good for something else besides sending her wardrobe ashore in gilded uniforms to make colour splashes in a ballroom.

She has done more real work, the kind her grey paint means, than most landsmen know. The waterfronts of Vancouver and Victoria will tell you that sailing out of Seattle is a pirate fleet. They are small vessels, and the sailormen and fishermen on the coast call them "smoke-boats," because they are small and dirty, and the cook's galley is the focsle. Some are very small and have only one mast; some are larger and have two; the bald-headed schooner rig. They sail when there is any breeze, but most of them use the gasoline engine. They fish for halibut in Hecate Straits. They fish whegever they can find a "spot o' fish," but mostly they fish close inshore, or rather they used to. Off Cape Scott, or on the Goose Island grounds, or any of the Hecate Strait halibut banks you can see at any time a flock of these sea coyotes.

They used to laugh at the three mile limit. They used to smile at the tiny Kestrel ,a harbor tug masquerading as a cruiser. The "smoke boat" skippers seem to have inherited buccaneering tendencies from their distant ancestors,the men of the long ships, the sea-robbers of the north. They are all of the hay-colouerd race, called "Souwegians" at sea, and "Square heads" ashore. They are good men ashore, but better men afloat.

In a few years they have stolen twice the price of the Rainbow in Canadian halibut or more than that. Before the Rainbow came on this coast they joyously sent their dories close inshore and harvested the plank sided halibut in five fathoms of water within a mile of the land. When the blue-eyed Norse skippers, watching through their glasses, saw the little steam-laundry-tub Kestrel coming trudging over the wet horizon of the grey sea at her sluggard six knots, they had plenty of time to get their dories over the rail and get outside the limit before the slow-coach cruiser could get close enough to make a good guess at their identity. These "smoke-boats" were very much alike. They seldom had to cut any gear, that is, to cut their trawls. They almost always had time to haul their trawls. If the Kestrel followed them they merely gave their pounding, stinking old gasoline engines a little more gas and they had the cruiser "hull down" in a couple of hours.

The Rainbow threw the fear of Davey Jones and the Canadian navy into these cheerful fish-pirates. She could steam a good sixteen knots, she had guns that would shoot and gunners that knew how to aim them. In a fog that made her into the grey ghost of a ship she surprised a big smoke boat fishing inside, and captured her. The Souwegian fishermen knew her speed to half a' revolution, and they knew that she kept a good look out. So the "smoke-boats" stayed outside to fish. This is how the Rainbow has earned her cost and keep, which is more than the Niobe has done.

THE NAVAL PROBLEM

(Brantford Expositor.)

The Ottawa Journal, which is sometimes supposed to reflect Mr. Borden's views on public questions, but disclaims being in any way inspired, is out with a "double-leaded" article on the navy question. In this article it expresses an opinion unfavourable to the contribution of dreadnoughts or cash to the Imperial strength. The latter proposal it considers the more objectionable as it would be calculated to provoke an annual squabble in Canada over the principle and over the amount as well, that Canadians would be irritated by the idea of sending money out of the country to be spent elsewhere by somebody with whom this country has no say, while there would be neither educational value nor national satisfaction for Canada herself. It concludes:

It is true that some time must elapse before a Canadian navy can be an efficient factor in Imperial defence. But so must some time elapse before anything that Canada could do would be an efficient factor in Imperial defence. Possibly money sent to the British Admiralty would be, for a while, more effective in sea power than direct Canadian expenditure. But at such modes subsidy would not mean Canadian industries, nor Canadian crews or training, nor Canadian pride, it would speedily be an infinitely poorer thing for the Empire. Canada's motto should not be either gifts or tribute. It should be co-operation upon a basis of national self-respect, self-confidence and self-effort. These things a Canadian navy means.

In short, The Journal endorses the naval programme laid down by Sir Wilfrid Laurier, to which Mr. Borden also subscribed when the matter came before parliament. Just where Mr Borden stands to-day is not so certain, owing to his alliance, or mesalliance, with the Nationalists.

Any direct contribution on the part of Canada to the British navy would be very unpopular in Quebec, in which province even Sir Wilfrid Laurier is regarded as having gone too far. For a time at least, and until the Imperial sentiment is stronger in Canada than it is just now, the Laurier programme of providing a small navy which would police our own coasts and be at the service of the Empire (if we so decided) in the event of war is about the only thing practicable. It does not follow, however, that it should be considered as being, in any sense an adequate discharge of our responsibility to contribute to the defence of the Empire. In other words, when Canada released herself from being a mere colony and sought membership in a sisterhood of nations, she assumed responsibilities toward the Mother Country and toward the other sisters that she cannot possibly escape.

WEDDING BELLS

DALE — DENOON

At 10.30 o'clock yesterday morning Knox Presbyterian church was the scene of a charming wedding when Miss Mary Alice Denoon, daughter of Mrs. Elizabeth Denoon, and Mr. Robert H. Dale, were united in the holy bonds of matrimony. Rev. H J Keith performed the wedding ceremony before a large number of relatives and friends.

The bride, who was unattended, entered the church, which was beautifully decorated for the occasion, on the arm of her brother, Mr. Kenneth Denoon, to the strains of Mendelssohn's wedding march played by Mr H. Lewis. She carried a bouquet of white chrysanthemums, and was attired in her travelling suit of navy blue serge.

The bride was the recipient of a large number of beautiful and costly presents ,testifying to her popularity amongst her many friends.

Mr. and Mrs. Dale left on the 11.35 C.P.R. train for Montreal on their honeymoon.

A WARNING

"Beware" must be the password of the Hallowe'en mischief workers to-night. Chief Thompson of the Police Department informed the Examiner this morning that he had a number of extra officers to protect the property of the citizens. The Chief does not object to a little innocent fun, but he assured the reporter that no pains would be spared to lay hands on those who destroyed property. The Chief has made every preparation to avoid trouble.

HOUSING RALLY IN INTERESTS OF MR. HALL

Insula to furnish cheap electric power to new industries. In some cases the price had ben as low as $10 a horse power and in other cases $12 a horse power. This cheap electric power in the Niagara Peninsula had been advertised far and wide by the Whitney Government, at the expense of the rest of the Province, while for seven years the Midland District has been entirely ignored. During the last five years the following new industries have been established in Welland, and each new industry now employed the following hands:

Plymouth Cordage Co., about 500 hands.

Canadian Steel foundries, about 200 hands.

Electric metals, about 50 hands.

Dain Harvesting Co., about 150 hands.

Canada Forge Co., about 50 hands.

Canadian Billing Spencer Forge Co., about 100 hands.

Supreme Heating Co., about 20 hands.

Peters' Overall Factory, about 30 hands.

Quality beds, about 100 hands.

That was to say, the town of Welland, during this last five years, had established new industries, which give employment to 1,630 hands, and had increased its total population three fold in ten years. During this last five years the city of Hamilton has added to its population in the neighbourhood of 20,000. The Whitney Government was certainly booming the Niagara District with a vengeance at the general expense of all the rest of the Province, and particularly at the expense of the City of Peterborough.

"We must have," declared Mr. Hall, "a square deal" for Peterborough, or find out the reason why."

Mr. Hall then turned his attention to

The Factories Act.

The Whitney Government, during this last seven years, had made no important changes in the Factories' Act and even the inspection that the Government had made under the Provisions of the Factories' Act had been little better than a farce. The Factories' Act should be further amended, said Mr. Hall, so as to prevent, as far as possible, the happening of any accidents in our factories. Provision should be made to insure competent inspectors being chosen so that a proper inspection may be made of our various factories. An inspector should not be chosen who does not know and appreciate the dangers under which an employee is working, and unless he is competent to point out how those risks and dangers can be overcome. The health of the employee is most important, and hence our factories should be properly heated and ventilated and every unsanitary condition should be removed. Many of the accidents in our factories occurred to competent workmen at the hands of reckless, and careless fellow workmen. Some provision should be made whereby more responsibility will be placed upon an employer of labour, who insists upon placing a reckless and careless workman in a position whereby injury may be done to innocent and competent employees working in the same shop.

Children's Aid Society.

The Children's Aid Society had been doing a most useful work and the fact that it had received such universal public recognition on "Tag Day" was an evidence that its work is humane and necessary, and that it should receive the financial assistance from the Province that the Whitney Government has so flatly refused.

The "White Plague."

The progress made in Medical Science during the last few years amply justified the belief that the "White Plague" can be stamped out, or at all events that its ravages upon our fellow citizens can be greatly lessened. Hence the Provincial Government should take more aggressive steps and adopt a forward policy in the treatment of this disease. There is no reason why the succession duties on the estates of our millionaires should not be increased to provide a fund to properly treat this disease, which inflicts such misery and death in so many humble, as well as wealthy, homes. The millionaires in the Province of Ontario had enjoyed the opportunity of accumulating their enormous wealth out of trusts, combines and monopolies, and there was no reason in the world why their estates should not contribute to a fund which will lessen the misery of the surviving fellow men. The Whitney Government say that only the charitably disposed should stand the expense, while they, themselves, stand still.

Mr. Hall was loudly applauded on the conclusion of his address.

MR. STRATTON

On being called upon, said that Mr. Hall had covered a number of important matters very ably, and conclusively. He showed that he would be a valuable acquisition to the Provincial Legislature in the next parliament. It was possible, and not improbable, that on polling day, whenever that might be, the Whitney Government might find itself in a similar position to the Laurier Government. No matter which way the tide might turn, Mr. Hall would be a live and valuable representative, either in Opposition, or in the Government if the fortunes of war went the Liberal way.

The Whitney Government, Mr. Stratton pointed out, at the present time, were in a position — with an overwhelming majority at the back — to be able to assume a dictatorial attitude, and administer our affairs in a way to suit themselves, with scant reference to the public interests. This was not in the public interests. Their majority was too large, and the opposition was too small to give the effective criticism that should be given, of a government's actions and course of administration. If the electors of West Peterborough would consider the best interests of the Province and the riding, they would send a representative who would insist upon a more thorough scrutiny of Government legislation and of administration than had of late years been given.

The electors of West Peterborough could afford to rise above the petty considerations that are too often allowed to influence their actions in selcting a representative. Would anybody claim that West Peterborough had been energetically represented during the past few years. Had it received the attention that its importance entitled it to demand? If the present administration at Ottawa would carry on the works which were proposed and would have been undertaken by the Liberal Government and late member, and completed, as would have been done had the Government remained in power, such as the new dock lying between the Matthews Company works and McDonald's planing mills; the placing of a retaining wall on the river front between the C. P. R. and the Hunter Street bridges; the completion of the Rifle Ranges; the erection of a new cement dam at Nassau, and the new bridge at Gannon's Narrow's —a reasonable amount to be done in one parliamentary term. If the present Government did all these things luring the present parliament, along with the completion of the Canal, the West Riding would be none the worse off in sending an Opposition member to delve into the doings of the Whitney Government, since in the past term of parliament nothing of a constructive or progressive character had been done for West Peterborough by the Whitney Government. Mr. Stratton said that Peterborough ned not worry over the Provincial leadership of the Liberal party, as the Liberal candidate in West Peterborough could fill the bill, if a new leader were necessary after the elections; as he could fill a cabinet position.

There would be many questions in this campaign which would have to be discussed. He (Mr. Stratton) said that he had heard that day that the Labour interests in Peterborough would be behind Mr. Hall, in his eletcion. It was stated that the working men desired somebody to represent them and their interests on the floor of the Legislature. This was only natural and necessary for the Labour interests of a city of the industrial importance of Peterborough; and this was their opportunity. It was understood that Mr. Hall had been sounded by the Labour interests and was willing espouse their cause and fight for the promotion of their interests which were not new, and had not for the past seven years, been adequately looked after. The Whitney Government had been more than indifferent, actually hostile, to the claims of the Labour party, in regard to legislation in their interests. No doubt Mr. Hall would take an early opportunity of announcing his position on this particular question, which would cut so large a figure in the present campaign.

The present government was very free with its promises before it got into office, and as careless of their promises after they got into office. We were promised the License administration would be removed from politics. We saw how this had been done in Peterborough, when we had seen at the late election, when two or three of the hotel keepers boasted that "we did it" (with the assistance of the Inspector); and we had the edifying action of special contributions being made of funds to furnish a serenade to the hotel gentlemen, who gave the swing of victory to the Conservative cause.

There was no doubt, said Mr. Stratton, the expenditure of large sums of the money of the whole province, to furnish cheap power to western Ontario was injuriously affecting the whole eastern section of the Province. When the Hon. Adam Beck was advocating the Hydro Electric power for Lindsay, at a public meeting Mr. J. D. Flavelle said at the conclusion of the address of the Minister of Power that he had never seen a public man and a Minister of the Crown make such an exhibition of himself. This was equal in truth and frankness to the condemnation of Mr. Beck and the Government on another subject, made by Mr. Burnham, M.P., in a letter to the press—for their making ducks and drakes of an important matter that affected the health and very life of the afflicted people of the province. The management and maintenance of the unfortunate inmates of many of the public institutions made the authorities the laughing stock of those who know. Extravagance and lack of discipline and, of course, lack of satisfactory results were prevalent conditions and characteristic of their administration. It was all very well to have a tender solicitude for drunkards, thieves, and vagrants, and strew their paths with prison-farm roses, but the unfortunates who could not speak forthemselves and the unfortunates who had not the means to, seek curative treatment from a terrible disease, and ill-treated, neglected, and worse than orphaned children, were not worthy of the attention and care of a Government. If men were elected who had the ability to force, and the persistence to carry out, an investigation into matters that need probing, members of the Legislature would not be treated to a six-weeks', but a three months' session. The Premier had promised two weeks ago that in a couple of days he would announce his policy, and the date of the elections, and it is expected that he will do this next Tuesday, and that the polling will be on December 11th. There was need for Mr. Hall's friends to be active, and to complete their organization, for Sir James had doubtless used the delay to perfect his organization. The time for fighting, they would see, was short, and Mr. Stratton urged every worker to put his shoulder to the wheel and give the candidate of the Whitney Government a run that would surprise him, and his friends. He had no word of disparagement for Mr. Peck; he deserved the remark of everybody; that he was a "nice fellow," but what was wanted was not a "nice fellow" that would let the Government have its way, no matter what that way was. What West Peterborough wanted, what the Legislature wanted, what Mr. Whitney needed, was a man who would be able to see through things, and throw the light upon matters that the public had a right to demand; and in no riding in the Province would there be a candidate who would give the riding and province better service in his respect than Mr. Hall.

The meeting concluded with rousing cheers for the King and Mr. Hall.

CAUSES MUCH DISEASE

Advice About Stomach Troubles and How to Relieve Them.

Do not neglect indigestion, which may lead to all sorts of ills and complications. An eminent physician once said that ninety-five per cent. of all the ills of the human body have their origin in a disordered stomach.

Our experience with Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets leads us to believe them to be among the most dependable remedies known for the relief of indigestion and chronic dyspepsia. Their ingredients are soothing and healing to the inflamed membranes of the stomach. They are rich in pepsin, one of the greatest digestive aids known to medicine. The relief they afford is very prompt. Their use with persistency and regularity for a short time tends to bring about a cessation of the pains caused by stomach disorders.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets help to insure healthy appetite, to aid digestion, and thus promote nutrition. As evidence of our sincere faith in Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, we ask you to try them at our risk. If they do do not give your entire satisfaction, we will return you the money you paid us for them, without question or formality. They come in three sizes, prices 25 cents, 50 cents, and $1.00. Remember, you can obtain them only at our store.—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

"THE FORT GARRY" HOTEL, WINNIPEG

Adjacent to the ruins of that historic monument "Old Fort Garry," memorable in the early history of Canada's new Western metropolis, is being erected "The Fort Garry," truly representative of greater Winnipeg—a magnificent edifice—to rank with the world's finest hotels, embodying in its construction the most advanced, scientific and architectural ideals. Located in the very heart of the city, to which all lines of traffic converge, it is readily accessible to the railroads and electric car lines and within a radius of a few blocks of most of the leading theatres, while one minute's walk will place one among the largest and most pretentious of the great stores in the centre of the shopping districts, or enable one to reach the great new terminal station of the Grand Trunk Pacific.

"The Fort Garry" to be constructed by the Grand Trunk Pacific will be built of the finest of Canadian granite and buff lime stone, in the style of the old French Chateaux of Normandy and Touraine and will rear its stately heights to fourteen stories. The building is to have approximately three hundred and fifty sleeping chambers and will be richly furnished in faultless taste. All its bedrooms are to have private bathrooms and are to be equipped with every approved modern appointment. Nothing that would in any way contribute to the comfort and welfare of its guests has been overlooked in the preparation of the plans and interior arrangements.

The keynote of the "The Fort Garry" as judged from the design and interior arrangements is to be "homelike comfort." From basement to roof top, every detail of construction and furnishing has been worked out in perfect accord with this idea, and would seem to assure the largest measure of personal enjoyment and restfulness to its guests—a place where comfort-loving people might enjoy life to the utmost and feel thoroughly at home.

The main entrance of the hotel faces on Winnipeg's most beautiful thoroughfare "Broadway," and opens upon a spacious and imposing rotunda, which will suggest in its decoration and refinement the cheer and comfort provided within its walls, and from which one may enter the spacious dining, tea rooms and cafe. The central feature of the main floor is the circular tea room of impressive and beautiful design, unbroken by column, lofty in height, and finely lighted by broad widows and circular domed ceiling.

The Mezzanine Gallery is also to be a novel feature of "The Fort Garry" and is obtained by the introduction of a storey midway between the office floor and the parlors. It is reached by a broad marble staircase from the main entrance lobby and is to be finished and decorated in white and delicate shades of colour. It overlooks the entrance lobby, dining room, cafe and tea room, and will be used as a ladies' parlour, writing room and library. It commands a splendid view of those portions of the hotel where the most life occurs, and yet at the same time affords a quiet sense of retirement.

The ball room, banquet hall and foyer have been located on the seventh floor. These rooms are of the richest of the public rooms, and have been so arranged with separate kitchen, service, reception and dressing rooms, so as to in no way interfere with the privileges of the guests of the hotel. The ball room is designed in the Louis Quartorine period, and will be beyond all question one of the most striking of its kind in Canada.

Immediately in front of the foyer of the ballroom and banquet hall is a beautiful Loggia, 20 feet in width, forming a promenade for the entire width of the building, and commanding a view of the entire city of Winnipeg.

The building, as a whole, will form a fine example of what modern science can do in the elimination of fire risk. Every girder, beam and rafter is to be of non-expansive steel, every partition of terra cotta, every floor of marble tile or cement, and the stairways of iron. It is to be absolutely fireproof, and while every precaution has been taken to insure absolute protection to life and property, an equal measure of attention has been devoted to its sanitation and the safeguarding of health.

The bathrooms are to be models of sanitation and simplicity and are to be equipped with porcelain fittings and finished in exquisite tile work. They are of comfortable size, and so placed as to be in direct communication with every bed-chamber in the hotel.

Notable features of the residential portion of "The Fort Garry" are the several state and family apartments on every floor from the second to the seventh. These consist of an anteroom, drawing and dining rooms, and the necessary bedrooms, each suite having its own private hall and bathroom. The remaining rooms on these floors, and the rooms of the upper floors from the seventh to the eleventh are divided into smaller rooms and suites, small only by comparison with the spacious state apartments already described, and each having its own private bathroom, seventy per cent of which are outside rooms, lighted and ventilated with adequate windows. No treatment of the interior which affects garishness will be permitted. The colour tones are to be in perfect harmony and the furniture is to be made to order from special designs, such as one would ordinarily find in private homes of refinement.

There is not to be a dark or uninviting chamber in the entire building, and comfort and spaciousness have not been sacrificed to secure a maximum of accommodation. Large closets have been provided in every bed-chamber, and in the suites there are commodious clothes presses, equipped throughout with every modern device.

Nationalists Gloat Over The Submission Of Borden

Hon. L. P. Pelletier Says Naval Referendum is Certain ---Hopes to Repeal Naval Bill---Lavergne Says Borden is No Fanatic, and Also Promises Referendum.

QUEBEC, OCT. 28.— Hon. L. P. Pelletier, the new Postmaster-General, who was re-elected by acclamation in Quebec county yesterday afternoon, made some important declarations at the meeting held immediately after the nomination at Indian Lorette.

On the navy question, Mr. Pelletier declared that as a Minister of the Crown he was not going to take another position than the one he had taken in the last electoral campaign, that is, that he would insist upon having a referendum on the navy question. This referendum would be held, he declared.

"When I was called to Mr. Borden's Cabinet," he said, "I was not asked to withdraw a single line of the programme that I have submitted to my electors, and my efforts will tend to the complete carrying out of this programme. We shall have the referendum that we ask, and we shall stand by the decision of the majority of the Canadian people on that question. Moreover, we may be offered more than a referendum and we will be still more glad to accept it."

Repeal Navy Bill.

Mr. Pelletier then evidently meant his hope to see Mr. Borden repeal the whole navy bill. According to his calculation, Mr. Laurier's navy was to cost $57,000,000 within five years, which he considered too much.

Commenting upon the latter's declaration, Mr. Armand Lavergne went further:

"I know," he said, "that Mr. Pelletier will carry out his promise about the referendum, but I am in a position to say more—I assure you that you shall have this referendum."

What Lavergne Said.

"While Mr. Borden was forming his Cabinet I went to Ottawa to see him, and I said to him: "Here is the Province of Quebec, regenerated, do you want her?" Mr. Borden tendered me a loyal hand ,and I can assure you that he is not the fanatic that he was called in Quebec. The English-speaking people from sister Provinces have at last understood us. They have understood that if we want this Canadian confederation to live there must not be any more question of victors and vanquished in this country. We want an idea of complete equality between the great races who live together in Canada.

"We are confident that the present Government will protect sufficiently the rights of the French-Canadian and Catholic minority. They are in good hands."

Mr. Albert Sevigny, M.P. for Dorchester, who is going to second in French the address in answer to the speech from the throne, after having paid an eloquent tribute to Mr. Bourassa, whom he considers the brightest Canadian now existing, thanked heartily Mr. Borden for having until now given to the French element the greatest possible justice.

Another Nationalist speaker, Mr. Alleyn Taschereau, proclaimed himself a follower of Henri Bourassa, ready to support the Government to-day or to fight it to-morrow.

THE FALL ASSIZES WERE OPENED THIS AFTERNOON FOUR CASES ON DOCKET

The fall assizes of the High Court of Justice opened this afternoon at 1.30 o'clock, with Sir William Mulock of Toronto, presiding, and with three civil actions and one criminal case to be dealt with.

The following members of the bar were present: F. M. Field, K.C., Cobourg, Crown Prosecutor; Geo. Hatton, D. O'Connell, G. N. Gordon, Crown Attorney R. E. Wood, L. M. Hayes, J. H. Burnham, J. W. Bennet, Basil Hall and E. L. Goodwill.

When the Grand Jury were sworn in and the petty jurors chosen, the Judge addressed the Grand Jury ,outlining their duties, and after this referred to a copy of a report from the county gaol, and drew their attention to the fact that there was provision made for caring for the county poor, but no provision made for the city poor. He recommended that they refer to this in their report. He in conclusion told the Grand Jury that in the case of Sam. Newall they were to decide whether there was sufficient evidence to send him up for trial. It will be remembered that in this case Newall was charged with rape on Mrs. Maggie Moore of Dummer, the charge being laid by Mrs. Moore. Newall came up before Justice Teetzel at the General Sessions of the Peace, and at that time the entire case was made known to the public. The case was adjourned until the fall assizes. At the time of going to press the Grand Jury was in session considering whether there was sufficient evidence to send him up for trial.

At the close of the Judge's remarks the Grand Jury retired and the first civil case was proceeded with. It was that of Mrs. Hugh Darke vs the C. G. E. Mr. O'Connell opened for Mrs. Darke, and at the time of going to press was addressing the petty jury on her behalf.

THANKSGIVING DINNER WAS A PLEASING SUCCESS

A very successful and enjoyable Thanksgiving Day dinner was held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of St. James' Methodist church last evening. There was a very large attendance and the event was pronounced a most delightful success. A bountiful supper was served in excellent fashion, after which an enjoyable programme was given which included splendid addresses by Rev. J. R. Webb, of the Murray street Baptist church, and Rev. I. Couch, pastor of the George street Methodist church. The programme was as follows:

Opening hymn.
Prayer, Rev. W. C. Riddiford, Park street Baptist church.
Instrumental duet—Misses Palmer and Gillespie.
Solo, Mrs. Rehill.
Recitation, Mrs. Braund.
Solo, Mrs Greenslade.
Solo, Mr. J. P. Naish.
Duet, Mrs. Goodwin and Mrs. Rehill.
Solo, Mr. J. M. Greene.

A BREAD FAMINE

Peterborough was face to face with a bread famine on Saturday night. Early in the evening the demand for the "staff of life" assumed such acute proportions that several of the local bakers had to make a fresh supply, and in several instances other articles of foodstuffs were purchased as a substitute for this well known household commodity. Fowl of all kinds was also scarce in some quarters of the city, and many had to resort to the expedient of buying beef for their Thanksgiving dinner.

WILL BE MISSED

St. John's choir and Sunday school will greatly miss the valuable services of Mr. William Common, who leaves the city to-day. It is hoped not for long. His services as a chorister and Sunday school teacher have endeared him to all with whom he has been brought into contact, and the warmest wishes of all accompany him wherever he goes, wishing him God-speed and a safe return.

CLEVER ARREST

Yesterday afternoon the culmination of the recent robberies which have taken place in town was reached when Chief of Police Chilton arrived in town with a small boy in his custody. The boy is under 16 years of age, so will come under the Juvenile Delinquents Act. He appeared before Magistrate Jackson this morning in the police office, and was remanded until Tuesday morning at 9.30.

The store was broken into between 1 2and 1 o'clock Tuesday night. The boy then got a boat, and rowed to where the Georgian Bay and Seaboard Railway branch of the C.P.R. crosses the Scugog River, and spent the night. Starting early in the morning he set out for Sturgeon Point, where he was first heard of in town.

Chief Chilton received word from Sturgeon Point yesterday morning to the effect that the boy had been seen in the neighbourhood. About eleven o'clock he left in a launch for the Point, where he hired a horse and rig. On making inquiries at a schoolhouse he ascertained that the boy had gone that way. Further inquiries made at Red Rock cheese factory elicited the information that he stopped at a farmhouse nearby. The Chief drove to Bobcaygeon, where he arrested the youth about 3.30, arriving in town on the 4.30 C.P.R. train.

At Sturgeon the 38.55 Marlin rifle was found hidden under the lower wharf, the boy having discovered that the cartridges he had would not fit the gun. When arrested he had in his possession an air-gun, a .22 Stevens rifle, a hunting knife, a boy scout knife, a large jack-knife, and some cartridges.—Post.

DEATHS.

GRANT.—At Rossduff, Sask., on Oct. 24th, 1911, after a lingering illness, borne with great patience, Ernest John, eldest child of Wm. Henry and Lillian Grant, aged 16 years and 6 months. Asleep in Jesus.

A SUDDEN DEATH

Dr. Carmichael of Peterborough has been visiting the different members of his family during the past week or ten days as opportunity enabled him to do so. On Sunday the Doctor was visiting his sister, Mrs. Donald McKay, at Cannington. On Thanksgiving morning at 8 o'clock he was aroused by calls from his sister, Mrs. McKay, saying that her husband was very sick, but before the Doctor could get to the bedside of his brother-in-law he had peacefully passed away. Mr. Donald McKay, who was a retired farmer, was in his seventy-seventh year and was in the best of health on the day and evening previous. His sudden death shocked the village, as Mr. McKay was one of the best citizens. He leaves a wife to mourn his loss, besides a large circle of friends.

LAKEFIELD METHODISTS HOLD SUCCESSFUL ENTERTAINMENT

The annual tea and entertainment in connection with the Methodist church, Lakefield, was held under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid of the church, on Thanksgiving night. The event was a decided success. There was a very large crowd in attendance, including a number from this city.

After supper was served there was a splendid programme given, Rev. Mr. Coon presiding in a very capable manner. Rev. Mr. Ireland, and some of the local clergy gave addresses, which were followed by a programme, supplied by Peterborough talent, and the numbers of which were as follows:—

Opening number, Lakefield M. C. Choir.

Splendid Dinner At St. Andrew's

Under the auspices of the Ladies' Aid Society of St. Andrew's church, a thanksgiving dinner was held in the school room last evening. There was a very large attendance, numbering some 275 persons, and an exceedingly enjoyable evening was spent. The Rev. James Rollins, B.A., occupied the chair.

After the gathering had done justice to a bountiful supper a musical programme was rendered as follows:

Music At St. John's On Sunday

The music throughout the day showed evidence of hard practice, and the beautiful rendering of the strictly liturgical portions of the services came in for hearty words of appreciation from visitors and parishioners alike. The careful phrasing of Psalm, Canticle, and Hymn with purity of intonation, produce an effect that, to use the words of Dr. Paterson-Smyth, "is inspiring." In addressing the choristers assembled in the vestry after Evensong, at the late hour of 9 p.m., Rev. Dr. Smyth warmly congratulated the singers for their faithful work. "It is a long time since I attended such an inspiring service," said Dr. Smyth, and promptly walked into the church to say much the same to Mr. R. J. Devey at the organ.

The music after the sermon at night fell into line with the "National Thanksgiving Day," and Mr. H. W. Morphet was never in better voice than in Kipling's "Recessional," which was followed by the chorus of "O, Canada," sung by the choir and congregation. Sullivan's setting to "O King of Kings," sung as a recessional, concluded a very happy day, the whole congregation remaining kneeling to catch the beautiful effect of the final amen in the vestry, tuned to the softest combination on the organ. The concluding voluntary was "Cujus Animam," by Rossini.

Visited The New Town

Messrs. E. Manning and George Ruth returned to-day from a trip to Port McNichol ,where they went with a party from Toronto. It was the first train into Port McNichol, and they state there was a regular stampede for lots. Messrs. Manning and Ruth purchased some lots for a syndicate of Peterborough men, including themselves.

Went On A Hike

The First Troop Boys' Scouts, in charge of Mr. Moss, assistant Scout Master, went on a hike to Bear's Creek on Saturday, returning on Monday. The Scouts built improvised huts and used these as a shelter for the two nights which they camped out. The trip proved an interesting one in many respects and the boys returned home greatly benefitted by their jaunt.

Any Doubter Can Know

Whether tea and coffee are causing him trouble by quitting them.

When the cause of the trouble is removed, some relief will naturally follow.

But the return to old-time health and comfort can be hastened by taking on a rich liquid food-drink, such as

POSTUM

It supplies a hot table beverage of fine colour, and a pleasing "snappy" taste, similar to that of the mild, high grade Javas.

Postum contains no coffee or any other harmful substance, but is rich in the gluten and phosphate of potash (from the wheat of which it is made), Natures' material for rebuilding nerve and brain cells.

It's a matter of choice whether you keep along with the tea and coffee habit or change to Postum and be free.

THE DEDICATION FESTIVAL BEGUN AT ST. JOHN'S

Large Congregations Were Present on Sunday When Rev. Dr. Peterson-Smyth, of Montreal, Preached

TWO SPLENDID SERMONS

In connection with the dedication festival of the restoration of St. John's Church in 1884, a very impressive service was held on Sunday evening last, at which an immense congregation assembled.

The order of service took the form of that set aside for the 57th Regiment Peterborough Rangers, commencing with the hymn "All People That on Earth Do Dwell." The pulpit was occupied by Dr. Paterson Smyth of Montreal, who originally came from Ireland. In addition to possessing strong powers of eloquence he is a lecturer of considerable merit and an author of much popularity.

He took for his subject the parable of the ten talents, and in part said:

This is God's parable. The Kingdom of God means the Church. Practically it comes to this: that He calls us into His whole Church to accomplish certain work. That is to help Him to pull this poor old world straight. Secondly, He endowed us with certain gifts with which to accomplish this work and in the day of judgment the Lord will ask us: "What hast thou done with the talents I gave thee?" or in other words, "Of what good have you been in the world?"

Bond servant means that you belong to God. Do you belong to God, or do you belong to the world? He brought you into this world; He has redeemed you; He gave you the talents.

Now, then, whose are the talents? Surely you will say, God's. And what profit does He want? He has this tremendous work to do, to pull this poor old world through and also to do good to fellow men. That is the will of God and that is what He gave us the talents for. No man, no child in the Kingdom, has ever received any talent from God for himself alone, but for God. It is God's gift to be born in a good family; it is God's gift to be a successful business man, and no credit is to be attached to any but God. There is nothing to make an intellectual man look down upon another who was not born with brilliant faculties; neither is there any reason for a man who was born in a good family to look down upon another because he was not. If you were born in a good family, or if you were born with a brilliant intellect you are the man with the five or ten talents and God will require more from you than the man who has only one talent. How dare a man use God's talents for himself? If your earthly master gave you talents for his use and you used them for yourself that would be called misappropriation of funds. Are you doing nothing towards bringing your fellow men nearer to God?

Supposing a workman sat all day with his legs dangling on the scaffolding, do you think he could expect to be paid for his work? No! What use is he to his employers? The man might say, "Well, I've done no harm," but he has done no good.

God does not send us here to do "no harm," but he sends us here to do good.

The festival services will be continued next Sunday, as that and last Sunday are the two nearest All Saints' Day, the day of the Restoration of the Church.

INSPIRING ADDRESSES

Rev. W. L. Armitage, Former Rector, Preached Splendid Sermons in That Church on Sunday

A POPULAR CLERGYMAN

Rev. W. L. Armitage of Picton, formerly rector of All Saints, occupied the pulpit at both services in that church yesterday and gave a stirring and inspiring message to those who were fortunate enough to attend.

The Rev. Mr. Armitage was the first rector of All Saints' Church, and the ability which he showed and the good work he accomplished still remains vivid in the memories of those who were associated with the work of the parish at that time. Rev. Mr. Armitage took for the basis of his discussion not a text but portions of the Scripture relating to the betrayal of Christ and leading up to his crucifixion which are to be found in the Gospels according to Mark and in the Gospels according to SS. Mark and Luke. By his remarks he sought to show the folly of allowing envy, avarice and slander to pervert our lives

ENVY

The work of the Christian Church to-day is sometimes done in an unChristian way, due to the existence of envy. We want to be better than our neighbours or opponnts, to outdo them if possible, with the result we drift away or we follow the line of least resistance. The high priests which the apostle speaks about were illustrative of this. They were autocratic and were wont to rule over the church, to the moral and spiritual detriment of the people. These conditions were productive of envy. It's a dangerous thing to give power or authority to any organization, political or otherwise. The apostle told the truth when he said that "Love envieth not." The only place for envy is to envy those who envieth not. Then again, the love for money is creative of envy." "Money is not an evil, but the love of money is an evil," admonished the speaker. The money lover is a knave and a miser, and one who will love money at the loss of his manhood and to the detriment of his spiritual welfare. Do not think by these statements that the rich are necessarily evil. When we find ourselves loving money then we are ready to take our place with Judas Iscariot.

SLANDER

And so as we are willing to let envy predominate over us, we are ever ready to slander our fellow creatures in order to augment our own ends. We take a grain of truth or sometimes less, and make a mountain out of it. We even go so far as to allow this evil to enter our home life. Homes are ruined, lives are broken up. Only when it is too late do we realize our susceptibility to slandering others.

AVARICE

As a fitting conclusion to what I have stated as regards the evils of envy and slander, I would also add avarice. Avarice is man's tendency to follow the line of least resistance, a phase that was not in the make-up of our Saviour. Some people are wont to take the underground route in their spiritual relationship to the Church; they even allow their weakness in this respect to encroach upon their business, and for a time they sometimes flourish under its protecting wing, but "What doth it profit a man if he gain the whole world and lose his own soul?" The young man who goes out into the world gets into bad company, he feels he must do as they do, if not they will drop him. He little realizes the short distance he has to drop, and the willing arms that are waiting to receive him and say unto him, "Well done, good and faithful servant. Enter thou in."

CORNER STONE OF NEW PROTESTANT HOME LAID

the Board has attended the meetings as regularly or for so long a time.

In January, 1911, a meeting of representative men of the city, was held to consider the matter of a new home which had become absolutely necessary. It was finally decided that a Home should be built to look after the Protestant poor of the city, the Roman Catholic poor being already looked after by the House of Providence. With this end in view, the city agreed to give a site and the sum of ten thousand dollars if the Association would erect a building costing not less than twenty thousand dollars. Also that the Association should become incorporated, and should add to the Board, representatives from the churches of the city.

The Letters Patent granting this Incorporation, were received on May 3rd, 1911, and the agreement with the city was signed on August 29th, 1911.

The first general meeting of the Incorporated Association was held in the Board Room on the old Home on May 9th, 1911, when the following officers were elected:

Directors, for three years — Mrs. Birdsall, Mrs. J. B. McWilliams, Mr. J. A. Aylmer.

For two years—Mrs. W. M. Roger, Miss Nicholls, Mr. R. S. Davidson.

For one year—Mrs. Hazlitt, Mrs. Robert Neill, Miss Mary Brown.

The officers elected were:

President—Mrs. W. M. Roger.

1st Vice-President—Miss Nicholls.

2nd Vice-Pres.—Mrs. Birdsall.

Treasurer—Miss Sarah G. Robinson.

Secretary—Miss Helen Denison.

The plans of this building were prepared by Mr. Sandford Smith, of the firm of Bond and Smith, architects, of Toronto, and the work has been carried on under his supervision, With Mr. J. G. Graham as contractor.

Dated this 27th day of October, A. D., 1911.

HELEN DENISON,
Secretary P. P. H.

The address having been placed in a cavity in the brickwork together with other articles, the ceremony of the stone laying was performed by Mrs. T. Hazlett, who was presented with a magnificent silver trowel. The trowel was inscribed thus:

"Presented to Mrs. T. G. Hazlett on the occasion of the laying of the corner stone of the new Protestant Home, Oct. 28th, 1911."

Mrs. Haslett was also the recipient of a beautiful bouquet of flowers. Prayers were then offered by the Rev. Canon Davidson, who also led in the singing of the hymn "Praise God From Whom All Blessings Flow." On behalf of Mrs. Haslett the Rev. gentleman with a few fitting remarks returned thanks for the presentations of the trowel and bouquet, upon which the gathering dispersed.

There is every indication that the building will have a very imposing appearance. The main structure is nearly complete and the brickwork almost finished. There is a balcony extending all round the building, from which a fine view of the landscape from all points can be obtained The spot is considered an ideal one for such an institution, as it is considerably above the level of the surrounding country and therefore conducive to good health.

HERE IS A WOMAN OF VERY FEW WORDS

Tells Why She Recommends Dodd's Kidney Pills

She was Run Down, had dark circles under her eyes and her Kidneys bothered her—Dodd's Kidney Pills cured her completely.

Upper St. Rose, Gloucester Co., N. B., Oct. 30.—(Special)—"Dodd's Kidney Pills are a grand medicine for suffering women." In those words Laura Robichaud, a well known and highly respected resident of this place, voices her sentiments in regard to the grand old Canadian Kidney Remedy. And, like others who have borne similar testimony, she speak from experience.

"I can recommend Dodd's Kidney Pills because they cured me," Miss Robichaud says. "I was in a generally run-down condition. I had dark circles under my eyes and my Kidneys bothered me. Two boxes of Dodd's Kidney Pills fixed me up."

This statement is made up of few words, but it describes the exact condition of thousands of women in Canada. They are run-down, have dark circles under their eyes, and they may not even know it, but their Kidneys are bothering them. If they follow Laura Robichaud's example and use Dodd's Kidney Pills they will cure their Kidneys, and good health will follow naturally.

A PRESENTATION

A very pleasant even took place on Monday night, Oct. 30th, when the friends of Miss Lillie Mahood of Smith called on her and presented her with a variety shower on the eve of her marriage. The presentation was made by Miss B. Cann and Miss M. Darling. Miss Mahood, who was taken completely by surprise thanked her friends for their kind remembrance. A pleasant evening was spent. Refreshments were served and her many friends departed wishing her all kinds of happiness in her new sphere of life.

GRAND TRUNK PACIFIC PREPARING FOR FALL RUSH OF BUSINESS TO CANADIAN WEST

Another step in the progress of development of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway has been made. The new freight shed on the Mission Terminal Fort William, will be available for occupancy the latter part of this week. It is nine hundred feet long, and seventy feet wide, located along side the basin, opposite the elevator and equipped with trackage sufficient for one hundred cars, each setting.

This shed is part of the permanent layout of the Grand Trunk Pacific Railway, and will, next spring, be utilized for the handling of through lake-and-rail freight, interchanged with the various boat lines.

For the balance of this season the Grand Trunk Pacific will handle their through lake freight at their present temporary quarters at West fort, and the new shed will be utilized for storage purposes.

HAVE PLACED ORDERS

The Grand Trunk Railway System have recently placed orders for 20 switching engines and 10 Richmond compound consolidated engines. Ten of the switching engines are to be built by the Lima Locomotive and Machine Works, Ltd., ten by the American Locomotive Co., Schenectady, N. Y.

The working pressure of the switching engines is 190 lbs. and of the Compound Consolidation engines 210 lbs. The tender of the switch engines will have a capacity of 4,500 gallons of water and 8 tons of coal. The Compound Consolidation engines will have a capacity of water of 7,000 gallons and from 10 to 15 tons of coal.

The tractive power of the switch engines is 29,893 lbs., and of the Compound Consolidation engines 36,000 lbs.

RAPID FIRE PHOTOGRAPHY

The Roy Studio demonstrated itself to the Albetr Smoke class yesterday by the speedy manner in which it produced photographs of the Examiner road race. The Studio succeeded in getting some excellent photographs of the start of the senior race, scenes along the way, and the finish of both races. These latter pictures were taken around 11.30 o'clock, but the Studio was enabled to give the Examiner a set of finished pictures at 4 o'clock yesterday, and at the same hour the photographs were reproduced on slides at the Royal Theatre.

DOCTORS COULD NOT HELP HIM

BUT GIN PILLS DID

"During August last, I went to Montreal to consult a specialist as I had been suffering terribly with Stone in the Bladder. He decided to operate but said the stone was too large to remove and too hard to crush. I returned home and was recommended by a friend to try Gin Pills.

They relieved the pain. I took two boxes and went back to the specialist. He said the stone was smaller but he could not remove it although he tried for two hours and a half. I returned home and continued to take Gin Pills—and, to my surprise and joy, I passed the stone. Gin Pills are the best medicine in the world, and, because they did me so much good, I will recommend them all the rest of my life".

MISSION AT CATHEDRAL

Three Redemptoris Fathers from Toronto, namely, Fathers O'Reilly, Jones and Dearling, are conducting a fourteen days' mission at St. Peter's Cathedral. The mission commenced on Sunday evening and for the first week will be exclusively for ladies. There will be devotions, sermon and benediction each evening at 7.30. At 5.30 and 8 each morning there will be mass and sermons. Next week's mission commencing on Sunday afternoon will be for the men. Masses will begin at 7.30 next Sunday and continue for a week, with devotions at 7.30 each evening.

OBITUARY

THOMAS HOPCROFT

A very sad death occurred at 1.15 this morning, when Thomas Hopcroft, of 223 Dublin street, passed away at the early age of 18 years.

The deceased was born in Birmingham, England, and only came to Canada in the spring of this year. He was employed by the Dickson Company, and is said to have liked the country very much. He was only ill a week, and death was due to appendicitis.

In addition to his sorrowing parents, the deceased is survived by two brothers, Charles, of Peterborough, and James, of Birmingham, and three sisters, Lizzie, Kate and Dorris, all living in the Old Country.

The funeral will take place to-morrow at 2.30, to the Little Lake cemetery. The Rev. J. C. Davidson will officiate.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I notice by your paper that the School Board is going to build two new schools, one in the West Ward and one in the East, and that the proposed site for the East Ward is on top of the Armour hill, corner Concession and Hunter streets. Now, I agree with the Board that a new school is wanted in the East Ward, but would ask the members to go into the matter carefully. First of all the school could not be reached by any street without climbing a steep hill, and it appears to me as if the scholars would have a trying time getting up Hunter or Concession streets in wintry weather. Then again, the Canal is but a short distance from the proposed site, and everyone knows the curiosity of children when there is water convenient, and I am afraid some of the parents would put in very anxious moments if the school was so close to the Canal, as this would be.

I am not advocating any site, nor am I finding fault, only pointing out the above objectionable features, as they appear to me.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I am
Yours truly,
East City Parent.

Matriculation classes will meet to-night in the Collegiate Institute at 8 p.m.

The senior leaders meet to-morrow night at 6.15 o'clock.

The Intermediate class assembles to-night at 8.10 and the business boys at 7 p.m.

Messrs. H. B. Cowan, J. J. Thompson and J. Sharpe were in Warsaw on Saturday night and gave a demonstration of wrestling, tumbling, etc. The newly formed club at Warsaw is making rapid progress and there were forty men and fifteen boys in attendance at the class Saturday evening.

Special Services

Interesting services were held in Knox church on Sunday when special Thanksgiving music was provided by the choir. Rev. D. A. McKenzie occupied the pulpit in the morning, and in the evening, Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, principal of the Collegiate Institute, gave a splendid address on the "Great Hymns of the Church." Old familiar hymns were sung by the choir and the congregation and the service was greatly enjoyed. The address by Mr. Kenner was one of interest and profit.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S

There was a real good holiday attendance at the Opera House last evening when "The Girl from Rector's" was presented. It is a screamingly funny farce and could not fail to excite laughter from the audience. As Richard O'Shaughnessy, Mr. Graydon Fox portrayed all the characteristics of a dissipated young man, and Mr. Harry B. Castle, as Colonel Andrew Tanly, another gay spark, was equally good. The star of the piece ,however, was Miss Katherine Raynore.

Ottawa Writer Picks All Star Rugby Team

In picking an all-star team from the Interprovincial Union, the Ottawa Free Press has the following to say:

Playing together for two weeks, the below constellation of Big oFur stars would make a tremendous football engine, one that would march from one end of the gridiron to the other without much opposition. The quartette of backs are all runners and punters, each carrying a drop stick in his toe that might find its way over the cross bar from any point inside the 40-yard line. McKelvie, the Tiger youngster, is the only questionable candidate on the rear guard. The form he has shown his first year out has been remarkable. Tommy Stinson is as good as ever, and Eddie Gerard is the best all-round halfback playing football to-day. Binkley has the goods, though he has not shown his best up to the present time.

"Dutch" Burton of Hamilton makes a success of a sidehalf portfolio or ball handler behind the scrimmage. This year he is playing quarter and is the best that is. Like Gerard he is an all-round man and can smash the line any time he is asked. For getting ground through a broken field he is in a class by himself.

Three scrimmage men of the aggressive type are placed in the middle of the line, Banty Russell, though considerable of a veteran, is as active as a yearling, and his tricks of trade make him invaluable in the heeling out position. His side scrimmagers, Amby Kilmartin and Percy Roberts, are fast on attack and always down with the ball, and like a wall on defence. Both are good tacklers.

Bob Isbister played inside wing at the start of the season and is the pick of plungers in close. He is a giant in statute, a tackler and ground getter on straight football or a run. He knows the game and plays it all the time. George Kelly of Montreal looks the next best inside wing, though Jim Vaughan of Ottawa has played a wonderful defence game this season, and Gale, Argos' new inside, has shown fine bucking propensities.

One game was sufficient to show Ed. Elliott, the former Queen's star, now with Ottawa, a made-to-order middle wing. He started out as an outside ,but fever made him just a trifle clumsy. Ottawa tried him at middle and on both offence and defence he was elegant. He is a strong tackler and is travelling up with the fastest of outside wings. Whatever else he is, Gerald Wigle, of the Oarsmen, is one terrible line plunger and always was. He fits in well with Elliott.

Jack Rufus Ryan, of Ottawa, and Edward Sage of Montreal are in a class so far removed from other outside wings, comparison would be futile. They are built on lines of a greyhound, finished tacklers and the fastest men in the Big Four. They are always on the field, despite the efforts made to "get" them. In addition to getting down under punts, they are a pair of the very few flying wings who can smash a line.

A junior team from the Trinity College School, Port Hope, visited Peterborough on Saturday and played a friendly game with a junior team from the Collegiate, at Riverside Park, the Port Hope fourteen managed to win out by 6 points to 0, after an interesting game, in which Will Stratton starred for Port Hope and Cavanah for Peterborough.

McRae Gets Life.

Cornwall, Oct. 31.—Farquhar McRae, reeve of Lancaster Township will, if the sentence of the court be carried out, end his days within prison walls. Mr. Justice Sutherland sentenced him to life imprisonment in expiation of the shooting of William Shaw, druggist of Carp.

The sixty-five-year-old prisoner goes into captivity because twelve of his fellow-countrymen believe that, laboring under the excitement of provocation, he shot to death the young Scotch chemist who was assisting his friend, Dr. Magee, to recover his child. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter after 1 3-4 hours consideration.

Before McRae had been led away to his cell his friends in the court room were planning a petition to Ottawa for clemency. It would be signed by every man in Glengarry, irrespective of religion or politics, said one of them. McRae will be removed to Kingston this week.

It is possible that a new trial will be applied for on the ground that the jury were allowed to read newspaper reports of the case, some of which are alleged to have been inflammatory. "They should never have seen them," said Mr. Pringle.

Hit Both Ways.

Brockville, Oct. 31.—James Cowan of Gananoque fell into the company of David Casey, a St Regis Indian, at Prescott. The pair came to Brockville and occupied a double room in a local hotel, but in the morning the Indian was gone and $2 of Cowan's money.

Casey lit out by the first train for Cornwall, where he was arrested and brought back to answer to the charge of theft. During the enquiry it developed that Cowan purchased liquor for the Indian both in Prescott and Brockville, for which he was fined $50 and costs, and in default was committed for two months. Casey is on remand in order that he may be used in other prosecutions to follow.

Frank Eastman was arrested here yesterday in possession of a horse and buggy which it is alleged he stole from a Smith's Falls liveryman on Saturday night. Eastman is 22 years of age, and says he belongs to Montreal. He was taken to Smith's Falls for trial.

It's a Real Fortune.

Brantford, Oct. 31.—Dr. Charles Perrin, brother of Dr. Thomas Perrin of San Jose, Cal., both reported to be heirs to a fortune of $4,500,000, which has been accumulating in England for 200 years, is in the city on a visit to Fred. Westbrook, but he informs your correspondent that his visit had no connection with the claim established for the legacy. Dr. Perrin declined to discuss the case in any way, although he implied that the fortune was a genuine one. It is his second visit here in forty years, his family having been formerly well-known residents of Mount Vernon, Burford Township.

Aged Pair Married.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Oct. 31.—At the age of 81, and for the fifth time in his life, Jacob Somes has entered into the bonds of matrimony, and the woman of his heart is Mrs. James Cole, a lady of 73 summers, who has been married once before.

Somes has lived here for many years and Mrs. Cole comes from Thessalon, where they will reside. The bridegroom is reputed to have amassed a large sum out of the sale of patent medicines.

Ask Taft to Protest

New York, Oct. 31.—President Taft is to be asked to transmit to the Czar of Russia a protest formulated at a meeting yesterday by New York clergymen of all denominations against the "systematic oppression" of the Jews in Russia. The protest is in the form of a resolution setting forth the "unjust and barbaric conditions" to which, it is declared, the Jews in that country are subjected.

Strange Death In Chicago.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—What the police say was a murder, with many features which they were unable to explain, was revealed yesterday when the body of Blanche Dow was found naked, on the floor of her room in a down-town hotel.

The furniture was broken and the young woman's hair was torn down, giving evidence of a struggle. Despite these facts, there were no wounds on the body and both doors and the windows of the room was locked.

The police believe Miss Dow, who was about 26 years of age, was an actress. Several valuable jewels on her fingers were not disturbed.

Entered Canada Illegally.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 31.—Karl Kassay and Andrew Fahr, Hungarians, entered Canada illegally and were fined $10 each by Magistrate Fraser. They were ferried across the river from Grand Island.

Lincoln Liberals.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 31.—Dr. E. T. Kellam of this city yesterday announced that he would be a candidate for the Liberal nomination for the Legislature. The county Liberal convention will be held to-morrow.

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Higher—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

LIVERPOOL, Oct. 31.—The firmness in America on Saturday and the strength in the near month in Buenos Ayres, as well as Winnipeg was offset here by the unexpected world's shipments to the United Kingdom and values were unchanged. Later there was an advance on the firmness in Buenos Ayres and Winnipeg offers and an improved demand for cargoes and parcels which are sparingly offered. Advices from Australia continue bullish, as rain is wanted. During the morning there was some realizing, altho the market was dull and prices lost the advance. Advices from Argentine continue very favorable, as a result of the recent rains and the weather continues unsettled.

At the close the market was dull, ¼d to ½d higher than on Saturday.

CHICAGO, Oct. 30.—Millers buying large quantities of cash wheat here today helped give the option market a lift. The close was steady at 1-4c to 1-2c to 3-4c net advance. Corn finished 1-4c to 1-2c higher than Saturday, and oats up 1-16c to 1-8c. Latest trading showed hog products varying from 2 1-2c decline to a gain of a nickel.

Berlin, Ont., Oct. 31.—Under auspicious circumstances and ideal weather the new Lutheran Theological Seminary was dedicated at Waterloo yesterday afternoon, in the presence of a distinguished gathering. Rev. Mr. Miller of Hamilton extended a formal greeting to the assembly. Mayor W. G. Weichel, M.P., delivered an address of welcome on behalf of the town of North Waterloo.

J. Charles Mueller, president of the Board of Trade, formally handed over to the directorate the deed for the five acres of land, wishing the seminary board God-speed in its work.

The dedication ceremony was performed by Rev. Mr. Hoffman of Berlin, and Rev. Mr. Weigand of Brodhead delivered a German oration.

DOCTORS COULD NOT HELP HIM

BUT GIN PILLS DID

"During August last, I went to Montreal to consult a specialist as I had been suffering terribly with Stone in the Bladder. He decided to operate but said the stone was too large to remove and too hard to crush. I returned home and was recommended by a friend to try Gin Pills.

They relieved the pain. I took two boxes and went back to the specialist. He said the stone was smaller but he could not remove it although he tried for two hours and a half. I returned home and continued to take Gin Pills—and, to my surprise and joy, I passed the stone. Gin Pills are the best medicine in the world, and, because they did me so much good, I will recommend them all the rest of my life".

OBITUARY

THOMAS HOPCROFT

A very sad death occurred at 1.15 this morning, when Thomas Hopcroft, of 223 Dublin street, passed away at the early age of 18 years.

The deceased was born in Birmingham, England, and only came to Canada in the spring of this year. He was employed by the Dickson Company, and is said to have liked the country very much. He was only ill a week, and death was due to appendicitis.

In addition to his sorrowing parents, the deceased is survived by two brothers, Charles, of Peterborough, and James, of Birmingham, and three sisters, Lizzie, Kate and Dorris, all living in the Old Country.

The funeral will take place to-morrow at 2.30, to the Little Lake cemetery. The Rev. J. C. Davidson will officiate.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I notice by your paper that the School Board is going to build two new schools, one in the West Ward and one in the East, and that the proposed site for the East Ward is on top of the Armour hill, corner Concession and Hunter streets. Now, I agree with the Board that a new school is wanted in the East Ward, but would ask the members to go into the matter carefully. First of all the school could not be reached by any street without climbing a steep hill, and it appears to me as if the scholars would have a trying time getting up Hunter or Concession streets in wintry weather. Then again, the Canal is but a short distance from the proposed site, and everyone knows the curiosity of children when there is water convenient, and I am afraid some of the parents would put in very anxious moments if the school was so close to the Canal, as this would be.

I am not advocating any site, nor am I finding fault, only pointing out the above objectionable features, as they appear to me.

Thanking you, Mr. Editor, I am
Yours truly,
East City Parent.

Ottawa Writer Picks All Star Rugby Team

In picking an all-star team from the Interprovincial Union, the Ottawa Free Press has the following to say:

Playing together for two weeks, the below constellation of Big oFur stars would make a tremendous football engine, one that would march from one end of the gridiron to the other without much opposition. The quartette of backs are all runners and punters, each carrying a drop stick in his toe that might find its way over the cross bar from any point inside the 40-yard line. McKelvie, the Tiger youngster, is the only questionable candidate on the rear guard. The form he has shown his first year out has been remarkable. Tommy Stinson is as good as ever, and Eddie Gerard is the best all-round halfback playing football to-day. Binkley has the goods, though he has not shown his best up to the present time.

"Dutch" Burton of Hamilton makes a success of a sidehalf portfolio or ball handler behind the scrimmage. This year he is playing quarter and is the best that is. Like Gerard he is an all-round man and can smash the line any time he is asked. For getting ground through a broken field he is in a class by himself.

Three scrimmage men of the aggressive type are placed in the middle of the line. Banty Russell, though considerable of a veteran, is as active as a yearling, and his tricks of trade make him invaluable in the heeling out position. His side scrimmagers, Amby Kilmartin and Percy Roberts, are fast on attack and always down with the ball, and like a wall on defence. Both are good tacklers.

Bob Isbister played inside wing at the start of the season and is the pick of plungers in close. He is a giant in statute, a tackler and ground getter on straight football or a run. He knows the game and plays it all the time. George Kelly of Montreal looks the next best inside wing, though Jim Vaughan of Ottawa has played a wonderful defence game this season, and Gale, Argos' new inside, has shown fine bucking propensities.

One game was sufficient to show Ed. Elliott, the former Queen's star, now with Ottawa, a made-to-order middle wing. He started out as an outside, but fever made him just a trifle clumsy. Ottawa tried him at middle and on both offence and defence he was elegant. He is a strong tackler and is travelling up with the fastest of outside wings. Whatever else he is, Gerald Wigle, of the Oarsmen, is one terrible line plunger and always was. He fits in well with Elliott.

Jack Rufus Ryan, of Ottawa, and Edward Sage of Montreal are in a class so far removed from other outside wings, comparison would be futile. They are built on lines of a greyhound, finished tacklers and the fastest men in the Big Four. They are always on the field, despite the efforts made to "get" them. In addition to getting down under punts, they are a pair of the very few flying wings who can smash a line.

Messrs. H. B. Cowan, J. J. Thompson and J. Sharpe were in Warsaw on Saturday night and gave a demonstration of wrestling, tumbling, etc. The newly formed club at Warsaw is making rapid progress and there were forty men and fifteen boys in attendance at the class Saturday evening.

Special Services

Interesting services were held in Knox church on Sunday when special Thanksgiving music was provided by the choir. Rev. D. A. McKenzie occupied the pulpit in the morning, and in the evening, Mr. H. R. H. Kenner, principal of the Collegiate Institute, gave a splendid address on the "Great Hymns of the Church." Old familiar hymns were sung by the choir and the congregation and the service was greatly enjoyed. The address by Mr. Kenner was one of interest and profit.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

THE GIRL FROM RECTOR'S

There was a real good holiday attendance at the Opera House last evening when "The Girl from Rector's" was presented. It is a screamingly funny farce and could not fail to excite laughter from the audience. As Richard O'Shaughnessy, Mr. Graydon Fox portrayed all the characteristics of a dissipated young man, and Mr. Harry B. Castle, as Colonel Andrew Tanly, another gay spark, was equally good. The star of the piece, however, was Miss Katherine Raymore.

FOOTBALL

A junior team from the Trinity College School, Port Hope, visited Peterborough on Saturday and played a friendly game with a junior team from the Collegiate, at Riverside Park, the Port Hope fourteen managed to win out by 6 points to 0, after an interesting game, in which Will Stratton starred for Port Hope and Cavanah for Peterborough.

McRae Gets Life.

Cornwall, Oct. 31.—Farquhar McRae, reeve of Lancaster Township will, if the sentence of the court be carried out, end his days within prison walls. Mr. Justice Sutherland sentenced him to life imprisonment in expiation of the shooting of William Shaw, druggist of Carp.

The sixty-five-year-old prisoner goes into captivity because twelve of his fellow-countrymen believe that, laboring under the excitement of provocation, he shot to death the young Scotch chemist who was assisting his friend, Dr. Magee, to recover his child. The jury returned a verdict of manslaughter after 1 3-4 hours consideration.

Before McRae had been led away to his cell his friends in the court room were planning a petition to Ottawa for clemency. It would be signed by every man in Glengarry, irrespective of religion or politics, said one of them. McRae will be removed to Kingston this week.

It is possible that a new trial will be applied for on the ground that the jury were allowed to read newspaper reports of the case, some of which are alleged to have been inflammatory. "They should never have seen them," said Mr. Pringle.

Hit Both Ways.

Brockville, Oct. 31.—James Cowan of Gananoque fell into the company of David Casey, a St Regis Indian, at Prescott. The pair came to Brockville and occupied a double room in a local hotel, but in the morning the Indian was gone and $2 of Cowan's money.

Casey lit out by the first train for Cornwall, where he was arrested and brought back to answer to the charge of theft. During the enquiry it developed that Cowan purchased liquor for the Indian both in Prescott and Brockville, for which he was fined $50 and costs, and in default was committed for two months. Casey is on remand in order that he may be used in other prosecutions to follow.

Frank Eastman was arrested here yesterday in possession of a horse and buggy which it is alleged he stole from a Smith's Falls liveryman on Saturday night. Eastman is 22 years of age, and says he belongs to Montreal. He was taken to Smith's Falls for trial.

It's a Real Fortune.

Brantford, Oct. 31.—Dr. Charles Perrin, brother of Dr. Thomas Perrin of San Jose, Cal., both reported to be heirs to a fortune of $4,500,000, which has been accumulating in England for 200 years, is in the city on a visit to Fred. Weatbrook, but he informs your correspondent that his visit had no connection with the claim established for the legacy. Dr. Perrin declined to discuss the case in any way, although he implied that the fortune was a genuine one. It is his second visit here in forty years, his family having been formerly well-known residents of Mount Vernon, Burford Township.

Aged Pair Married.

Sault Ste. Marie, Ont., Oct. 31.—At the age of 81, and for the fifth time in his life, Jacob Somes has entered into the bonds of matrimony, and the woman of his heart is Mrs. James Cole, a lady of 73 summers, who has been married once before.

Somes has lived here for many years and Mrs. Cole comes from Thessalon, where they will reside. The bridegroom is reputed to have amassed a large sum out of the sale of patent medicines.

Ask Taft to Protest

New York, Oct. 31.—President Taft is to be asked to transmit to the Czar of Russia a protest formulated at a meeting yesterday by New York clergymen of all denominations against the "systematic oppression" of the Jews in Russia. The protest is in the form of a resolution setting forth the "unjust and barbaric conditions" to which it is declared, the Jews in that country are subjected.

Strange Death In Chicago.

Chicago, Oct. 31.—What the police say was a murder, with many features which they were unable to explain, was revealed yesterday when the body of Blanche Dow was found naked, on the floor of her room in a down-town hotel.

The furniture was broken and the young woman's hair was torn down, giving evidence of a struggle. Despite these facts, there were no wounds on the body and both doors and the windows of the room was locked.

The police believe Miss Dow, who was about 25 years of age, was an actress. Several valuable jewels on her fingers were not disturbed.

Entered Canada Illegally.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 31.—Karl Kassay and Andrew Fahr, Hungarians, entered Canada illegally and were fined $10 each by Magistrate Fraser. They were ferried across the river from Grand Island.

Lincoln Liberals.

Niagara Falls, Ont., Oct. 31.—Dr. E. T. Kellam of this city yesterday announced that he would be a candidate for the Liberal nomination for the Legislature. The county Liberal convention will be held to-morrow.

WEST ENDS WON DECISIVE VICTORY OVER S. P. S.

Local Junior O.R.F.U. Team Defeated the Toronto Varsity Mulock Cup Champions in an Interesting Game at Riverside Park Yesterday Afternoon by 22 Points to 5, Leading All Through the Battle.

The West End Junior O.R.F.U. team won a decisive victory over the School of Practical Science team, Mulock Cup champions of Toronto University, in a well-played exhibition game before a small crowd at Riverside Park yesterday afternoon. The score was 22-5 in favour of Peterborough. The match was marked by nice running and kicking and good tackling and was very much enjoyed by the crowd, especially as Peterborough won the game.

The home team easily showed their superiority and although they had not considered victory, they always had the edge on the visitors. Their back out-kicked the Varsity men and the fumbles of the latter cost them two tries. Peterborough's line was seldom in danger and the visitors' only points were the result of their quarter back, Garnie Rankin, formerly of the local Collegiate team, grabbing an onside kick from Minorgan that was intended for Kirn and romping over the line for a try. Peterborough had more weight on the line and used it to advantage, while their wings followed down under the kicks in good style. The result was that the visitors were forced back on the defensive and while on the whole, their backs caught well and showed speed and dodging ability in running the ball back, yet they fumbled enough to give Peterborough a wide margin on the play.

A feature of the game was the playing of Quinlan for Peterborough. The Christie Mathewson of local baseball circles had played on Saturday for the Old Boys and was induced to come out yesterday with the West Ends. Although he has had no practice, he played in his old-time form and contributed the feature play of the day, when he grabbed a punt at centre and carried the ball through the whole S. P. S. team for a brilliant fifty yards dash for a touchdown. He was sure with his hands and ran and tackled nicely. Kirn played the full-back position with judgment and coolness, catching and running well. Minorgan at centre half easily out-punted his opponents, his long kicks proving great ground-gainers and he never muffed a punt all day. Eastwood was used at flying-wing and did good work on the line. Capt. Denison ran the team well and contributed some nice individual work at quarter. On the line Gilbert and Langley were always conspicuous by their following up, tackling and ball-getting ability. Hogan and Davidson did good work in the bucks, as did the inside wings, Turner and Thompson. Hill did some nice tackling and Ecclestone showed the best game he has played this season in the scrimmage. Webb did splendid work for a novice at the game.

There were two old Peterborough boys on the S. P. S. team, Hal Wallis in the scrimmage and Garnie Rankin at quarter back, and both played good rugby. Rankin passed and bucked well and scored the only points for his team on an onside kick that went wrong. Degruchy, a cousin of the famous Reg., showed great running ability, tearing off some pretty dodging runs, but he had a bad pair of hands and his fumbles were costly.

Acton did good work, both at middle wing and at centre half, where he was moved in the last half. Kay at outside wing, the captain of the visitors, was always in the limelight and Crashley and Castle performed to advantage on the back division.

Messrs. Leo. Derocher and Harry Hall handled the game splendidly and had little difficulty, their decisions being accepted without a murmur. The weather was ideal for football, cool, and with no sun and little wind to bother the backs. The teams lined up as follows:

Peterborough — Kirn, full-back; Quinlan, Minorgan, halves; Eastwood, flying wing; Denison, quarter; Ecclestone, Hill, Webb; scrimmage, Turner, Thomspon; inside wings, Hogan, Davidson; middle wings; Langley, Gilbert, outside wings.

Play was even around mid-field for a few minutes after the kick-off, and then Minorgan's long punts began to drive S.P.S. back. A long run followed by a kick outside by Minorgan gave the visitors a chance at Peterborough's quarter, but they lost the ball and were soon back on the defensive. A wild pass, following a long kick by Minorgan, gave Davidson the ball twenty yards out, and he went over for a try, only to be called back for having gone outside. It was Peterborough's ball ten yards out, but the S. P.S. line stiffened and held, and Minorgan was forced to kick on the third down, his punt going to the dead line for a single. There was no further scoring in the quarter.

Peterborough continued to press in the second quarter. Langley and Gilbert were following up Minorgan's kicks in great style and dragging the Varsity backs down. Finally, when Degruchy kicked from near his line, Minorgan made a nice catch and returned with a high punt over the line which Degruchy missed and Gilbert dropped on the ball for an easy try. Kirn converted neatly. Score, Peterborough 7, S.P.S. 0.

Peterborough kept up the same tactics and a few minutes later, when one of the S.P.S. backs lost a punt, Hill picked up the loose ball and gambled over for a try which Kirn failed to convert. Score, Peterborough 12, S.P.S. 0.

Half time saw the score unchanged. S.P.S. shifted Acton to the back division and moved Rice up in the second half and the change seemed to be for the better, as Acton did some nice punting. Peterborough, however, continued to force the visitors back, although play was around mid-field for a while. Finally, however, Quinlan gathered in a low punt from Acton at centre field and tore along the side of the field, dodging tackle after tackle for a touch-down. He was nailed outside the line, but managed to roll himself, the ball and the tackler over the whitewash for a touch. It was the best piece of work of the day and was especially notable because the catch was low and difficult and made on the dead-run in the midst of the S .P. S. wing. Kirn failed to convert. Score, Peterborough 17, S. P. S. 0.

S. P. S. failed to be down-hearted by this disaster and for the next few minutes had the better of the play. Acton was kicking nicely and the School wings followed up fast and nailed Minorgan several times before he could return or advance the ball. With the ball at Peterborough's quarter, Minorgan tried an outside kick to Kirn. The ball bounced over the latter's head and was grabbed by Rankin, who tore over unopposed, for a try, which Acton did not convert. Peterborough 17, S. P. S. 5.

Peterborough assumed the aggressive again after this play and a muff by Degruchy gave Eastwood the ball on the S. P. S. five yard line. They lost possession on a fumble, but regained again and when an S. P. S. missed an onside kick intended for Quinlan, the latter dropped on the ball almost on the line. From the side it looked as if the ball was over, but the officials said nay and it was West Ends ball a few inches out. On the first down, Ecclestone crashed through for a try which was not converted. Time was called a few seconds afterward.

Old Boys "Came Back" Beat Youngsters 14-11 In Good Game Saturday

There is nothing in that "can't come back" theory, Jas. J. Jeffries and his terrible fate notwithstanding. The Peterborough Old Boys rugby team shattered that old adage completely on Saturday afternoon when they tackled the West End junior O. R.F.U. team and defeated the present day exponents of the autumn game in an interesting struggle, by 14 points to 11. Nearly all the old guard residing in Peterborough turned out for the battle, and headed by such stalwarts as Gene Hurtubise, Dr. McPherson and Bill Meagher, the veterans performed in their old-time form, having until the last quarter, considerably the better of the argument and they had lead enough left over to tide them over the dying moments of the game, when they began to lose some of their ginger. Hurtubise performed at quarter back and his bucking had the West End on the run for a while. The first time he hit the line he tore along for twenty-five yards, and on several other occasions he ripped through for gains. Dr. McPherson played brilliantly on the back division, his kicking both with and against the wind being splendid and easily earning the victory for his team. The old Varsity star caught as if he had been playing every day, and his dodging runs were in evidence throughout. Quinlan also played splendidly on the back division. Dick Thornton and Bill Grady were right at home in the scrimmage and Meagher showed his old speed and ability to get down under the ball.

Eastwood, the captain of the Collegiate team, turned out with West Ends and his work was a feature throughout. His dodging runs gained great ground and his tackling was decidedly effective, the manner in which he got under Hurtubise and dragged him down when he tried to buck, getting the admiration of the crowd. Johnston had some good end runs to his credit and Denison bucked and ran well.

The West Ends only had twelve men in line, while the Old Guard managed to have thirteen. The teams were:

Old Boys—Evans, back; McPherson, Canniff, Quinlan, halves; Hurtubise, quarter; Grady, Thornton, Fitzgerald, scrimmage; wings, Elliott, Meagher, McKnight, Milburn, Dorris.

West Ends—Kirn, back; Eastwood, Johnston, halves; Denison, quarter; Ecclestone, Webb, Hill, scrimmage; Turner, Thompson, Hogan, Davidson, Langley, wings.

The West Ends had the wind in their favour in the first quarter and with a half gale blowing behind them Kirn's kicks gave them four singles. The Old Boys showed good form in holding the ball and bucking however, and kept the score down. There was a decided change in the second quarter, however. Kicking with the wind, McPherson's long punts put the West Ends on the defensive. Finally, on a wild pass behind the line, Hurtubise dropped on the ball for a try. This was quickly followed by a kick to the dead line and then a muffed punt allowed Evans to score a try, which Quinlan converted neatly. Just before half time McPherson booted to the dead line for another point and the West Ends were behind 13 to 4 at the half.

The youngsters rallied in the second half and from then on had the better of the game. However, the Old Boys fought determinedly and kept the score down. Two singles were all the West Ends could grab in the third quarter. Early in the fourth, a fumble gave Langley the ball a few yards outside the veterans' line, and he went over for a try, which was not converted. The Old Boys assumed the aggressive again and a long kick by McPherson gave them another point before the whistle blew, the final score being, Old Boys 14, West Ends 11.

FRANK LEAHY,
Of the T. A. S. Athletic Club, who won the junior Examiner road race yesterday, equalling Willie Edwards' record of 28 mins., 30 secs., made in 1909.

ALBERT SMOKE WINS THE TROPHY

THE SENIOR RACE.

Of the thirteen entries in the senior race, there were eight runners to face Starters W. R. G. Higgins and W. H. Cummings of Lakefield. Holnbeck of Cobourg and Worthley of Enniskmore were barred, because they have not been registered with the C.A. A.U., and Knapp, Miller and Billy Smoke, of Alderville, failed to put in an appearance. The eight starters were Albert Smoke of the Chemong Athletic Club, the favourite, W. Willis of Toronto, Herbert Keegan and Harold Smith running for the Peterborough Y.M.C.A., J. E. Lean of Camborne, and Sidney Knott, Scott Montgomery and Morris Montgomery, unattached, Peterborough. After the eight had been photographed by Mr. Fred L. Roy, they were given the word and amid a cheer from the assembled crowd, the sixth annual Examiner road race was under way. Willis took the lead at the start and showing his usual tactics, he opened up at a rapid gait. Smoke was content to let him make the pace and fell in behind the tall Y.M.C.A. runner, who carried the field along in jig-time, with Smoke and Smith holding on. The others did not attempt to follow the spurt started by Willis, evidently figuring that the men in front would come back after awhile, and so they did—except Smoke. The speedy Indian, contented himself with trailing Willis for over a mile, holding himself in reserve and evidently studying the leader. Finally, after a little over a mile of dusty road had been left behind, Smoke thought it was up to him to do some of the pacing and uncorking a link or two of speed, be shot by Willis and went out in front. The race was over right there. Willis tried to hold on, but the Indian was cutting out too rapid a pace and steadily grew away. Smith had tried to follow the leading pair but cramped up and fell behind. The Indian running by himself, kept up the same unrelenting fast gait and as far as he was concerned, there was nothing to it from then on .Lean, who had been leading the second division, running steadily and well within himself, began to come up on Willis, and Smith, who had hung to Smoke long enough to be drawn away from the others. He caught the tiring Smith, who stopped for repairs half way home and then set sail for Willis, who was still running in second position. Near Nassau the sturdy little Camborne runner overhauled the Y.M.C.A. boy, and putting on a sprint, passed him, and took second place. Smoke, of course, was far in the lead and out of sight by this time. Lean opened up a lead on Willis, but the Englishman was not beaten yet and refused to allow Lean to get any further away. Behind this pair were Scott Montgomery and Smith. Montgomery passed the latter when he stopped, but after a rub-down Smith took after the light-haired boy, passed him, taking fourth position, which he held to the finish. Knott was in sixth and last position, running easily but with not much speed. Morris Montgomery gave up at three miles and Keegan also threw up the sponge in the early stages. The men remained in these positions until the city limits were reached and then Willis gamely spurted and caught the Camborne man on Water street. The two ran like a team from there for five or six blocks, being on even terms at Edinburgh street, but Lean had the most left and out-sprinted his rival in the remaining distance, winning by half a block, with Willis third and Smith fourth. Scott Montgomery was the fifth to cross the line and the last to finish was Sidney Knott. The manner in which Smoke put the finishing touches on his ten mile jaunt was amazing to the crowd at the finishing. Just after he had passed the Y.M.C. A., the Indian threw his head back and cut loose with a terrific sprint, running like a hundred yards' man. He kept up the wonderful spurt right to the finish, with a happy smile on his face as he reached the line. All the way down he chatted and joked with his trainer and Manager Dan Whetung, who accompanied him in a buggy. Following is the result of the senior event:

1 ALBERT SMOKE, CHEMONG ATHLETIC CLUB.
2 J. E. LEAN, CAMBORNE, ONT.
3 W. WILLIS, PETERBOROUGH Y.M.C.A.
4 H. SMITH, PETERBOROUGH Y. M.C.A.
5 Scott Montgomery, Peterborough.
6 Sidney Knott, Peterborough.

Morris Montgomery, Peterborough, and Herbert Keegan, Peterborough Y. M.C.A., started, but did not finish.

The Junior Race.

There were twenty-four entries in the junior race, and ten failed to start, while there was a post entry in the person of Percy Ecobichon, leaving a field of fifteen starters, who were sent away by Strater Thos. McGeachie, at 10.38. The runners in this race, who had taken part previously, ran true to form, Frank Leahy repeating his victory of a year ago, while Cecil Armstrong was third as he had been in 1910. The surprise was furnished by Tommy McAuliffe, the little Ennismore boy, who ran a bang-up second, and in the showing of J. B. Mann, of the T. A. S. Athletic Club, who was fourth last year and who could not get closer than eighth yesterday. The winner of the Eastwood Trophy was counted on as being sure for one of the prizes.

CECIL ARMSTRONG,
of the Y.M.C.A., who was third in the junior race yesterday. He was up with the leaders for nearly all the distance.

When the word was given Cecil Armstrong of the Y. M. C. A. shot at once in the lead, and cut out a merry clip that soon had the field dropping back. McAuliffe followed the little Y. M. C. A. boy and for two miles the pair ran together at a pace that shook up the other runners. Leahy, running strong and fresh, led the second division, which had already strung out considerably. Half way home the Douro boy thought the pair in front had led enough, so he let loose a sprint that soon carried him up to the flying leaders; McAuliffe was leading at this stage, with Armstrong at his heels. Leahy joined the other pair and the three ran together until the outskirts of the city was reached. Here Armstrong had to drop back and the others went on together, running like a team. They soon opened a lead of one hundred yards on the Y. M. C. A. boy, but, try as they might, could not get away from each other. McAuliffe led most of the way in ,until they were well on their way to the finishing line. Then Leahy sprinted again and took the lead by five yards. Coming down George street, McAuliffe cut loose with a sprint that gained for him and he was right at Leahy's heels when Brock street was reached. Both sprinted from there to the finish and while it looked for a moment as if McAuliffe was going to overhaul his opponent, and win an eleventh hour victory, the Douro boy had enough left to stall off the sprint of the St. Martin's T. A. S. man, and he broke the tape a yard to the good. It was a magnificent finish and both boys were wildly cheered for their game effort on end. Both had run themselves out, and had nothing left when the race was over. Three-quarters of a minute behind came Cecil Armstrong, finishing strong and easily, but without a sprint being held back by Physical Director J. J. Thompson of the Y. M. C. A., who accompanied him on a bicycle. The youngster had third safely and a sprint might have been injurious and would not have gained him anything. O. Taylor of the Y. M. C. A. galloped home fourth in good shape, and behind him was Beresford Hamilton, a strong, likely-looking runner from the Lakefield Preparatory School. The next man home was also a Lakefield boy, Beecham Bates, of the Lakefield Public School, who sprinted from Brock street and finished very strong. Cecil Brown of the Y. M. C. A., was 7th and J. B. Mann of the T. A. S. eighth. Tommy Barnett was ninth, the same position as last year, while the tenth runner to come under the tape, was W. Kearns. Eleventh, and last, was Willie Downer of North Monaghan. Leahy negotiated the distance in 28 minutes, 30 seconds, equalling the record established by Willie Edwards of Keene, in 1909. Five miles in 28.30, on the road, is stepping to town some for a seventeen-year-old boy, and Leahy is to be congratulated upon his splendid performance.

The juniors started at 10.38 and their positions and the time at which they finished, are as follows:

2—THOS. McAULIFFE, Ennismore, St. Martin's T.A.S., 11.6 3-5.
3—CECIL ARMSTRONG, Peterborough Y.M.C.A., 11.7 1-5.
4—O. TAYLOR, Peterborough Y.M. C.A., 11.7 3-5.
5—Beresford Hamilton, Lakefield Preparatory School, 11.8.
6.—Beecham Bates, Lakefield Public School, 11.9.
7—Cecil Brown, Peterborough Y. M. C. A., 11.10 1-5.
8.—J. B. Mann, St. Peter's T. A. S., 11.10 2-5.
9.—Tommy Barnett, Peterborough, 11.11 1-5.
10.—W. Kearns, Peterborough, 11.13
11—Willie Downer, North Monaghan, 11.14 1-2.

BEN SIMPSON AS A CRITIC

The Hamilton Herald says: The Herald has arranged for something which will be real interesting to the numerous football enthusiasts in the city. Ben Simpson ,the famous halfback who booted the Tigers to victory on several occasions, will write a criticism of the games the Tigers play during the remainder of the season. Having played the game for a number of years, Mr. Simpson is well posted on all the fine points of the play and will be able to explain many of the plays which may puzzle the ordinary spectator. He will accompany the Tigers to Ottawa, and his opinion of what promises to be a great game should prove decidedly interesting.

HOCKEY

All Saints' hockey team will meet to-morrow night in the Chapel hall, at 8 o'clock. A full attendance of members is requested, as business of importance will be taken up.

NO RISK AT ALL

Cuts, bruises, burns, scalds, boils and such mishaps carry no risk of blood poisoning whatever, and cause very little discomfort, if you promptly apply that sure cure, "Mecca" Ointment. None should be without it. Big 3 oz. jar 25c. at all druggists.

POLICE COURT

Eleven dollars and fifty cents were the proceeds gathered in fines at this morning's session of the Police Court. Three holiday drunks made their way to the docket, two of which paid $5.75 for their sport. Geo. Davenport appeared for the first time, and was allowed to go. Tom Fabo, a foreigner ,who stated that he had been in the country six years, and another man were fined the $5.75.

Edward Parks was fined $5, which he was unable to pay, and will spend a month at Castle Nesbitt. The Magistrate said that as the charge was vagrancy, a month would probably suit him better than the fine, so he got it.

Fire Hall Notes

Fireman Archie McBride handed in his uniform this morning in accordance with instructions from Ald. Morgan, chairman of the Fire, Water and Light Committee.

Fireman Alex. Calder willl hand in his uniform to-night, and to morrow will commence his new duties of lock-master in charge of No. 6 Lock.

Ex-Fireman Wilson, who resigned his position with the Brigade a few weeks ago owing to sickness in his family, was reinstated yesterday.

To-day is pay day at the Hall.

IN GENERAL

What else in life so well worth while as showing a wanderer God's road?

Let me fail trying to do something, rather than sit still and do nothing.

Piano Lessons.—Miss Pearl McKee, teacher of Piano. Studio, Peterborough Conservatory of Music. Tel. 355.

Probabilities. — Northerly winds, with light rain or sleet. Wednesday, northwesterly winds, cloudy and cooler.

We should always do our best, and, so far as our work is concerned, we should not be contented with second best.

Madrigal Club.—The Conservatory Madrigal Club will meet to-night for practice at 8 o'clock sharp. A full attendance is requested.

All the doors that lead inward to the secret place of the Most High, are doors outward—out of self — out of smallness—out of wrong.

I do not know why suddenly the storm should rage so fiercely around me in its wrath, but this I know: God watches all my path; and I can trust.

Houses to Rent.—A few more houses to rent, from $5.00 to $25.00 per month and upward. M. Carton, C. J. Carroll, 372 Water street. Phone 822.

There is no surer way to win your daily battle against evil within and without, than to make an offensive and defensive alliance with Jesus Christ.

Painting and Decorating.—Painting paper hanging, graining, etc. All work quickly and neatly executed. Country work specially attended to. —Arthur Guppy, 558 Water street.

FIGHTING GOES ON

Imperial Troops Fail to Recapture City of Hankow

REFORMERS ARE DIVIDED

Pekin, Nov. 1.—Fighting between the rebel forces and the Imperialists continues. It is believed that the revolutionists are making a determined resistance. Late advices received here indicate that Hankow City was not retaken by the Imperialists, although Gen. Yin Tching captured the railway station immediately to the north.

In the meantime there are serious dangers along the railway line between the War Minister's position and Pekin. Disaffection among troops and people has prevented satisfactory communications between the various sections of the loyal army.

Yuan Shi Kai started for the front Monday and is now at Sin Yuan Chau. The policy which he will adopt is eagerly awaited. Negotiations looking to a settlement have been under way between Yuan Shi Kai and the revolutionary leaders, but the latter are confident of their strength and have expressed themselves as having little faith in the promises of the throne.

Foreign troops are guarding the mission houses in Pekin.

The native press has received the reform edict favorably. The Chinese, remembering how frequently the promises contained in former edicts were forgotten, may not be satisfied with these, however. The reformers in Pekin are divided into two parties, the extremists, mainly southerners, who insist upon the expulsion of the Manchus, and the moderates, who are numerous throughout the empire. The latter are indifferent as to whether the dynasty is Manchu or Chinese, but they want great administrative changes and believe that drastic measures are necessary to give the reforms a fair start.

The vital question is whether the two wings will be able to unite. The inherent tendency of the Chinese is toward compromise, but unexpected circumstances frequently carry the day in China. At Canton the viceroy and leading gentry are classed as moderates, while the masses are extremists. The same condition prevails in the Provinces of Hunan, Hupeh, Honan, Shansi, Kiangsi and Sze Chuan. Naturally, Manchuria and Chili remain loyal.

Shang Tung, Kiang Su, Anh Wei, Che Kiang, Ku Kien, Kwei Chow and Yunnan are apparently half-hearted. Elsewhere incipient rebellion is spreading.

An important question for the north is whether Gen. Chang, leader of the Lanchau soldiers, is acting independently or in collusion with other rebels. If the edicts satisfy the northern soldiers the control of North China will not be seriously imperiled, but concerted action on the part of Gen. Chang and the southerners would probably result in the flight of the court to Jehol.

No Bail For Motorist.

Toronto, Nov. 1.—Declaring that there are more people being killed by motor cars than the outposts of an army in war, Magistrate Denison refused to grant bail to Stephen Hewgill, charged with manslaughter in killing Lem How, a Chinese boy, with his motor car in Homewood avenue. This action was taken despite the combined pleas of Crown Attorney Corley and the prisoner's counsel.

Counsel protested that the street was not lighted and that the man had immediately given himself up. The crown attorney urged that the man was a careful driver. The magistrate declared that he had killed the boy and that was all there was to it.

Stricken With Blindness.

Winnipeg, Nov. 1.—Capt. W. S. Conger of the local militia, awoke Monday to find himself stricken with total blindness. He is now being treated at the General Hospital, and hopes are entertained for the recovery of his sight. No cause is known for the strange occurrence.

HOME RULE SCHEME

Subsidy Will be Asked to Launch Irish Government

MAY CONTROL CUSTOMS

London, Nov. 1.—The home rule scheme, which has been under secret preparation for some time past at the hands of Premier Asquith, Augustin Birrell, Chief Secretary for Ireland, assisted by Sir John Simon and other prominent members of the House of Commons, was discussed yesterday by the Cabinet, it is believed for the first time. The finacial features of the scheme are attracting the attention of all parties. The theory has been current that the Imperial Parliament will be asked to launch the Irish Government with a subsidy estimated at from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000.

The Treasury estimates that the Irish expenditure exceeds the revenue by $6,500,000 annually. The Nationalists consider this an exaggeration by at least $1,500,000. They contend that any Irish deficit is due to extravagant expenses imposed by Parliament, notably those attached to the constabulary.

An alternative suggested to a lump grant is that the Government maintain some item of Irish expense. Old age pensions are principally mentioned. A report last night credits the committee in charge of the home rule scheme as endorsing this. The best opinion is that the Imperial Parliament will keep control of Irish customs and excise, thus insuring a general system for the United Kingdom and preventing Ireland from raising a protective wall against England, as the largest colonies have done.

ONE LONG SESSION.

House of Commons Will Probably Sit Till March.

Ottawa, Nov. 1.—It is practically certain now that there will be only one session of Parliament, which will adjourn at Christmas and run after New Year's, probably until March. It was at first expected there would be a short session of a month and then possibly another called in the spring.

Instructions have been given by the Finance Minister to the various Departments to prepare their estimates, not only for the remainder of this year, but for the 1912-13 fiscal year, which clearly indicates a session lasting until well after Christmas. Officials this week are hard at work on the estimates, and an effort will be made to have everything in ship shape by Nov. 15. They will be submitted to the Ministers for revision and approval next week.

Last night only two Ministers were in the city, Hon. W. T. White and Hon. T. W. Crothers. Except the western Ministers, who are expected towards the end of the week, the rest of the Cabinet have gone to Halifax to attend the big national banquet to the Premier. They will be back Friday or Saturday, and next week will see a busy time for the Ministers preparing their program for the session.

Little important constructive legislation is expected until after Christmas, as the Ministers have not had time to definitely settle their policy or map out their plans.

Wireless Tells of Tragedy.

London, Nov. 1.—The following marconigram was received from the yacht Sapphire: "Nine of the crew of the streamer Ravenshough, Glasgow to Riga, were picked up by us at 8.45 a.m. in Barra Sound, outer Hebrides. The ship is supposed to have foundered off Sherrymore early on Sunday morning. It is feared ten men have been drowned."

CHURCH IS BURNED.

Joolness of Nuns and Priests Prevents Fearful Disaster.

Montreal, Nov. 1.—At 4.15 o'clock yesterday afternoon, an alarm of fire was turned in from the box at the corner of Atwater avenue and Workmen street, and by the time the first division of the brigade reached the scene, it was found that the St. Irene Roman Catholic Church was in flames, and the fire had gained such a hold on the structure that a second alarm was turned in immediately.

A large body of police were rushed out to the scene as soon as the magnitude of the outbreak was made known, and they had the utmost difficulty in keeping the rapidly gathering crowds at a safe distance from the walls, when, about a quarter of an hour after the outbreak was discovered, the tower and a portion of the roof fell in and the walls cracked and sagged in such an alarming manner that the crowd scattered in all directions.

With the second alarm, the ambulances of the various city hospitals reached the scene and were ready for any emergency.

The fire was intensely fierce, and the hangings and decorations fed the flames, which spread with great rapidity.

At the time the outbreak was discovered, there were five hundred children from the parochial school in the church attending the special services of prayer and meditation for October, and they, under the cool guidance of the reverend sisters and the priests, were got safely out of the building before the danger became too pronounced.

With the turning in of the second alarm, the danger of the walls and tower crashing down became more pronounced, and no sooner had the steamers been started and the lines of hose laid, when the tower of the edifice commenced to totter and the roof adjacent to it caved in with a roar which lent the flames and sparks flying over the adjoining roofs.

The crowd in their eagerness to see what was going on, hampered the men somewhat, and ran considerable risk in passing close to the walls, which every moment showed tendencies to fall outward. And so menacing did this danger become, that certain portions were razed by dynamite in order to give the fire-fighters better facilities for getting at the blaze.

Aiding the firemen in every way by telling them what the interior arrangements of the building were like, the cure was in the thick of the fight without fear. The flames rapidly spread to the presbytery adjoining the edifice, and this was soon aflame from attic to basement, and the residents in the neighborhood were on their roofs and wooden galleries, alert that no falling embers started incipient blazes.

The fire broke out without warning of any kind, and it is presumed commenced in the basement, as the first intimation of any kind that the congregation had that anything was wrong was when a sheet of flames shot up through the floor of the church.

Want to Flap the Flag.

Toronto, Nov. 1.—International complications are in sight as a result of the action of the Board of Censors for Ontario in refusing to permit moving picture films being exhibited in the province when they glorify the Stars and Stripes and ignore the Union Jack. That is these complications will come if the Motion Picture Distributing & Sales Co. can prevail on the U. S. Secretary of State to take action as a result of this "national affront."

This is a paragraph from their letter to Secretary Knox:

"As a further explanation of our interest in this matter, we are engaged in manufacturing and selling films throughout the United States and Canada, and we feel that a ruling of this kind has an international bearing and is one which should be brought to your attention. We consider it an insult to our flag and detrimental to our commercial interests."

ROWELL IS LEADER

Graham Moves Vote of Gratitude to Retiring Leader of Opposition

INSISTS ON RETIRING

Toronto, Nov. 1.—Hon. A. G. MacKay has resigned as leader of the Liberal party in Ontario.

Newton Wesley Rowell, K.C., has accepted the leadership.

The platform of the Liberals in the campaign now on is being prepared by a special committee of fifteen representative and prominent Liberals and will be given out by Leader Rowell in a day or so, it is expected.

This is the substance of what occurred yesterday, the most fateful day for a long, long while for the Liberal party in this province.

The gathering that throughout the day and far into the night debated the party's policy was in name the annual meeting of the General Reform Association of Ontario, but in fact it was a convention of Liberals to decide on the problems that faced the party.

The resignation of Mr. MacKay was the prominent feature naturally of the day. While it did not come as a big surprise, the nature of its coming was not anticipated. The resignation was not presented personally by Mr. MacKay. He was not at the meeting. Mr. C. M. Bowman, the Liberal whip in the Legislature, on Chairman Mowat's suggestion, told of what had happened at a caucus held by the late M.P.P. and candidates already in the field on Monday evening and continued Tuesday morning. To this caucus Mr. MacKay had handed his resignation, asking for its immediate acceptance.

N. W. ROWELL, K.C.

Mr. MacKay had tendered his resignation, Mr. Bowman went on to say, because of an attack on his personal character in the courts. The charge Mr. MacKay declared was an absolute blackmail, but as it would be impossible to clear himself in the courts before election time, he deemed it wiser to withdraw and not handicap his party in any way. Until the charge was completely and absolutely shown to be without a vestige of foundation Mr. MacKay must not allow his followers to be saddled with any responsibility in the matter.

At midnight the caucus adjourned, meeting again in the morning, when Mr. MacKay was asked to allow a complete statement of all the facts relating to the charge to be published, but this he was not willing to accede to, and so fifteen minutes before the opening of the meeting of the association, his resignation was accepted.

While Mr. MacKay said he appreciated the fact that no Conservative of standing would aught but condemn the proceedings taken against him; yet he had no doubt as to where the accusations came from. He repeated that the charges were without foundation in fact, and said that all his friends could rest assured that he would vindicate himself beyond possible cavil.

The caucus, Mr Bowman continued had passed a resolution, which he read, to the effect that they had accepted Mr. MacKay's resignation with the deepest regret and trusted that his action would not deprive the party of the benefits of his great talent and strong personality. They further expressed unbounded confidence in Mr MacKay's personal integrity and honor.

"The Parliamentary party," Mr. Bowman then said to the meeting of the Association, "thus their wisdom a leader, I suggest that the association appoint a committee to confer with the Parliamentary party." J. E. Atkinson then moved, that the president of the association, F. F. Pardee, A. McD. Mowat, and A. J. Young, confer with the Parliamentary party as to a leader. And, awaiting the result of his conference, the meeting proceeded.

A discussion of the policy of the party occupied most of the day, but early in the afternoon Hon. Geo. P. Graham, seconded by Mr. Ewing of South Huron, placed before the meeting a resolution that we, the members of the Reform Association of Ontario, having learned with profound regret of the resignation of Hon. A. G. MacKay, desire to place on record our appreciation of the untiring energy, brilliancy, and devoted zeal of our late leader and to place on record our appreciation of what he has done for Liberalism in Ontario and the Dominion.

Loud cheering and applause met the resolution and its sentiment was heartily concurred in by all. Three rousing cheers for Mr. MacKay were given.

Mr. Graham went on to say that "our friend Mr. Whitney has presented a list of measures, which he says are on the statute books but I want to say that the most salient points bear the imprint of Hon. A. G. MacKay. I take no hesitation in saying that Mr. MacKay was the ablest man in the Legislature."

When the members of the association met again in the evening their number had diminished considerably. The leadership committee at once made its report. They announced that Mr. Rowell was their choice. The announcement was hailed with loud acclamations that clearly promised the strong support of the members of the Liberal party.

Mr. Rowell addressed the gathering after the cheers had subsided.

"I appreciate more than I can tell you, the expression of confidence you have given me in asking me to accept the responsible position of the leader of the Liberal party in this province.

"I have decided to say yes. If it were to do over again, I might almost decide to say no. Not that I do not value the call you have given me, but because of the responsibilities of the position you have called me to, and because of the difficulties of discharging those responsibilities consistently with the other demands upon me."

Mr. Rowell said he would be unable to take up the active duties of his new office for ten days, as it would take that time for his to dispose of certain work in his profession, meaning cases now before the courts.

The new leader, in his address, dealt with New Ontario. He stated that as the Liberal party had saved the district for the province, and that its resources under Liberalism were first explored and made known, it was fitting that its development should be advanced by the Liberal party.

"I'm not now going to discuss the question of moral and social reforms, excepting to say that we all believe that the government of this province comes more closely in touch with the people than does the Dominion Government, and that being so, I believe that the Liberals of this province will stand for such measures in social and moral reform that will set a mark for the whole Dominion."

By ARTHUR STRINGER

McKinnon swung up beside her as the door went down. He was astride her body almost, fighting and panting, for a swarthy-faced Locombian was on the car-step, making frenzied thrusts at her with his carbineend. Another was on the cartridge boxes, and he shot once, scorching the operator's face with his powder flash as it passed him. He had no time for a second shot, for McKinnon's hand went up and his revolver barked. The carbine fell forward into the seat between them. The Locombian himself rolled sideways, to the left, with a howl of pain. He staggered to his feet, swayed there a second ,and then toppled backward over the boxes, and fell from the car.

Another man took his place as he fell. McKinnon sprang for him, catching and jerking upward the barrel of his carbine as he fired, tearing a hole through the car-roof.

Then the two men closed, and as they fought and tore at each other in the swerving and pounding car, the sentries from the ship's bow kept firing along the dark track.

Then a third man, the officer who had held the lantern, swung from the now racing car's handrail forward, until he reached the driving seat. He had taken out his sword—the girl could see the white steel glimmer in the dim light. The thought flashed through her, as she saw it, that swords were foolish and obsolete weapons. She had always looked on them as mere ornaments of dress, as useless as an epaulette. But now she knew that she had been mistaken, for she could see the agile little officer whipping and slashing with his naked blade as he climbed and worked his way up to the box-pile, and the nearness of that glimmering steel intimidated her, even more than a carbine flash could.

It must have been several seconds before she realized that the slashing sword end was meant for her, that the frenzied little figure was beating and prodding through the darkness in an effort to reach her own shrinking body. McKinnon's revolver lay in the bottom of the car; the girl could feel it with her shaking hands. There was only one thing to do.

She quickly raised it, closed her eyes, and fired. The shot went wide, for she had aimed it low ,at his knees. But it served to fix her position in the mind of her assailant: and again she saw the naked steel flash and shimmer in the darkness. She fired again, before it had time to reach her.

She knew the bullet had broken his arm, even before his grasp on the handrail relaxed. She saw him sway back, helplessly, and then topple and fall outward, against the stringpiece of the pier. She stood up, and looked back for her companion. She could just make out the two men still struggling back and forth, doggedly, determinedly. Then she heard a short scream of agony, for one of the strugglers had caught a forefinger of the other and levered it resolutely back, until it snapped and broke at the third joint. Then, even before that cry of pain died away, she saw one man raise the other up, bodily, and bring him down with all his remaining strength on the close-packed cartridge boxes. The blow seemed to stun him: before his senses came back to him his panting adversary had taken advantage of that helplessness, and was rolling and pushing him out from the back of the racing car.

He remained so long there at the rear of the car, gasping and fighting for breath again, that the waiting girl was in doubt as to who had been the victor. Then he called to her, and she understood.

She lowered the revolver, slowly, as he clambered weakly back over the boxes, and dropped in the seat beside her.

"Are you hurt?" he gasped.

"No!" she said. But the sound was more like a sob. The siren of the Laminian was now screaming and bellowing out through the velvety black quietness of the midnight waterfront. The sentries on the ship were still shooting after them, foolishly, and adding to the intermittent uproar. But the car, by this time, had covered more than half of the mile-long pier. A land-breeze, balmy and many-odoured, blew in their faces. On either side of them, through the darkness, pulsed the ghostly white lacework of the beach-surf.

"Thank God, we're free!" said McKinnon devoutly.

CHAPTER XXVIII.
THE COUNTER-FORCES.

McKinnon's cry of thankfulness was cut short by an exclamation from the girl at his side as the car rocked and swayed along the uneven pier-track.

"Look!" she gasped. "They are closing the gates ahead of us! They are shutting us in!"

McKinnon peered through the darkness. He could see a number of moving lights: they shifted about through the gloom, small and restless, like fire-flies. He could also make out the shadowy lines of a building or two. When the track ran between these buildings, at the end of the pier, a white-painted wooden gate had been swung and locked across the rails to stop the car. He could see the light from the restlessly moving lanterns refracted from its painted slats, from the swords of the officers, and the rifles of the waiting soldiers.

He knew what it meant, but it was too late for half measures. With the quickness of thought he jerked down two of the heavy cartridge boxes, to the left side of the driving seat, as a barricade against a chance bullet. He felt sure it would be only a chance bullet; his contempt for both the arms and the marksmanship of the Latin-American was of long standing. He hauled and twisted and rolled two boxes as quickly down on the right hand end of the driving seat, calling to the girl at his side to crouch down between his knees as he reached out and took the speed-lever in his own hand.

Alicia had instinctively slowed down the car, for the moving lights were now not more than two hundred feet before them. McKinnon, with his foot held ready on the brakes, threw the motor out to full speed. He no longer felt afraid of the flimsy wooden gate. What he feared was a tie across the track or a switch thrown open to derail him. And any moment, he felt, as the heavy car gathered speed and once more hurled itself forward, they would start shooting at him with their pot-metal rifles.

He crouched lower and lower between his barricade of boxes as the car swung in toward the shadowy pier-end, so that his stooping body forced the girl to the very floor of the driving seat. He saw a red tongue or two of flame dart out of the darkness ahead of him, and he knew that the firing had begun. He could hear the whine of the bullets as they passed overhead; he could hear the lead ping and pound against the car-sides. He had little fear for the boxes of ammunition surrounding him: the cartridges were covered enough by the powdered fluxing slag to be cushioned against concussion. Once, indeed, a bullet splintered against the wood of the very box on which he leaned. He held his breath and waited, racking and swinging onward toward the moving lights.

But still the firing kept up. The white-painted gate before him seemed a mirage, which receded as he advanced. It seemed as if he would never get to it. And he knew what a bullet might do at any moment. He carried no light and he felt certain that as yet the men attacking him had nothing against which to centralize their fire. But as he came closer he knew that the advantage would be lost. Then it suddenly occurred to him that a show of resistance would be a possible help to him. He had no time to feel for one of the carbines that still lay somewhere about the bottom of the car. But his groping fingers found the revolver on the car-seat cushion behind him.

Before his arm could go up, however, he knew that it was too late. The fire was pouring in on them broadside; he could hear the whistle of the bullets and the splintering of the car hood sides. He had ridden down the lights and the waiting men.

The stabbing and jetting and drifting powder smoke obscured the gate, so that they were upon it before he knew it. There was a second rending and snapping of wood, a vision of flying white pickets, a cry from the soldiers on either side of him .But the car had passed its second barrier, carrying away one end of the frame-work across its battered lamps.

McKinnon took a deep breath and waited with his foot still on the brake, oppressed by the terror of a sudden derailment. But the great car kept to the tracks and went thundering in between the shadowy buildings that mercifully shut them off from the grilling rifle fire of De Brigard's men. He knew, by the passing of the thunderous echo, that they were in the open again, circling up through the scattering lines of mud huts. The sound of a shot or two still came to his ears. He could feel the girl move; she was trying to rise to the seat But he held her there between his knees as the car continued to plunge and sway along the crooked tracks. Now, and then the howling of dogs came to his ears, breaking through the continuous monotone of the wind rushing past his face., straining and peering into the darkness ahead. Far out in the roadstead the Laminian's siren was still bellowing and roaring. An answering steam-whistle somewhere in the east took up the stentorian complaint; lights began to appear in the houses of the wakened town.

Alicia still pinned down by his knees, was struggling and calling to him. He knew that she was safe, that she was still unharmed, and that was all he cared to know.

"Hurry!" she called to him.

"Yes," he answered, leaning closer to catch her words.

"We circle about the town," she was calling into his ear. "We have to come out by Point Asuncion, next to the new hospital. There will be guards there. They can cross from the pier-end almost as soon as we can circle around!"

"It's out to the last notch," McKinnon replied, and she had to steady herself in the reeling car by suddenly catching at his arm.

"They'll try to stop us there!" she called out to him once more.

"They can't," he called back recklessly, almost drunkenly, for the speed of their escape seemed to have gone to his head. "They can't!"

He suddenly forced her down to her former position between his sheltering knees, for his straining eyes had once more caught sight of moving lanterns ahead.

The girl was right! They had passed through the heart of the town, and were once more on its ragged outskirts. They were following a little embankment of made land, of a filled-in swamp side, littered with cinders and scrap-iron. McKinnon could see the oily glimmer of water beneath him to the right. To the left the ghost like chimney and walls of a power house floated past and were lost behind them, as the car rumbled over a culvert and ground and bit with its wheel flanges on the curve that took them sweeping in again toward Point Asuncion. But all the while his eyes were on the moving lights ahead.

Suddenly he uttered a startled cry, a cry that had more resentment than fear in it. Then he stood up in his seat, reaching back for one of the carbines as he rose. For the drifting and shifting lights had defined themselves. He had made out the meaning of the movement that he had to face.

It was a body of uniformed men carrying a bridge-girder of iron. And he knew that girder was meant to stop his flight. His last doubt as to his enemy's intention disappeared with the sudden pinging of a rifle bullet through the darkness above him.

He ducked low as he heard the sound, and brought his carbine into play. Throwing the old-fashioned magazine-lever down and back, he took quick but careful aim at the moving lanterns, light by light. It was not until his magazine was empty that he dropped the weapon and caught up his revolver. His shots were going wild, he knew, but he did not stop. He saw the moving lights come to a halt, almost beside the track-edge. He saw one of them go down and scatter, and the oil break into flames. He saw the remaining lights waver, draw back, and disperse. And the girder fell as the men wavered and retreated. But it did not fall on the rails.

He swept past where it lay beside the burning oil, six good feet from the track. He heard the hasty volley they tried to pour in on him broadside, as he went. But they had nothing more than a racing shadow for a target ,and the car had thundered past before they could make a second move. He felt the girl clasping his knee: whether from fright or weakness or gratitude at their deliverance he could not tell. Nor did he care to ask as he helped her up into the seat.

They were clear of the town now and in the open country. A lone level stretch of swampland, musky smelling, miasmal, blanketed with a feverous night-mist, stretched before them. McKinnon knew that no courier could overtake them. He remembered that no wires ran from Puerto Locombia inland, that the coast was cut off from the hinterland, that they were comparatively safe until they had climbed the Height of Land and Guariqui itself came in sight. Then there would be the Liberal army's lines to run. De Brigard's sentinels to pass. Then, if all went well, their journey would be at an end. Getting into Guariqui would mean one last risk and one last fight; but in the meantime they were safe.

He lessened the mad speed of the car a little, wondering, for the first time ,if they carried enough gasoline to see them to their journey's end. The more he thought over that problem of gasoline supply the more it disturbed him. With his tank once empty they would be stranded in a hostile country, in which there would be no hiding, from which there could be no escape. The mere terrifying thought of such a contingency caused him to throw out the speed-lever a notch or two. He noticed, as they plunged on and on through the quietness of the night, that his hands were cut and scratched, that his face was caked with dried blood ,that his body was sore and stiff. But deep within him was a persistent and unquenchable glow of exhilaration, something more than mere speed-drunkenness and mere thankfulness for delivery from past dangers.

It was the world-old and primordial joy in accomplishment, the intoxication of conquest implanted in him by a thousand fighting ancestors. And he felt at his side the tired and overtaxed body of the woman for whom he was battling: and as she swayed there with the swaying of the car, letting her weight fall against his shoulder and then recede from it, this feeling that might have been nothing more than pagan exultation was touched and transformed into something higher. The air beat against their faces, side by side nocturnal moths flattened against their clothing and were held there by the wind.

McKinnon could see that they were beginning to climb, now that the swampland had been left behind, and that leaves and palm-fronds were rustling on either side of them. The air seemed to grow clearer, the darkness less abysmal. He could see that they were at last on the edge of the banana-belt, still climbing and pounding and swaying upward. Their path was now a lonely aisle through the forest of rustling greenery that crowded up to the very track-edge: sometimes a leaf swept the car-roof. At times they could hear the ripple of water in the irrigation ditches. Once a light swung across the track, a mile ahead. It brought the lever out to full speed again, and a carbine ready, and the two figures in the car lower down behind their barricade. A voice shouted to them, petulantly ,out of the darkness as they swept past, but that was all.

They were grinding and screeching on a curve again, before McKinnon could lessen the speed. As they swept around the sharp quarter circle, the car descended on what must have been a grazing burro or a steer. The heavy framework shuddered with the force of the impact: there was an animal-like sound, half groan, half grunt, as the obstructing black mass was thrown aside. McKinnon felt a spurt of blood flung up in his face, and the next moment held his breath, for he knew they had sped out on a cobweb of steel that bridged the canonlike bed of a river. But still they kept on, up and up, until the gradient began to tell on the motor and the air grew perceptibly cooler. Forest trees were about them now ,and they could hear the startled call of birds and the cry of monkeys. Once a jaguar called out through the night, and once, as they swept past a sleeping village of little white huts, they saw the glow of coals in an open mud oven.

But still the flying wheels carried them up and up, until they could see behind them the vague glimmer of the Caribbean, and the starlight grew so clear that McKinnon could make out the woman's locked hands in her lap at his side. He felt her shiver with the cold, and forced her to drink a little of the liquor from his brandy flask. Then he groped about, looking for a covering, for he knew that as the altitude grew greater the cold would increase. Under the seat-cushions he found an oilskin coat, and helped her into it. The coat was much too large for her, but he doubled it over in front, and held it in with a cushion strap about her waist.

He noticed, for the first time, that they were both hatless. And as he began to feel the penetrating chill creep into his own bones, he swallowed a mouthful of brandy, and buttoned his coat close up to his throat. But they were still racing on, up and up toward the Cordilleras. And he thanked what gods he thought were watching over him that the gasoline had held out, and that the car had kept to its track.

A cluster of three or four lights showed ahead, on their left, and brought a little cry from the girl.

"That's Paraiso!" she called out to him. "The road divides here. We must take the track to the right!"

"That means a switch!" called McKinnon ,slowing down.

"We have to circle Pariaso Hill," she explained. Then she stood up, with her hand on his shoulder, and peered ahead through the darkness.

Fearful Headaches

Stomach Bad, No Appetite, Was Losing Weight and Strength

Wonderful Change When Health Was Restored by

DR. CHASE'S NERVE FOOD

Headache is a symptom and not a disease in itself. It acts as a danger signal to warn you of serious trouble.

By reading Mr. Donneral's letter you wil be satisfied that there is no treatment to be compared to Dr. Chase's Nerve Food as a means of building up the system and removing the cause of headaches, sleeplessness and indigestion.

Mr. Charles Donneral, Kleinburg, Ont. writes: "I wish to communicate to you the great cure which I received from Dr. Chase's Nerve Food For over two years I suffered from fearful headaches, my appetite was always poor, and the stomach bad. I took medicines from physicians, but the headaches persisted, and I was rarely free from them.

"Reading about Dr. Chase's Nerve Food, I began using it, with little idea that I would be benefitted. I had become thin and weak, but the very first box helped me, and with continued treatment I have been cured and feel like a new man. The headaches have disappeared, y appetite is good and digestion excellent. I write this letter in hope that other sufferers from headache may use Dr. Chase's Nerve Food and be cured."

PERFECT PANACEA FOR RHEUMATISM

"FRUIT-A-TIVES" WILL ALWAYS CURE THIS TROUBLE

McMILLAN'S CORNER, Ont.

"Your remedy Fruit-a-tives is a perfect panacea for Rheumatism. For years, I suffered distressing pains from Sciatic Rheumatism, being laid up several times a year, and not being able to work at anything. I went to different doctors who told me there was no use doing anything; it would pass away.

Fortunately, about two years ago, I got "Fruit-a-tives" and they cured me.

Since then, I take them occasionally and keep free of pain. I am satisfied that "Fruit-a-tives" cured me of Rheumatism and they will cure anyone who takes them". JOHN B. McDONALD.

Rheumatism, Sciatica and Lumbago are caused by Uric Acid—a poisonous substance formed as a result of acid indigestion and impurities in the blood.

"Fruit-a-tives", or intensified fruit juices, is the greatest blood purifying medicine in the world.

"Fruit-a-tives" keeps the whole system free of uric acid and will always cure Rheumatism in every form.

50c. a box, 6 for $2.50, or trial size, 25c. At all dealers or sent postpaid on receipt of price by Fruit-a-tives Limited, Ottawa.

The Famous Rayo Lamp.

The best part of the day is the evening, when the whole family is gathered together around the lamp.

The old days of the smoky fireplace and flickering candle are gone forever. In their place have come the convenient oil stove and the indispensable Rayo Lamp.

There are to-day, in the United States alone, more than 3,000,000 of these Rayo lamps, giving their clear, white light to more than 3,000,000 homes.

Other lamps cost more, but you cannot get a better light than the low-priced Rayo gives. It has become so popular we may almost call it "the official lamp of the American family."

IRISH TONGUE BEING REVIVED

France and Germany Are Paying Much Attention to It.

The misery of religious and political animosities in Ireland has been greatly mitigated in recent years. There is a growing recognition among men of all creeds and all parties that they have interests in common as Irishmen, and that Ireland needs the service of all her sons. It is true that political opinions still mainly follow the lines of religious belief, a Protestant, that is, is usually a Unionist, and a Roman Catholic is usually a Home Ruler. But these old walls of sectarian partition are breaking down.

There is a genuine revival of interest in the old native language. It is part of that natural renaissance, the workings of whose mighty spirit can be seen in many directions. Every street name plate in Dublin now bears the name in Irish as well as in English letters, and Irish has been made a compulsory subject at the new Roman Catholic University. Yet there are singularly few signs of popular interest in the attempt to galvanise the old language into new life. Among some scholarly patriots, who regard the native tongue as expressing the ethos of the nation, there is an intense zeal for Irish, and that splendid Irishman, Dr. Douglas Hyde, has communicated his enthusiasm for the vernacular tongue to an ardent body of disciples. This revival of enthusiasm for the Irish language is a very significant phase of the national awakening.

TIGERS FOR THE KING

Maharajah of Nepal Is Arranging Rare Sport for George V.

If King George does not bring back from India a magnificent collection of hunting trophies it will not be the fault of the Maharajah of Nepal, who is making stupendous preparations for a unique tiger hunt in which the newly crowned Emperor of India will take part. Some idea of the grandeur of this hunt may be had when one hears that it will take 500 elephants to carry the hunters. These beasts are now being trained to stand the noise of guns and the sudden onslaught of maddened tigers.

The hunt will take place in the jungles of Nepal, which are the private property of the Maharajah and which, situated on the southern foothills and marshy tarai of the Himalayas, are the densest and most unexplored of any in India. They are literally swarming with wild beasts, which are very rarely disturbed, because foreign sportsmen are excluded, except when invited by the Maharajah. The shooting done by the Maharajah himself is not enough to make an impression on the game, which includes wild elephants and rhinoceroses, with all kinds of tigers, bears, leopards, wild boars, and deer.

ERUPTION OF ETNA

It Commenced with a Series of Terrific Explosions

The toll of death and destruction caused by the eruption of Etna is daily reaching higher figures. It is thought the final counting will compare favorably with those of any past disaster due to the volcano's activity. The devastation extends over an area of 460 square miles which the mountain covers. The eruption began with a series of terrific explosions, during which giant tongues of white flame leaped to the sky. Since then as many as 16 new craters have burst forth within a radius of seven miles from the central crater at a height of 8,000 feet, all of them belching dense smoke, showers of stones and ashes, and rivers of white-hot lava, which advanced at the rate of one mile per hour towards Linguaglossa and Castighone. They destroyed the superb pine forests and all the fields and vineyards in their track. The main lava stream, consisting of a solid advancing wall of fire fully three-quarters of a mile wide, has already buried the village of Bollichiata. A heavy rain of ashes continued incessantly over Catania and the whole region accompanied by frequent alarming shocks of earthquake, stronger than any felt in Italy since the great upheaval at Messina.

HEREDITARY PENSION

Granted in 1676 by Charles II. and Still Being Paid

Living in Peterborough, in humble circumstances, is a groom named Smith, who, upon the death of his father, came into the possession of a hereditary pension, granted in 1676, by King Charles II., to a man who assisted his escape from England after the battle of Worcester. The pension, which was voted by what is now known as the "Pensions Parliament," because of its readiness to recompense the King's friends on the expression of his Majesty's desire, amounts to $7.50 a week, and having been paid for 236 years, has already cost $92,040.

As the pension was granted in perpetuity, only the dying out of his progeny can prevent the sum from eventually running into millions of pounds. Mr. Smith's father sold his life interest in the pension many years before he died, but his son had no difficulty in proving his title upon his father's death, the documents being in the keeping of a firm of London lawyers.

Mr. Smith, who was previously a groom in London, has a little son to whom he hopes to hand down the fruits of his ancestor's loyalty.

PRINCE BULOW WHEN AT SCHOOL

He Never, He Says, Attached Much Importance to Home Tasks.

It is interesting to read about the school time of a man like Prince Bulow, who played so conspicuous a part in his country's history, and all the more when what is read is written by Prince Bulow himself.

"I never attached much importance to home tasks," says the Prince; "in my opinion the chief thing is to do one's learning in school, to listen to a lecture attentively, to seize the main point of a subject, to answer quickly and precisely, to think clearly, and express oneself with clearness and intelligence."

History was the ex-Chancellor's favorite study, and, as usually happens in such cases, he had a hearty dislike of mathematics. One of the happiest moments of his life, he says, was after his final examination when he stuffed his book of logarithms into the fire. He did not work during the vacations, but roved freely about the country.

The Prince found it hard to learn a foreign language at school. "It is difficult," he writes, "really to master a foreign speech unless one has spoken it from childhood, when tongue and ear become accustomed to it, or else one had learned it in the foreign country."

The Prince himself is a good illustration of this, for he speaks French admirably, having been for some years German Ambassador at Paris, and English very poorly, since he spent very little time in that country.

NAVAL AVIATION

France and Germany are Paying Much Attention to It

Both France and Germany are paying special attention to naval aviation at present. France is establishing an aerodrome for the training of naval officers near Toulon, and Germany has already fixed on aerodromes at the naval bases at Ouxhaven and Wilhelmshaven. It is said that a big aero-naval station is also to be formed on the island of Heligoland. Heligoland, since a British possession, is so isolated that important experiments can be carried on there without fear of espionage. A number of German officers are now in training at the great aviation school at Johannisthal, near Berlin, and when trained they are to act as instructors at the new aerodromes. France and Germany are much experimenting actively with the aeroplanes which can alight on the water.

THE PENDULUM WALTZ

It Resembles the Vigorous Working of a Pump Handle

The newest form of waltz in Germany is called the "Pendulum." It is hard to describe on paper, but an idea may be had of it in performance by imagining a pump handle in vigorous motion. The pumping keeps time with the music, the bodies of the dancers swaying rythmically in accord. There is, of course, nothing new in the movement so far, except that it is exaggerated far beyond what is considered allowable in England or America; but in Germany the feet appear to keep no particular time at all, but "creep about," to use the German idiom, independently of the rythm. It is attributable to the limitations imposed on the waltz step by the hobble-skirt, which reduces the action of the feet to a minimum, and it is probable that with the disuse of the hobble-skirt the "Pendulum" too, will pass away.

TRAINING SPARROWS

Remarkable Story of the Successful Effort to Get Sparrow to Imitate the Song of a Canary

Experiments have been made in England with a view to determine what are the conditions under which birds learn and cling to their traditional notes. For this purpose one experimenter employed very young birds of non-musical species, keeping them entirely with songsters in order to ascertain whether they would thus acquire the power of song.

In the month of July, several years ago, according to Harper's Weekly, he placed four fledgling English sparrows in the nest of a pair of singing canaries. Three of them died, but the fourth survived. This one had already acquired a sparrow chirp, and, hearing henceforth only the notes of the canary, he went no farther with the chirp that was his birthright. Instead he came gradually, when among the canaries, to give notes different from those of the sparrow. Even when he was silent, if the canaries were singing, he could be seen to move his throat just as if he were trying to form the sounds, much in the manner that a person often inaudibly follows a song that another is singing. At last these sounds began to be audible and increasingly so. He began to give notes in rapid succession three or four tones up the scale, repeating the top note five or six times.

Then the sparrow, becoming bolder with practice and pleased with the sound of his own voice, soon indulged three or four runs in succession with eight or twelve notes in each, and in the last days of September, when three months old, he went up and down and up the scale all in one run.

During this time his voice had been changing. At first it was harsh, as is natural with English sparrows; but gradually, with the effort or with the sub-conscious influence of the sweeter sounds about him, it became softer and acquired something of the canary quality.

The sparrow's first efforts were sung on a low scale, and he tried the top notes vainly, but as his voice became milder, he went higher more easily. He was about three months old when he tried his first trill. It was short, but musical and he evidently thought pretty well of it, for he repeated it, and continued steadily to practise it. A year later he had grown to be quite an adept in canary song and would trill and sing continually.

TWO ENGINES IN BIPLANE

Satisfactory Test Made of the New Apparatus

A successful trial has been made at the Royal Aero Club's ground, Eastchurch (Isle of Sheppey), by Messrs. Short brothers of their twin engined biplane. Mr. F. K. McLean, for whom the machine has been built, piloted with Lieut. C. R. Samson, R.N., as passenger. The chassis carries a weight of one ton. At starting it required ten men to hold the machine down, the twin engines of 120 horse-power exerting such great pull. Mr. McLean took his machine up and down the ground several times, and although he kept throttling down she rose quickly, and when the engines were completely shut off her excellent gliding qualities were displayed, the machine coming gently to rest in spite of her great weight. So far the test have proved eminently satisfactory. Her speed and other tests are to be conducted at the earliest opportunity.

Two Minute Talks About
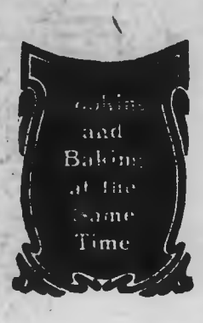
for Coal or Wood



BRAINY stove experts designed the Pandora Range. They introduced a new system of flue construction so that the draft for cooking would also be the draft for baking. With the Pandora you can have the kettles boiling over every pot hole at the same time the oven is baking pies and roasting beef.

Just think of the time that this perfect system of flue construction will save for you when you're hurrying to get a big dinner ready. Just think how much fuel the Pandora will save for you by doing the baking and cooking at the same time. And remember, no other range has this perfect system of flue-construction. Send for the Pandora booklet. It tells of other conveniences designed by our brainy stove experts.

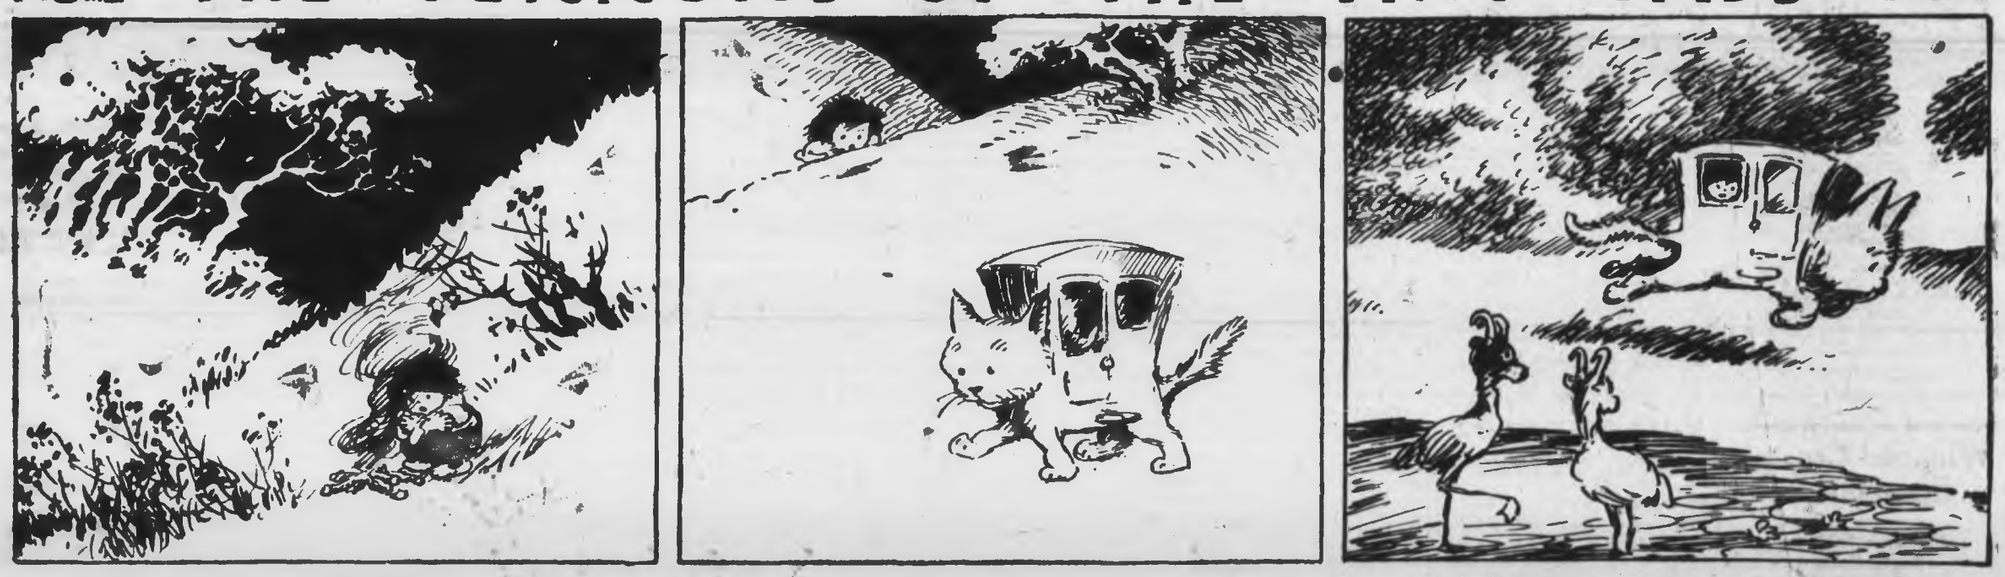
THE TERRORS OF THE TINY TADS



1.—This Tiny Tad is wandering around in Russia now
He wants to get down South again, but doesn't know just how.

2.—"Oh, see the Droskytten!" he cries, "he'll carry me, I know,
To where the grass and trees are green, and where there ain't no snow."

3.—The Droskytten is very kind, he scurries o'er the ground,
And takes the Tiny Tad to where the Flamingoats abound.

4.—He sees a little girl and says:—"Pray, do not think me rude,
But can I not relieve you of your Parasolitude?"

5.—At last it's time to join his mates, and travelling by night,
He thinks he sees all kinds of things that loom up big and white.

6.—"Say, fellows," he declares next morn, "I had an awful scare!
I saw a big Hobgoblin come floating through the air."

GOD PREPARING FOR THE HARVEST

The New Dispensation—Divine Promise About to Be Fulfilled.

Glasgow, Scotland, Oct. 29.—Pastor Russell preached twice here to-day to large audiences. We report one of his discourses from the text, "Of the times and seasons, brethren, ye have no need that I write unto you, for yourselves know perfectly that the day of the Lord so cometh as a thief in the night; for when they shall say, Peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them, as travail upon a woman with child, and they shall not escape. But ye, brethren, are not in darkness that that day should overtake you as a thief; ye are children of the light."—I. Thessalonians v, 1-5.

The common tendency of the human mind is expressed by St. Peter, who prophesies of the present time that the worldly will be saying, "Where is the promise of His presence? • • • All things continue as they were from the foundation of the world." Ignorance of God's Plan is to be expected of the world, but the true people of God have the promise of His special instruction so that they need not be in darkness respecting the Divine Program.

Our world for six thousand years has been the battle field between the forces of light and darkness, truth and error, righteousness and sin; the Prince of Darkness, otherwise styled the "Prince of this world," has led his forces in person, and has controlled the masses and is still controlling them. The Prince of Light is represented in a feeble way by ambassadors who are specially commissioned by Him that they must not use carnal weapons nor carnal methods, but must in meekness correct those who oppose them. They must be subject to "the powers that be" to the extent that their consciences will permit, and so far as possible live peaceably with all men.

This experience of subjection to the powers of evil has been a hard lesson, difficult to learn; a trial of faith as well as of endurance, the value of which has been difficult sometimes to appreciate. But these must walk by faith and not by sight if they would please the Captain of their salvation. For centuries the prayer has gone up to God from their hearts, "How long, O Lord!" Reason assures them that it cannot be the Divine purpose to forever permit the victory of sin and death under the Prince of Darkness.

God represents Himself as a great Husbandman. Each Age is a "season" and bears its own crop. Each Age has its own time for the plowing of the field, the sowing of the good seed, and the harvest work. As Bible students we have already noted the work accomplished in the Age which ended with the flood, the different work accomplished during the Patriarchal Age, and the still different work accomplished during the Jewish Age, which lasted from the death of Jacob, and particularly from the giving of the Law, down to the death of Jesus.

Our Lord's ministry of three and a half years was a harvest time to the Jewish people in the close of their Age of favor or "day of visitation." He said to His disciples, "I sent you forth to reap that whereon ye bestowed no labor; other men labored and ye are entered into their labors." (John iv. 38.) The plowing and sowing connected with the Jewish Dispensation was in the far past. The Egyptian bondage served to do a plowing work, as also Israel's escape from that bondage and the forty years of wandering in the wilderness before they reached Canaan. The giving of the Law and the establishment of them as a people, the lessons of their sacrifices, and the exhortation of their Prophets, all constituted a seed-sowing, harrowing and cultivating experience. In the end of their Age Jesus gathered the ripe fruitage of their experience—those sanctified thereby and developed in character and obedience to God.

The crop gathered by our Lord and the Apostles in the Jewish harvest numbered thousands. These were gathered out of Judaism and from under the Law Covenant into Christianity—gathered under a Covenant applying only to the "Church which is the Body of Christ." This Covenant, under which they became associated with Messiah, reads, "Gather together My saints (holy ones) unto Me," saith the Lord, "those who have made a Covenant with Me by sacrifice." (Psalm l. 5.) All coming thus into relationship to Jehovah as members of the Body of Messiah came by way of the cross—through a recognition of their own imperfection, and of Jesus and His sacrifice as the satisfaction for their sins, a covering for their blemishes, by which alone their sacrifices were rendered "holy and acceptable to God."—Romans xii. 1.

The reaping work of the Jewish Age merged into the sowing work of the Gospel Age as the invitation to become joint-sacrificers with Jesus was extended to those having hearing ears amongst nations aside from the Jews. For eighteen centuries this sowing work, with "harrowing" experiences and various cultivations, has been in progress. Now in turn we have arrived at the harvest of this Gospel Age—the reaping time, the time of gathering into the garner—beyond the veil—by the power of the First Resurrection.

"None of the wicked shall understand, but the wise shall understand" (Daniel xii. 10), is the Lord's declaration. Our text declares that "Ye, brethren, are not in darkness" respecting this time. This implies either that the brethren are very few, or that a considerable number of them have not yet become sufficiently awake to a discernment of the times and seasons in which we are living. Many of the brethren and many of the world and many of the "wicked" do realize that we are living in strange times and under peculiar conditions. These try to persuade themselves, however, that what we see to-day is merely a recurrence of what has repeated itself time and again during the past centuries. Thus these lull themselves, saying, "Peace and safety!"

This attitude is what the Scriptures foretold, "When they shall say peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh upon them." It is only "ye, brethren," who are privileged to have the clearer light respecting present and future conditions. We know that we are in the Harvest time of this Age—the reckoning time—the testing time—the time when the "wheat" is to be gathered into the heavenly "garner"—the time when the field is to be cleared of all "tares" in fiery trouble—the time when the plowshare of trouble will be run through the world of mankind to prepare the whole world for the New Dispensation just about to begin.

Illustrating the Divine methods and the rapid following of events in the Divine Program, the Lord through the Prophet tells us that "the plowman will overtake the reaper" (Amos ix. 13). So accurately timed is every [illegible] of the Divine Plan that part [illegible] and work to work closely. [illegible]t of the present time is [illegible]ing of the fruitage of this [illegible] Age—the gathering of the [illegible]th of the First-born, whose names are written in heaven—those who have made a Covenant with Jehovah by sacrifice.

The Head of the saintly Messiah, developed and glorified eighteen centuries ago, is Jesus. The members of the Body of this Messiah have been gathered from every nation, first from the Jews and then from all nations. God's call and selection of saintly sacrificers in this Gospel Age ignores all sectarian, all denominational, all national lines—"The Lord knoweth them that are His." The winds of violence, "the powers of the air," which will shortly be loosed, and which will produce the terrific "storm," are being held back until the sealing of God's servants in their foreheads shall have been accomplished.

This sealing in the foreheads implies an intellectual appreciation of heavenly things, and is intimately associated with the harvest work—the sealed are the ripe wheat being gathered for the heavenly garner. As soon as the sealing work shall have been accomplished the winds of strife and trouble will be let loose according to the Master's declaration, and the result will be a "time of trouble such as never was since there was a nation"—no, nor ever shall be the like again. The awful lessons which will then be learned by humanity will be sufficient for all time. The strife, the hatred, the malignity, the anarchy of that day of trouble are depicted in various places in the Word of God.

The trouble time impending is indeed declared to be a time of Divine wrath, and we must not lose sight of that feature of it. Divine Justice has indignation against inequity and selfishness in general, for selfishness is but another name for sin. All sin is selfish, and all selfishness is sin. The captains of industry, the captains of education and the captains of wealth have to-day greater opportunities and therefore greater responsibilities than the kings of the earth for their dealings with their fellowmen.

Similarly, there are leaders of the people, presidents and secretaries of unions, etc., who are also captains, and who also have great responsibility. All perceive that the world of humanity is rapidly nearing a crisis. The almost miraculous opening of the eyes of understanding which God has recently granted has brought to the world mechanical inventions and chemical processes which are making the world rich with amazing rapidity.

Although these blessings are in considerable measure reaching the masses of mankind and uplifting all to a higher plane of comfort, nevertheless general education has opened the eyes of human understanding correspondingly. "The common people" are looking with amazement at the luxury of the rich as the barbarians of old looked upon the much lesser splendors of Rome. They are covetous, they are hungry for what they term their "share" of the bounties being dispensed by Providence with so lavish a hand.

Even if the vast fortunes of wealth through machinery, chemistry, etc., were to be evenly distributed we doubt if it would satisfy these newborn minds.

There seem to be two possible solutions: (1) To convert all of the wealthy into saints, whose pleasure it would be to administer the flood of wealth now rolling in upon them for the general blessing of mankind, along the most benevolent lines imaginable, or (2) To convert into saints the masses of mankind and to so imbue them with heavenly hopes and prospects that they would not particularly care for earthly good things nor crave them, but rather rejoice to be "the poor of this world, rich in faith, heirs of the heavenly Kingdom."

We confess that neither solution seems to be practicable. We cannot believe that either can be accomplished; hence we must believe what the Bible teaches, that an awful conflict is about to be precipitated between these two classes, because neither one nor the other can be fully converted to the Lord's way. How glad we are that the Bible shows that the culmination of the conflict will bring everlasting peace—a just [illegible] equitable and satisfactory ad-justment of earth's affairs, under Messiah's glorious reign of a thousand years.

Someone may ask, Would not these same difficulties beset any new government which Messiah or others might institute? Will not the element of selfishness forever persist in the human heart, and will not this imply that to all eternity there will be a strife of selfish interests? We answer, No. The Divine Plan solves the problem perfectly. Jesus has demonstrated His unselfishness as respects earthly things. His laying down of His life not only proved His loyalty to righteousness and to the Father's will, but proved also His unselfishness — His love — "greater love hath no man than this, that a man should lay down his life for his friends" (John xv, 13).

This Friend of humanity is to be the great King of the world in the New Dispensation, and His associates in the Kingdom, the Bride class, are to be such only as have His spirit and disposition of obedience to the Father's will—self-sacrifice and love for fellowman—unselfish love. Under present conditions these may not always be known, nor their true character and unselfishness be discerned, because they have the treasure in "earthen vessels," which do not always fully represent their true benevolence of heart.

The Divine provision is that such of these as shall demonstrate their unselfishness of heart and loyalty to the Lord shall be given new bodies in the resurrection—"sown in weakness, they will be raised in power; sown in dishonor, raised in glory; sown an animal body," with Adamic weaknesses and fleshly imperfections, they will be "raised spirit bodies"—perfect, complete, lacking nothing—I. Cor. xv, 42-44.

These, in association with their Redeemer, will constitute the Kingdom class which is to rule the world for a thousand years under the Headship of Jesus. Surely, we can trust these, we can have confidence in them. The fact that God has selected them, and that He is pleased to give over to them the rulership of the world for a thousand years testifies beyond peradventure their worthiness and capability.

That Government will not be a republic, but a monarchy, a theocracy, a Divine Kingdom. Christ and His Bride will be the King and Queen of the New Dispensation, supplanting Satan and the fallen angels, who for centuries have been in control. The Kingdom of God will be as invisible as the kingdom of darkness has been. It will operate through human agencies, as does the other. But even its human agents have been provided. The Scriptures inform us that the worthy ones of the Jewish Dispensation and before, will be the Princes in all the earth who will represent Messiah's Kingdom amongst men. Not only so, but they will be perfect men, made so by participation in the "resurrection of life." How grand the prospect!

The time of trouble, although it will be awful, will be short, as typed in the terrible trouble which came upon the Jewish nation following the harvest work of their Age. Then will come the leveling process, which in the Divine order will prove to be a blessing to everybody. In other words, the socialists and anarchists are not so far from a correct conception of what must ultimately prevail, but they are far astray respecting the methods by which it shall be obtained. Their attempt to grasp the rudder of the world's affairs shows an awful lack of appreciation of the mighty influences with which they seek to contend. Their efforts will merely precipitate upon themselves and upon others the terrible trouble which the Scriptures foretell.

God's people are distinctly warned that they must keep hands off, must not interfere with the powers that be—their reliance must be upon the Lord and not in the use of carnal weapons. St. James, writing on this subject, declares the coming trouble and tells that it will be specially severe upon the rich: "Go to now, ye rich men; weep and howl for your miseries that shall come upon you." (James v, 1.) No doubt the troubles will be equally upon the poor; but to them they will seem less severe since they have been accustomed to less. To God's people is the message, "Be patient, brethren, the coming of the Lord draweth nigh"; "Wait ye upon Me, saith the Lord." (Zephaniah iii. 8.) "Seek meekness, seek righteousness, it may be that ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger." (Zephaniah ii. 3.)

HASTINGS ITEMS OF INTEREST

Examiner Special:

HASTINGS, OCT. 31.—The League meeting on Friday evening was under the direction of the social vice-president, and the programme savored of the "Hallowe'en" festivities. Quite a number availed themselves of the opportunity for a pleasant evening, and were well repaid for the effort.

The Ladies' Aid of the Methodist Church held their regular monthly meeting on Thursday last at the home of Mrs. J. Hore. A large number were in attendance, when final arrangements were made for the annual church "fowl supper" to be held on November 13th in the Town Hall.

Rev. Mr. Anderson and family have returned from a three weeks' holiday with friends in Toronto and Buffalo. While in Toronto Mr. Anderson attended the Ecumenical Conference recently held in that city.

Miss Ethel Stinson has returned from Havelock much improved in health, and her friends are pleased to note the change.

Mr. J. Howard has teams at work hauling earth to level up his lawn, which will be a great improvement to the appearance of the property.

Mrs. J. Buck was in Peterborough on Thursday.

Mr. Henderson, of Toronto, has been making a tour of this district, taking orders for a fertiliser for enriching the soil, and buying poultry for shipment.

Miss Beatrice Scriver, of Keen, is the guest of her sister, Mrs. D. Scriver, town.

Mr. Nelis Beavis was in Keene on Monday.

Miss Baskin, of Norwood, spent Sunday the guest of Miss A. Stenson.

Little Miss Bessie Profit, of Peterborough, has been holidaying at the home of her aunt, Miss J. Peters.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Philips are rejoicing over the birth of a son.

A number of our people have been scanning the sky for a look at the comet, but, as yet, only a few have been able to get a glimpse of the heavenly visitant.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Parsons and family spent the holiday with friends in Peterborough.

Mrs. G. Hormel is visiting friends in Port Hope.

A movement is on foot for the "Local Option" by-law to be presented to the electors at the coming election, which, it is hoped, will meet with approval.

Some of our sportsmen are making preparations for their annual deer-hunting holiday. Some 14 are expected to go in the party this year.

Mrs. H. Fowlds was unfortunate enough to lose her purse containing a considerable amount of money. The finder, however, was honest enough to hunt up the owner and return the money.

Miss Collins has been in Havelock visiting her friend, Miss Stella Armstrong.

SAGEINE GIRLS

There are many of them; they are always noticeable and distinguished because of their hair. Thick, heavy tresses of soft, silky and luxuriant hair; free from dandruff and glowing with all the radiance and beauty of the greatest adornment of women.

SAGEINE is the only preparation known to science that will make the hair so noticeably beautiful; SAGEINE is now sold in Peterborough by W. J. Kent who with each bottle gives his personal guarantee to refund the money if Sageine does not do all that is claimed for it.

Sageine is the favourite in every home; it merits its popularity because it is not sticky or greasy and it is not a dye. W. J. Kent sells a large bottle for 50c.

REVENGE IS SWEET

Two Joneses lived next door to each other, and, having to call on one of them, Brown, of course, went to the wrong house. A crabbed servant answered the bell, and on Brown asking: "Is this Mr. John Jones?" she replied snappishly, as if she had been bothered with many such enquiries, "No, it ain't," and slammed the door in his face. Brown walked on a hundred yards or so, when a bright thought struck him. He returned at once and rang the same bell again. Again the crabbed servant appeared. "Who said it was?" asked Brown triumphantly and instantly walked away.

SPENDING THE SABBATH

Mr. James Welch. "The Bold Knight," tells this story: "We were having a very pleasant lunch, mainly composed of Scotch people in London, one Sunday, when one of the Scotsmen said: 'Eh; but I wouldna like ma wife to see the way I'm spending the Sabbath!' when one of the guests said: 'Ah; that's what's the matter with you Scotch. You never spend the Sabbath—you keep it!'"

THE LIGHT-HOUSE KEEPER'S STORY.

She says: "I suffered with eczema for seven years and to my great delight Zam-Buk has cured me. The disease started on my breast, and spread until it extended over my back. The itching and burning—especially when the affected parts were warm—was terrible; and yet when the eruption was scratched or rubbed, it turned to bad sores and caused great pain. I went to a doctor and tried various prescriptions, but seemed to get no benefit, so tried another doctor. Again I got no relief, so tried a third doctor, and then a fourth.

"Seven years is a long time to suffer, and I had got used to the thought that I never would be cured, when I saw a report in the Family Herald, telling how beneficial Zam-Buk was in cases of skin disease.

"I bought some Zam-Buk, and from the use of the very first box I saw it was going to do me good. I persevered with it, and the improvement it worked in my condition was really wonderful.

"It eased the irritation, stopped the pain, and the sores began to dry up and disappear. In short, I found Zam-Buk all that was claimed for it and within a very short time it worked a complete cure in my case.

"Since that time I have recommended it for several other cases, and in each it has proved its wonderful merit.

Dr. and Mrs. Irvine, of Lindsay, motored down on Saturday evening and spent the holidays with friends here.

Miss Sadie English, of Toronto, and Mr. English and children, of Unionville, spent Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. Geo. English.

Mr. and Mrs. Nood and child, of Toronto, were the guests of Miss Johnson over Thanksgiving.

On Wednesday evening last the Rev. Mr. and Mrs. Hibbard, who are among the contingent of outgoing missionaries to China, and are being supported by the Lindsay and Connington District Epworth Leagues, were present and gave a talk at the regular mid-week service of the Methodist Church. Mr. Hibbard is a very earnest speaker, and goes to the foreign field well-fitted for his duties. He outlined his reasons as to why the missionary cause should be sustained, both by the prayers and givings of the home church. Mrs. Hibbard, who was a deaconess in Winnipeg, gave a very interesting sketch of her work in that place among the many foreigners there. A hearty vote of thanks was tendered the speakers at the close of the addresses. Mr. and Mrs. Hibbard were at Bethel on Tuesday evening, where they addressed the league.

Mrs. Watson and child, of Coboconk, are the guests of her parents, Dr. and Mrs. Thompson, Sturgeon st.

Miss Mabel Johnson, of Toronto, spent Thanksgiving with her parents.

Messrs. C. Mulligan, G. Crawford, and Reid, of Toronto, were Thanksgiving guests of Mrs. R. J. Mulligan.

Major Neill, of Toronto, was the guest of his parents on Thanksgiving.

Miss Muriel Morrison, of Peterborough, spent the holiday with her mother.

Rev. Mr. Patterson, of Lifford, was in town the first of the week.

Miss Lulu Balfour, of Lindsay, was the guest of Miss Bertie Lamb over the holiday.

Mr. Havelock Fee, of Lindsay, was home over the week-end.

The anniversary services of the Presbyterian Church were held on Sunday, when Rev. D. W. Best, of St. Andrew's Church, Beaverton, preached at both services. Mr. Best is an old Mt. Pleasant boy, and he was greeted by large audiences, who listened to his discourses with much appreciation. Special music was rendered at both services. In the morning the Methodist service was withdrawn.

Mr. English and children, of Peterborough, were in town on Monday.

Mr. Hazel Dancy, of Toronto, spent Thanksgiving at his home here.

The first choral practice took place on Tuesday evening in the schoolroom of the Methodist Church, under the able direction of Mr. R. J. Mulligan.

Mr. Jim Rennie, of Toronto, paid a flying visit to his home on Monday.

Mrs. Adams, of Lindsay, was the guest of her brother, Mr. R. J. Mulligan, on Monday.

Mrs. A. C. Hodgette sang at the services in the Presbyterian church on Sunday, her selections being greatly enjoyed by those present.

The Misses Nichols spent Thanksgiving at their home here.

KIDNEY TROUBLE CURED!

Engineer Elliott Promptly Relieved by Morrisey's No. 7.

LAKE MEGANTIC, P. Q., July 21, 1910.

"I was troubled with lame back for the last four years, due to Kidney trouble, and tried a great many remedies but without any relief. I was advised to try No. 7 Rheumatism and Kidney Remedy and can say that my Kidneys are entirely cured, and even the jar of the engine does not pain me any more. Any sufferer from Rheumatism or Kidney trouble should by all means try Father Morrisey's No. 7. The nature of my work induced Kidney trouble and it required a mighty good remedy to successfully combat the disease."

W. A. Elliott,
C. P. R. Engineer.

The above prescription is not a "Cure-All" or so-called patent medicine. Dr. Morrisey prescribed it for 44 years, and it cured thousands after other doctors failed.

HOW TO MAKE HENS LAY

The secret so long sought for by poultry keepers has been solved, or at least it is said to have been solved.

We need not tell you what the problem is, because anybody who has ever had anything to do with hens, either in a professional or an amateur way, knows what it is. The biddy-biddies do their duty all right in the spring and summer, but as soon as the leaves begin to fall they begin to fall also—fall off the supply of eggs, until the product reaches the zero point. Every poultry keeper has puzzled his or her head upon how to remedy this disaster, for disaster it is to find your hens go on strike just at the season when their eggs are most needed.

Like so many other great discoveries, the credit belongs to a Frenchman, M. Joubert, professor of agriculture at Fontainebleau. He found, like every other poultry keeper, that the number of eggs laid by hens fell off each fall, and he set himself to experiment.

Last October he selected a dozen young hens, and divided them into two indiscriminate lots of six each. Both were fed on exactly the same diet, but to the food of one half-dozen there was added a daily ration of a glass of wine per head. The results were surprising. From the hens which got no wine M. Joubert had in October four eggs, in November one, and in December none, and in January twenty-two.

The fowls which drank their glass of wine daily responded nobly to the stimulant. In October they produced twenty-eight eggs, in November fifty-seven, in December forty-four, and in January forty-six, so that the topers showed an excess of production over the teetotallers of 148 eggs.

M. Joubert, unfortunately, does not say in his report, which has just been published, what sort of wine he employed in his interesting experiment. If he used the best champagne, the cost would exceed the profit; but if the stimulant was vin ordinaire, which can be bought in France, wholesale for about three cents a quart, a new and important field of consumption for that article will be opened up, greatly to the relief of the wine-growers, who have complained bitterly in recent years of the decline in the sale of their produce. The administration of wine is said to have not only increased the output of eggs, but also to have greatly improved their quality, a fact which will prove somewhat disconcerting to the temperance advocates.

It is a very interesting story, but we would like to have the opinion of some expert, like Professor Gilbert of the Central Experimental Farm, as to how it would work in this country. Is wine cheap enough to enable it to be fed to hens? Would the ladies of the W. C. T. U. object to eggs laid by hens who have become slaves to the drink demon? And what happens in the spring? Are the hens suddenly cut off from their supply of alcohol or are they sent to some poultry institute for treatment so that they can "taper off?" The subject is one full of possibilities, and we would be glad to hear of its final results.

USEFUL RECIPES

SALMON LOAF

A can of salmon is handy to have in case of emergency, and there are numerous ways of dressing it to make it attractive. For salmon loaf, mince one small can of salmon. Melt one tablespoonful of butter and add one cup of milk. Cook till smooth and season rather highly with salt and pepper. Add to this the salmon, one cup breadcrumbs and one beaten egg. Press into loaf shape in a baking dish and bake in a rather quick oven about twenty-five minutes. To make it look a little daintier when served garnish with parsley or sliced hard-cooked eggs.

OMELET SAUCE

A delicious sauce, which adds a zest to any omelet, is made after this recipe: Chop a slice of onion fine and cook it in a tablespoonful of butter; then add a cupful of tomatoes, a red and a green pepper chopped fine. Cook for a quarter of an hour. Add half a cupful of small mushrooms, cut into small pieces, and cook for another ten minutes. Season to taste with salt and paprika. This sauce will keep for several days, being warmed up when ready for use.

SALAD DRESSING

Two tablespoonfuls of sugar, one tablespoonful of butter, one half tablespoonful of mustard, one half tablespoonful of salt. Beat an egg into this. Add three-quarters of a cupful of milk. Bring to the boil, and take immediately from the fire. Add a cupful of vinegar and let it boil once more.

SNOW CAKES

Four tabespoonfuls of butter, half a pound of potato flour, a few drops of lemon extract, one teaspoonful of baking powder, four tablespoonfuls of sugar, whites of two eggs and yolk of one egg. Beat the butter and sugar to a cream, adds the eggs well beaten alternately with the flour; then beat for ten minutes, stir in the baking powder and the vanilla. Pour into a flat baking cake tin, which must be well buttered, dusted with sugar, then with flour; the mixture should cover the tin about half an inch thick. Bake in a moderate oven for half an hour, turn out, and when cold divide into finger lengths or fancy shapes. They may also be be covered with frosting if liked.

COFFEE CAKE FROM BREAD DOUGH

Set apart two cups of dough which has been kneaded and is ready to be moulded into loaves. Work into it a beaten egg, ane-half cupful of sugar, and one small tablespoonful of shortening. Knead and beat with the hand until you have a light, soft dough. Put into shallow cake tins to rise. When it is light, spread with melted butter and springle with this mixture: A tablespoonful of butter. Rub these together until they crumble between your fingers. Sprinkle upon the cake and strew again with granulated sugar, or pulverized, if you prefer, and ground cinnamon. Bake in a moderate oven.

PRUNES WITH RICE

Stew prunes tender, then pit and chop fine. Boil one cupful of rice soft and dry. Place alternate layers of rice and prunes in a buttered baking dish, finish off with a layer of rice. Dot with butter, dust with sugar and grated nutmeg, and bake in a hot oven. Serve with hard sauce.

CRAB APPLE JELLY

Boil the apples with just enough water to cover them until tender, mash with a spoon and strain out the juice. Take a pint of juice to a pound of sugar, boil thirty minutes, and strain through a hair sieve.

"Dr. Miles' Nervine Raised Me From the Grave"—Mrs. Taylor

This is a strong statement to make, but it is exactly what Mrs. Thomas Taylor, of Blum, Texas, said in expressing her opinion of this remedy.

"Dr. Miles' Restorative Nervine raised me from the grave and I have much confidence in it. I can never say enough for your grand medicines. If anyone had offered me $100.00 for the second bottle of Nervine that I used I would have said 'no indeed.'"
MRS. THOMAS TAYLOR,
Blum, Tex.

Nervous exhaustion is a common occurence of modern life. The wear and tear on the nervous system is greater, now than at any time since the world began. For sleeplessness, poor appetite and that "run down" feeling, nothing is so good as

Dr. Miles' Nervine

Your nerves are your life and lack of vital energy makes existence a misery. Dr. Miles' Nervine will tone up your nervous system.

Ask any druggist. If the first bottle fails to benefit, your money is returned.

A Coal Stove That Keeps The Floor Warm

The Regal does this in two ways:

In the first place it creates continuous currents of warm air in the room. There is a special flue inside the stove, apart from the fire chamber and free from gas or smoke. This flue draws in the cold air from the floor, heats it, and passes it out at the top. See diagram.

In addition to this the Regal radiates extra heat near the floor. All the hot smoke and fumes from the fire pass down and through a flue under the ash-pit before they reach the pipes. This keeps the stove hot at the bottom and helps materially to warm the floor.

The REGAL PENINSULAR

With its massive nickel parts, heavily plated and elegantly formed—with its large oven—with its perfect duplex grates and durable fire-box, the Regal Peninsular has a combination of beauty and heating comforts not usually found in a heater.

It is thoroughly Peninsular and that means that it is honestly made.

It has proven economical both in fuel consumed, and in its years of service.

If you are interested in heaters or ranges, get "THE COST." It is a booklet you should read before you buy. Ask for it.

PETERBOROUGH WEDNESDAY NOVEMBER 1 1911

FELLOW WORKMEN TELL OF THE MANNER IN WHICH HUGH DARKE WAS KILLED

Action Brought by Mrs. Darke Against the Canadian General Electric Company for $10,000 Is Being Heard To-day.

MORNING'S EVIDENCE

TO-DAY'S SESSION

The case of Mrs. Darke vs. the C. G. E. Co., was resumed this morning, several witnesses being examined.

CARTNER'S EVIDENCE

William Cartner was one of the men working with Mr. Darke on the night of the fatality. He was first examined by Mr. O'Connell, counsel for Mrs. Darke.

Mr. Cartner stated that on the night of the accident some person made a suggestion that it would be safer to put in another clamp to secure the machine, and it was while the work was being done that the accident occurred.

Mr. Cartney stated that he got instructions from Mr. Jeffries to remain with Mr. Darke that night, and assist with the machine.

"If the machine moved or anything went wrong, what were you supposed to do?" asked Mr. O'Connell.

Mr. Cartner stated that Mr. Thompson, who was working with them, was at the switch, and he told him not to start the machine, that they were going to work at it, and they immediately proceeded with the work.

Dr. Frederick was called, and stated that death was caused by shock, due to the severe crushing the deceased had received. He described the nature of the injuries.

SAW SWITCH TURNED ON.

A. H. Fielder was examined by Mr. O'Connell. He had been working with the men previous to the accident. He saw Mr. Darke working at a bolt at the rear of the machine, and at that time Thompson was at one of the switches. He further saw Mr. Thompson turn on the switch at the time of the accident; the switch was about 20 feet from Darke's position, and a man at the switch could not see a man where Mr. Darke was. He did not know whether Mr. Jeffries or Mr. Thompson had inspected the machine.

Mr. William Walker was examined. He was there on the night of the 15th of June, but did not see the accident. They were both working at the machine, but Mr. Darke was working at a bolt in the floor at the rear of the machine, so that he was unable to see him. In the evening Mr. Darke and he went to see if Mr. Thompson was ready to start the machine, but he did not see either Anson or Jeffries inspect the machine. In the evening some person suggested putting in another clamp to secure the machine, and in doing so Mr. Darke was sitting on a belt; previously when witness saw him he was on the floor. He left a few minutes to ten and did not see where Mr. Darke was at the time of the accident. The witness did not know who suggested putting in another clamp. When asked if it were necessary to sit on the belt, witness stated that that part of the work could not have been conveniently completed in any other way, though it was possible to do it while on the floor between the belts.

Mr. George Ball, a fitter, was called, but could give no material evidence, being away on the day of the accident.

Mr. Frank Kite was also helping to clamp the machine under Mr. Jeffries' direction, but there was no material evidence.

Mr. Robert Anson, general foreman, gave his evidence next. He inspected the machine on the night of the accident at 6 o'clock. It was reported that the machine was ready for inspection, and he went to do so at once. The machine was situated on the main floor in a space about 36 by 12 feet, and upon inspection he found it to be all right, and in a proper position. He said there was nothing further to be done as far as the mechanical part was concerned. The mechanical part was the work of erecting and fastening the machine to the floor.

The Court then adjourned until 1.45 p.m.

Afternoon session was commenced by the defence lawyer examining Mr. Walter Jeffrys, an employee of the Company. He had been employed with the company for six years, previously coming from England, and was directing the generator in the Test Department previous to the date of the accident. He was in charge of the men employed on the work. On the 14th and 15th of June he was employed around the machine where the accident occurred, practically all the time. He was present when the machine was finished and he inspected the machine, also the clamping, and everything was all right. He was there until ten o'clock, but was all over the shop.

"Did Mr. Darke have anything to do with the clamp after the inspection," asked Mr. Watson, counsel for the defence.

"No, nothing but watch the bearings and the belts to see that they were all right after the machine started," replied the witness. "He had no instructions to do anything else at all and nobody had any authority to give Mr. Darke any instruction only myself."

No Instructions.

HUNDREDS OF CHILDREN IN EXAMINER GROUP PHOTOGRAPH

Mr. R. M. Roy informs The Examiner that there has been a record number of children photographed at the Roy Studio during the past season, the announcement that the portraits would be reproduced in a group picture in the Christmas Edition of The Examiner having been, no doubt, responsible for the increase. Parents are asked to note that they must have their children photographed before the fifteenth of the present month, as it will take some time to get the group arranged for publication. It will, undoubtedly, be the most interesting photograph ever published by a Peterborough newspaper, and will contain reproductions of the portraits of hundreds of children. There are only a few days left in which to have the youngsters face the camera, and parents desiring to see their children in this monster group should lose no time in taking them to the Roy Studio. Incidentally, it might be mentioned that the Christmas Edition of The Examiner this year will be the most ambitious yet sent out by this paper.

FIRE DOES CONSIDERABLE DAMAGE TO BUILDING

Blaze Was Well Under Way When the Brigade Arrived ---Damage Will be in Neighbourhood of $250

Lots of excitement, dense volumes of smoke and about $250 damage were the results of a fire at the corner of Reid and Sherbrooke streets last night. When the Fire Department arrived on the scene of the conflagration about 1 o'clock last night, they found the fire located in a barn, in which was stored harness, cutters, and some hay. After a strenuous fight they succeeded in subduing the flames, but not before considerable damage was done. The fire is thought to have been of incendiary origin, as when the firemen arrived they found the doors of the building wide open. The structure was owned by Mr. Wm. Croft.

THE ANDREW AND PHILIP BROTHERHOOD TO EXTEND

TORONTO, NOV. 1st.—"That we go back to our chapters with the determination to institute another chapter in the community before coming back to the convention next year."

The above resolution was carried unanimously at the eighth annual convention of the Brotherhood of Andrew and Philip, held in Cooke's Church on Monday.

The report of the general secretary, Silas A. McFadden, showed that the order has a membership of 700.

The different churches represented and their membership are as follows:

Presbyterian Chapters, 16; membership, 541.

Methodist Chapters, 4; membership 135.

Baptist Chapters, 4; membership, 87.

Reformed Episcopal Chapters, 2; membership, 29.

Boys' Department, 4; membership, 197.

CHURCHES, ANGELS, CHERUBS

"Some churches will give more money to paint angels and cherubs on the ceiling of their auditoriums than for the furtherance of the cause of temperance," said Rev. Ben Spence, of the Dominion Alliance, in his address to the delegates. "We cannot invite a man from the bar-room to a prayer-meeting, the change is too great. It is like trying to catch a fish with a bare hook. We must have some attraction. I believe the only substitute for the bar-room that we need is the home and the church. And the church had the money, but the members will not give their money unless we can show some tangible proof that it is being put to good use.

"Young men do not learn to drink liquor at home," he said, "but in the bar-room, where they are almost invariably treated to their first drink by a friend.

"The bar-room is working its capital overtime, while the church is inactive—the bar is open—the church is closed six days a week."

HARD ON THE BOYS

Mr. W. A. Wylie, of Riverdale Chapter, said that 31,500 of the 36,000 boys in Toronto who are between 14 and 19 years of age were roaming the streets and were not connected with helpful organizations of any kind.

Mr. William Ward, London, England, secretary of the National Federation, said that in England there were 2,700 societies, with a membership of 750,000.

The officers elected for the ensuing year are: Rev. J. A. Steward, of Hespeler, president; W. J. McRea, of Toronto, first vice-president; E. S. Cormelius, of Cratham, second vice-president; Rev. A. J. Bowen, of Chathnm, third vice-president; Silas A. McFadden, of Toronto, was re-elected general secretary.

Former Resident Of Otonabee Passed Away In Dundalk

A telegram was received by Mrs. R. M. Matchett, East City, on Monday, conveying the sad news of the death of her sister-in-law, Mrs. Joseph Nethercutt, sr., of Dundalk, formerly of Otonabee. Deceased's maiden name was Jane Dunlop. She was born in North Monaghan 73 years ago and was highly respected. Besides a sorrowing husband she is survived by eight children, four sons and four daughters. Mr. Thomas Nethercutt of this city, is a brother. The funeral took place at Dundalk this afternoon.

ENJOYABLE AT HOME TO THE "NORMALITES"

The Epworth League of the George street Methodist church, held a most successful "At Home" in honour of the Normal students last night and are to be congratulated upon the complete triumph of their efforts in this respect. From an enjoyment point of view, it was one of the best functions of the season and all were delighted with the splendid arrangements. Upon entering the guests were given a small slip of paper, upon which was a question or an answer to a question, and by means of getting answers to the questions, the young people were brought together. The answers to the questions were so distinct that there was little trouble in getting the right partner, however, and this part of the programme proved most enjoyable. When all the partners had got together, the whole assemblage was divided into four groups and a guessing contest was inaugurated. The guesses consisted of ascertaining, as nearly as possible, how many peanuts were in a fruit jar, how many nuts in the same sort of a jar, how many petals in a flower exhibited and similar tests. The group elected two guessers and the group winning was awarded a prize of a box of chocolates.

While the answers in the guessing contest were being looked over, the following much appreciated programme was rendered:

Piano duet—Misses McKee

Vocal solo—"Thy Sentinel Am I.." Mr. F. Myles

Violin solo—Miss Edwina Palmer.

Vocal solo—Mr. J. Browne

Piano solo—Miss Greaves.

Rev. I. Couch, the pastor, opened the proceedings of the evening by an address, warmly welcoming the students and visitors.

Miss Pearl McKee was accompanist for the evening and carried out her duties very acceptably.

At the close of the programme, dainty refreshments were served by the young ladies of the League.

"The Gospel of The Hereafter" by Rev. Paterson-Smyth, on sale at Treblecock Bros., price $1.00.

LAST OF SEASON

Final Sale of Peterborough Cheese Board for the Present Year Took Place To-day—The President's Address

RESUME OF SEASON

The final meeting of the Peterborough Cheese Board was held this mornin gin the Board room. Mr. Switzer, president, occupied the chair, and Mr. Cochrane acted as secretary in the absence of Mr. Hawthorne. Prior to the selling of the cheese, Mr. Ward made a few brief remarks concerning the success and drawbacks of the past season. "Upon our success we ought to feel elated, and by our drawbacks we ought to profit," said the speaker. "Last year we had the best production on record; it was well and profitably handled. This year, it was the reverse. The drawback in this neighbourhood is the lack of milk cooling facilities on the part of the farmers and a lack of storage room in the factories. We should commence now to devise ways and means to overcome these difficulties. There was an enormous loss from overheated cheese, a loss which would have been greater but for the favourable condition of the market, and the facilities for handling the product."

Mr. Young, seconded by Mr. McGregor, moved that a vote of thanks be tendered to Mr. Ward and that his services be secured next year. Mr. Ward has rendered excellent services to the Board and it was deemed expedient to retain him for another year.

Mr. Gillespie here announced that the annual district meeting of the Eastern Dairymen's Association would be held at Norwood on November 23. He hoped that a large number would favour the meeting by their presence.

A vote of thanks was tendered the Bank of Montreal for the use of the Board room, and also an appropriation of five dollars was granted to the janitor of the building.

Next followed a vote of thanks to the Press and also to Mr. Switzer, president of the Board, for services rendered during the past season.

The sale of the cheese was then proceeded with. Mr. Watkins opened the bidding at 13 9-16c. This was raised by easy stages to 14 1-8c. by Mr. Cook at which figure he purchased Westwood, Villiers, Keene, Lang, Norwood, Killarney, Daisy D., Oakdale, Warsaw, Warminster and Indian River.

Mr. Gillespie took the balance of the Board at the same figure, 14 1-8c.

Owing to the absence of their salesman, Maple Leaf and Myrtle remained unsold.

Mr. Cochrane asked that the annual meeting be not held on Saturday afternoon as was customary, as it was very inconvenient for those who came from a distance. This was acted upon.

The following factories were boarded:

Keene	65
Warminster	90
Shearer	70
Central Smith	42
Selwyn	80
Villiers	56
Warsaw	100
Westwood	85
Oakdale	60

DRAFTING PLATFORM

Special Wire to The Examiner.

TORONTO, NOV. 1.—Under the chairmanship of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, the Committee on Resolutions of the Ontario Reform Association, held a private meeting at ten o'clock this morning to decide on the provincial Liberal platform for the coming campaign and may make an announcement at 1 o'clock. This committee has been vested with power by the general meeting of the Ontario Reform Association to make Prohibition the principal plank in the platform if it is considered opportune. It is understood Leader Rowell is anxious to learn of that policy.

Shall it be prohibition and the abolition of bilingual schools. This was the subject under a stormy discussion for hours at the meeting of the Resolutions Committee of the Reform Association of Ontario this morning, in connection with preparing a platform for the coming campaign. The Committee adjourned for luncheon at 1 o'clock, all members keeping absolute silence as to the issue which is not decided. It is understood that the minor planks, as already published, were adopted.

PROGRESSIVE MILITANT LEADER IS CHOSEN FOR ONTARIO LIBERAL PARTY

A PROGRESSIVE PLATFORM FOR THE LIBERAL PARTY

The Committee on Resolutions of the Ontario Reform Association will continue its work of framing the Provincial Liberal platform this morning at 10 o'clock, under the Chairmanship of Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King.

It is understood that among the planks definitely decided upon before last night's adjournment were:

An act to compensate workmen for injuries, modelled upon the British legislation.

A revision of the Assessment Act, under which municipalities will be accorded the right to exempt improvements and tax land values.

A legislative eight hour day for underground miners.

Stability in mining titles.

Good roads and improved transportation facilities.

A general progressive colonization policy for New Ontario.

The encouragement of settlement on the land throughout both Old and New Ontario.

TWO STREET CARS FIGURE IN A REAR-END COLLISION

A broken brake beam on a street car on the Canadian General Electric route, was responsible for a rear-end collision on Charlotte street this morning, as Jackson Park car, No. 14 was nearing George street, with the C. G. E. car. No. 10, following closely in her wake. The brakes of the latter refused to operate, with the result that it crashed into the Jackson Park car, with terrific force. The rear vestibule of No. 14 was demolished, but the damage to the C. G. E. car was slight. Conductor Guthrie of the front car was slightly cut about the head, the injuries being caused by the swinging of the door, following the impact. He was removed to Dr. Scott's, where his injuries were attended to, after which he was able to proceed to his home. Fortunately there were no passengers in either of the cars at the time. Archie McBride had a miraculous escape from being caught in the wreckage. He was standing close to the track at the time of the collision when he was caught by the fender of the first car and swept off his feet. He was able to rise to his feet, however, and render assistance to the injured conductor, whose wounds were bleeding profusely.

MISSIONARIES ARE KILLED

Special to The Examiner.

PEKIN, NOV. 1.— Yuan Shi Kai has been appointed premier of China, and will commence the reorganization of the administration immediately and open negotiations with the rebel leaders. The latter are very obstinate, however, and profess to be determined to be satisfied only when a republic is established in China. Word has come of the death of several missionaries in the interior, but details are lacking.

TORONTO, ONT., NOV. 1.—Newspaper comment, both Liberal and Conservative alike, seem unanimously congratulative re the selection of N. W. Rowell, as leader of the Liberal party in Ontario. The Hamilton Spectator, (Conservative), ventures to say "In fact, with so dominating a personality as Sir James at the head of an administration, it is not difficult to imagine there is even greater need for the spur of an active and intelligent Opposition to impress upon that personality that in a multitude of counsel there is likely to be found more wisdom than can ever hope to be located under an individual hat.

TURKS WILL FIGHT

Special to The Examiner:

CONSTANTINOPLE, NOV. 1. — There were reports here of several Turkish victories in sanguinary contests with Italian outposts and the people went wild with joy. Now that the fighting has been commenced in the interior, the Turks have plucked up courage and there is a disposition on the part of all to fight till the last ditch.

A WONDER WORKER

"It heals like magic," is a favorite expression when Dr. Chase's Ointment is used. It works quickly, stops all itching at once, often heals in a single night. For eczema, salt rheum, barbers' itch, skin irritations or eruptions, it is a most satisfactory treatment. Being antiseptic, it prevents blood poisoning.

New Rink For Collingwood

As an instance of the high opinion held everywhere of Peterborough's contractors, it might be noted that yesterday Mr. Thomas Rutherford received a letter from a prominent Collingwood, (Ont.) firm, asking him to make out and supply plans and specifications for a huge skating rink, 100 x 86 feet in size, to be erected in that burg. In compliance with the above request, Mr. Rutherford has made up and mailed a detailed plan of the proposed rink.

PLEASANT EXPERIENCE

The Grand Trunk Pacific are in receipt of a letter from a prominent traveller in Eastern Canada, who has just returned from a trip to the West, and which included a journey on the Grand Trunk Pacific from Winipeg to Wainwright and return.

He states: "I must say it was one of the pleasantest experiences in a long life of travel. Having seen the road in the making, and being aware of the high standard set up, I was prepared for a good roadbed, and was not disappointed, for we rode as smoothly as between Montreal and Toronto. The sleeping cars are models of comfort, and the service on them, as well as the dining cars, couldn't be better. The Grand Trunk are setting the pace for general excellence in Western Canada."

Resolutions Of Sympathy

At last meeting of the local International Moulders' Union of North America, the following resolutions were made, and it was arranged to send a copy of them to the bereaved family:

That in as much as it pleased our Heavenly Father to remove from our midst, by death, our esteemed brother, Joseph Glass, therefore be it

Resolved, that we, the members of the Union No. 191, Peterborough, Ont., of the International Moulders' Union of North America, do hereby place on record our deep regret at the loss we have sustained by the death of such a faithful member;

Resolved, that we convey to the bereaved widow and family of our late lamented brother, this united expression of our heartfelt sympathy of this great trial which bereft them of a kind father and loving husband. While we are touched with the spirit of brotherly sympathy on behalf of the stricken family, we pray that their eyes may be directed to Him who alone can comfort the widow and fatherless in their sorrow and tribulation;

Resolved, that a copy of these resolutions be sent to the widow and family of our late brother, and that the charter of the Union be draped in mourning for the space of ninety days.

Signed on behalf of the International Moulders' Union of North America, Local Union No. 191, Peterborough, Ont.

Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., Well Known Toronto Barrister Succeeds Hon. A. G. MacKay, the Choice Being Greeted With Great Enthusiasm.

A SPLENDID ADDRESS

Toronto, November 1.—"The fight is not mine nor yours. It is the fight of the progressive forces in our Province. We will go in together, each doing his best, all working for the principles we hold in common, and to maintain the best traditions of the Liberal party. To the measure of the ability I possess I shall throw myself into the fight, and, let the results be what they will, we shall give a good account of ourselves."

"Amid scenes of intense enthusiasm at the close of a long and busy day Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., the newly-selected leader of the Liberal party in Ontario, chosen to succeed Hon. A. G. McKay, who resigned in the morning, in a brief and ringing speech sounded the note of militant Liberalism to the great gathering of representative men who had unanimously tendered him their confidence and support.

The scene was a remarkable one. It was nearly 10 o'clock when Mr. Chas. M. Bowman, M.P.P., the Legislative Whip of the Liberal party, reported to the waiting association the news that the Parliamentary Committee had unanimously tendered the leadership to Mr. Rowell, and that he had finally decided to accept.

OVATION FOR NEW LEADER

The gathering broke into cheering, which continued unabated until some moments later, Mr. Rowell entered the hall, preceded by Mr. Bowman, and followed by Mr. F. F. Pardee, M. P., chief Liberal Whip. The cheering became an ovation. Men stood on their chairs and waved enthusiastically, the demonstrations finally turning to song in the hearty rendering of "He's a Jolly Good Fellow."

The leadership came to Mr. Rowell as a birthday gift. To-day he will celebrate his 44th birthday, having bene born in the year of Confederation.

ANNOUNCEMENT RECEIVED WITH CHEERS

Directly after the new President of the association, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, had caleld the evening session to order, Mr. C. M. Bowman rose to make a statement as to what had been done by the Parliamentary Committee with regard to the leadership.

Mr. Bowman said:—"We are now in a position to state that the Parliamentary Committee, after careful consideration, unanimously decided to tender to Mr. N. W. Rowell, K.C., the leadership of the Liberal party in this province—(loud applause)—and I am sure you will all have the same feelings as I have myself: that the conclusion we came to was in the best interests of the party.

"Mr. Rowell has seen his way clear in answer to that request, to say 'Yes.' (Loud and continued cheering.—I am sure that this announcement will not only be pleasing to the delegates and members of the Liberal party here, but I am confident that when it goes out to the Liberals of the province it will be received with great satisfaction, and that they will feel that Mr. Rowell is worthy of the position we have offered him to-day.

"I am confident that with Mr. Rowell as our leader, with the magnetic personality he possesses, he will be able through his influence to enliven the Liberals all over this province with new hope and confidence; that when December 11th is past they will realize that a good day's work has been done. I ask you then—it will not be necessary for me to ask if he meets with your approval, as I know by your applause that he does—to endorse the action of the committee."

Mr. J. W. Curry, K.C., moved that the thanks of the meeting be given to the committee for the very excellent services it had rendered, and thoroughly approving of the tendering of the leadership to Mr. Rowell. The motion was carried by acclamation, and upon Mr. Rowell being brought into the room by Messrs. Bowman and Pardee the new leader received a great reception.

Hon. Mackenzie King, as chairman, then tendered the hearty congratulations of the association to Mr. Rowell.

MR. ROWELL'S ADDRESS

"I appreciate more than I can tell you," said Mr. Rowell in reply, "the expression of confidence you have given in asking me to accept the responsible position of leader of the Liberal party in this province. I have decided to say 'Yes.' (Loud cheering.) If I were to do it over again I think I would almost say 'No.' Not that I do not value—as I do—the call you have given me, but because of the responsibility of the position to which you have called me, and the difficulty I feel in discharging the responsibilities of the position consistent with the other claims upon me.

"I am sure you will not expect me to-night to speak particularly on the issues of the campaign. But I want to say this: I have only said 'Yes,'

CANADA HAS DONE WELL

The Examiner has frequently ventured the assertion that Canada has done more to provide the first essential of progress—transportation—than any country of its population in history. On account of the construction of the Canadian Pacific Railway Canada contributed almost 63 million dollars in cash and completed railway, not to speak of land grants, which under splendid administration have, perhaps, yielded, or will yield, a similar amount. On the Intercolonial Railway, Canada has spent up to last year 83 millions. On Prince Edward Island Railways, 5½ millions. On subsidies to private railways, aside from the Canadian Pacific Railway, our expenditure has been 42½ millions. On the Transcontinental Railway, including the Quebec bridge, the Canadian Government outlay has already reached the million dollar mark. In addition we have spent about 80 millions on our canal systems.

This means a grand total of 374 millions, and if we add the value of the land grants made by Dominion and Provincial Governments, and the cash bonuses given by provinces and municipalities, we should have another total of 300 million dollars. Thus we have a grand aggregate of 674 million dollars spent by Canada to provide transportation, equal to $135 per head of an average population of five millions.

GOT WHAT THEY VOTED FOR!

Now that the milkmen's combine has been formed and the price advanced to seven cents per quart, the housekeeper sees the beauty of combines from a new point of view. Last September there was a vote and the people decided to retain the combines. This was done by refusing competition in the articles of living, and thus giving free playto the combines to take it out of the producer and consumer at the same time. Look again at the comparative prices, say, for live stock, and see how the producer voted last September to his own hurt. The past week's top prices for live stock are as follows:

Cattle—Toronto, $6.40; Montreal, $6.00; Buffalo, $7.75.

Lambs—Toronto, $5.70; Montreal, $5.50; Buffalo, $5.85.

Eggs—Toronto, 30c.; Montreal, 28c; Buffalo, 50c.

Has anybody noticed a corresponding depresion in prices of these articles to the consumer? This is the reward the consumer, farmer and working man have got for voting to keep the home market intact. The "British Born" and the "Defenders of the faith" got their reward for voting for the Empire and against "French domination" in a similar left-handed way. Nobody seems to have got what he voted for. Electors were duped into voting for a dream; they have got a very unpleasant reality in many respects.

Hon. Mr. Borden must show his hand in the matter of the navy. Either certain contracts for vessels for the Canadian Navy must be let, or the cheques of the tenderers returned and the naval law declared a dead letter.

OLD LEADER AND NEW.

Hon. A. G. MacKay has been practically "black-handed" out of the Ontario leadership of the Liberal party. He has been threatened and assailed with legal prosecution, a rather favourite way of a wing of the Conservative party to injure and defame a political opponent. While, Mr. MacKay feels that, with black-mailing charges pending, that cannot be disproved in court before the elections, his rentention of the leadership is impracticable, he gives the assurance that the public will readily accept Hon Mr. MacKay's positive assurance that the charge against him is unfounded. Mr. MacKay has made a good leader and a good parliamentarian, to whose insight and keenness a good deal of the good character of the legislation that has been enacted by the Whitney government, is due. He has given faithful and excellent service and his resignation was accepted with regret. Mr. A. W. Rowell, K.C., was chosen leader of the Liberal party of Ontario at the Provincial Liberal convent ion in Toronto yesterday. He is a man in the prime of life—in the early forties—and as a life long Liberal, has already given the people, and the party of the people, important platform service. He possesses a familiarity with public questions, a political intelligence, depth of insight and breadth of outlook that amply qualify him to creditably and successfully lead the militant of forces of Liberalism in Ontario. It is early for Mr. Rowell to announce his platform, but it is sure to be a broad and progressive one. It is pretty certain to include—

An act to compensate workmen for injuries, modelled upon British legislation,

A revision of the Assessment Act, under which municipal councils will be given the right to say whether they will exercise the right to exempt improvements from taxation and place the taxation on land values.

A legislative eight-hour day for underground miners.

Stability in mining titles.

A general progressive colonization policy for New Ontario and

Good roads and improved transportation facilities.

MR. WHITNEY'S ADDRESS.

The Toronto News, which would justify homicide committed by a Conservative government, declares that Sir James Whitney's manifesto "completely cuts the ground from under the feet of his political opponents." It contains a "modest recapitulation" of a long series of valuable achievements—seven years of constructive work." This big claim will stand a little analysis in the way of some consideration of Sir James' claim to credit. He boasts of the creation of a Railway Board, which is merely a laughing stock of inefficiency and as autocratic and one-man as Sir James, himself.

His "revision of the Public School system," as it accounts for the muddle into which provincial education has been plunged, does not bring him much credit.

"The abolition of railway subsidies" sounds hollow, in view of the tremendous Canadian Northern Railway land grants.

"The promotion of agricultural interests" finds its complement in decreased rural population of the banner agricultural province of Ontario.

"The Reform of the License administration" suggests the parable of the man in Scripture who "took unto himself seven other devils, and the last state of that man was worse than the first." The fact is that license administration, under the Whitney Government, has been harnessed fast and strong to the Conservative party machine, and the license commissioners are petty tyrants when they are not the instruments of license holders. The three-fifths clause, devised and retained by the Whieny Government, is a "lion in the path" of local option progress.

Sir James boasts—what a "cheek"—of the "doubling of the provincial revenue," in face of the fact that when in opposition he opposed the means adopted by the late Liberal Government to add to the provincial revenue.

"The development of Northern Ontario" gives little ground for boast to a Premier who opposed its opening, and sneered at it as "the land of the stunted poplar," who obstructed the railway proposed and inaugurated by the late Ross Government, which has been the means of developing the mineral output "from 11 million to 39 million dollars." In all other ways the north of Ontario has been neglected, as witness the statement of a Conservative journal, the Toronto Telegram, which says that under the management of the Whitney Government "the northern country has been allowed to sleep six years."

"A system of industrial training," a system as debilitated as that of our Public School system has allowed to become. Not one interest concerned in effective technical education will admit that this important subject has received any practical attention worth a straw. The Whitney Government has dallied with a subject that is of the greatest interest to an industrial province like Ontario. It has marked time waiting upon the Dominion Government to do the work of the Province.

Altogether, what Sir James Whitney boasts of most loudly is practically in the main the result of the automatic operation of the policy of the late Government, and called for only routine administrative watchfulness. The new departures, which he might call constructive, are, while not unimportant, only partially great. The Prison Reform system of making prisoners work on a farm, is simply an adaptation of methods prevalent elsewhere. The hydro-electric scheme is unjust and unfair in its application. It is particularly hard on Eastern Ontario, which has been neglected to the advantage of Western Ontario, whose development has been advanced at the expense of the whole Province, and to the distinct disadvantage of important industrial centres in Eastern Ontario like Peterborough.

The big majority Sir James has has made him indifferent and sleepy. The reduction of his big majority might operate as a spur, and the electors of the Province, if they do not decide to wipe out his majority, will do well to reduce it as a hint to the Whitney Government that it must earn its salary.

EDITORIAL NOTES

The Globe very politely, pointedly, and truthfully describes Sir James Whitney as a man whose "past is before him and his future behind."

Before the elections Mr. Monk and Mr. Borden were not on speaking terms. Now their heads woo Morpheus on the same pillow. Political exigency makes strange bed-fellows.

A western editor, in self-defence, hurled a pot of lye at an intrusive bailiff. It was a natural weapon for a newspaper man to use, especially, of course, if he were of Conservative cast of morals.

Hon. Mr. Borden is to be honoured with a title, an honour of which he is worthy. But why stop at Mr. Borden? Certainly Mr. Bourassa, who is the admitted master of the administration, should not be overlooked.

Mr. N. W. Rowell enters the leadership of the Liberal party in Ontario under happy auspices. He was born on Nov. 1st, 1867, the same year Confederation was born. This is an augury that his leadership will be as great and successful as Confederation has been.

THE BIG INTERESTS AND TAFT

Weekly (Farmers') Sun

It was the Big Interests that elected Taft and defeated Bryan in 1908. Signs are not wanting that these Interests are now preparing to turn on Taft as like Interests turned on Laurier last September. The cause of the antagonism to Taft is found in the enforcement of anti-trust legislation. The present disposition of Big Business seems to be to join with the Democratic party provided that party will name Governor Harmon of Ohio as its candidate.

TAX REFORM IN RELATION TO MORE EQUITABLE TAXATION

(Ottawa Citizen)

The Citizen is glad to print in another column a letter taking issue with us on the all important subject of tax reform. The Citizen believes that open-minded discussion will help along the cause of tax reform, which aims at a more equitable distribution of the burden of taxation. When it is seen that the proposal (the Fripp bill) to effect this end will at the same time stimulate industry, create a more rapid growth in population, increase land values and secure to labour a larger share of its earnings, the opposition to it will subside. It will also destroy the present system of municipal taxation, which is not only unjust and economically unsound but dishonest. During the past couple of years The Citizen has from time to time reiterated the reasons why it believes the following results will be effected by shifting all taxation for municipal purposes from improvements to land values, and during the same period the Citizen has frequently stated its reasons therefor. A brief restatement of the case would seem to be in order at this juncture.

It is generally conceded that land values are community values. They are created by the growth of the community and its public expenditures. Increase in population and the consequent increase of public expenditure for community purposes increases the land values. Improvements to private properties are readily seen to be the result of individual industry and expenditure. It is necessary to recognize this fundamental difference between land values and improvement values to appreciate fully the wisdom and justice of the proposed change in the system. It must also be remembered that the aggregate of individual expenditures on improvements benefits not only the individual but the city as a whole, and helps to increase the land values as a whole and for this reason should be encouraged in every possible way. It should also be borne in mind that a tax on an article increses its cost and to that extent limits its use or consumption. If a city fines a man with a tax for spending money to improve his property (though he thereby benefits the city as a whole) it will restrict the number and value of improvements. This will reduce employment in the building trades, which are the most important industries in any city. This in turn reacts on the city growth by discouraging increase in population. If, on the other hand, a city taxes its land values, it draws its necessary revenues from a fund created by itself, which is the honest method, and in so doing not only does not restrict the increase in those land values, but actually tends to further increase them by improving the city with the necessary money so taken in taxes. If a city ceased to collect taxes on improvements, businesses and incomes, and raised all its revenues from its land values, it will be apparent, in the light of the foregoing axioms, that it would "stimulate industry, create more rapid growth in population, increase land values and secure to labour a larger share of its earnings." It will also be manifest that a city in taxing individual values (improvements, businesses and incomes) is employing a tax method which is "unjust, economically unsound and dishonest." And the city of Vancouver is at the present time demonstrating the truth of these propositions.

The proposed amendment to the provincial assessment act will only permit municipalities to change their present system of taxation on a majority vote of their property owners so desiring. In view of this restriction Sir James Whitney's persistent refusal to allow this legislation to pass the legislature is as autocratic as it is inexplicable. The Ottawa Journal, Hamilton Spectator, Toronto Saturday Night and other influential newspapers advocate that in order to circumvent the Premier's unreasonable stand all candidates for the forthcoming Provincial elections should be pledged to support legislation in the next House permitting municipalities to tax land values at a higher rate than improvements. The Citizen hopes this will be done. Mr. J. A. Ellis, the candidate (Conservative) for West Ottawa, has set an excellent example in this regard by pledging himself to the nomination convention to support the Fripp bill in the next provincial House if he is elected.

PROVINCIAL FINANCES.

(London Advertiser.)

A very vulnerable feature of Conservative administration of provincial affairs in Ontario is that of finance, and there is nothing which more clearly demonstrates that the general policy of the Whitney government has been that of marking time.

The revenues, it is true, have been buoyant, but when the sources of income are investigated it is found that they emanate almost entirely from the late government, and that if the Conservatives had carried out in power the financial policy laid down by them while in opposition, they would have been swamped with deficits even in this period of uniform prosperity.

The total receipts of the province in 1910 were $8,889,004, while in 1904 they were $6,128,357, an increase of $2,762,646. The increases occurred chiefly under the following headings: Corporation taxes, $331,710; succession duties, $299,744; mining licenses and fees, $192,085; Dominion subsidy, $794,112; T. & N. O. earnings, $420,000.

All of the increase, save a trifle less than $300,000, can be accounted for by laws placed upon the statute books by the late ogvernment, or by measures advocated by Liberals. It speaks volumes for the Liberal party that seven years after it has been out of office in Ontario, almost every dollar of the improved revenues or the province which the Conservatives have been recklessly spending can be traced back to their efforts.

Not one dollar would ever have been received by the province under the head of Corporation Tax had the Conservatives had their way while they were in opposition, and yet from this source alone the government has received $6,192,975.

Similarly, under the Succession Duties Act the province has received in all $7,773,219, while under the Brewers' and Distillers' Act it has received $537,834.

Under these three [illegible] tion the total receipts [illegible] up to 31st Octobe[illegible] magnificent sum[illegible]

The same li[illegible]plies to the T. & [illegible]. In 1904 the grant [illegible]vince received by way of [illegible] from the Dominion government was $1,134,680. In 1910, owing to the increase in population, and as a result of the action of the Liberal government at Ottawa, the subsidy was increased to $2,128,892, or an increase as between 1904 and 1910 of $994,112. When the Ross government was in power negotiations were opened with a view to obtaining such an increased subsidy, with the result that after the Conservatives had come into power they were satisfactorily concluded.

Then, as to the Temiskaming & Northern Ontario Railway, everybody knows that it was started by the Ross government. In 1904 it was in its initial stage of construction, and there were no earnings received from it by the province, while in 1910 the receipts were $420,000. In other words, the increased receipts as between 1904 and 1910 under this particular head were $420,000. Had the late government not undertaken this work the receipts of the province in 1910 would have been short just this figure.

When it comes to the increased expenditures the responsibility must largely rest with the party in power. For example, the cost of civil government has increased since 1904 sixty-five per cent.; the cost of managing the crown lands has increased during the same period 98 per cent., and total expenditure 68 per cent. In fact during the first three years of Conservative rule the per capita expenditure was as great as the increase in per capita expenditure during the whole 33 years of Liberal rule. In short the government has shown no capacity for discovering increased sources of revenue, while it has handled the revenues which their predecessors in office placed at their disposal with the utmost prodigality, not to say, recklessness.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"I DON'T see why I'm so tired today," ruminated the lady who was calling on me.

"Why, you've just told me that your husband brought home three guests and you had to get up a big dinner for them," I reminded her. "Doesn't that explain it?"

"Mercy no," said the lady who was calling on me. "Of course, there was a good deal of cooking to do and a tremendous pile of dishes, but I'm used to that sort of thing. I'll tell you what I think tired me more than the work. In the early afternoon I had to go to R— to pay a bill for Frank, and coming back, the car broke down and I was delayed. I was so afraid I would be late about starting things, and I knew Frank wouldn't like it if dinner wasn't ready at just half past six. If there is anything he can't abide it's not having things just on time. And really, the worry about getting home took more out of me than the work I did when I got home."

How much energy do you think most of use use up in actual work, atcually accomplishing things compared with the amount we use in trying to get along with difficult people, in combating crochets, in looking out for sharp corners of disposition, in harmonizing inharmonious people, and in general fretting lest we may not please or satisfy someone in some respect?

For a woman, I should put the proportion at about one to one.

For a man, perhaps less energy is utilized in this way. Somehow men don't seem to be expected to look out for other people's crochets and please everybody in quite the same way women are.

The woman I spoke of at the beginning dissipated her energy fretting lest she should be a little bit late.

Perhaps you've done that.

But if you haven't, surely you have dissipated energy in worrying lest someone or other would not be satisfied with what you were doing.

"I really like to iron," I heard a patient little mother say the other day, "but I just hate to iron Marion's shirtwaists because she is so particular about them. I declare it takes less out of me to do a whole dress for myself than a simple waist for her."

A dressmaker once told me that she would never work for people who were apt to be excessively critical and hard to please, because the day's work tired her so much more than when she worked for reasonable people.

These are but two examples of the way in which other people's crochets and whimsies and eccentricities and exactingness take more out of us than our work. Doubtless you can supply a hundred such instances from your daily experience.

And please, in case you are sufficiently interested in the line of thought to follow it up, please look for the ways in which YOUR eccentricities and exactingness take it out of other people as well as the way other people's eccentricities and exactingness take it out of you.

I assure you, you will probably find one branch of the subject as fertile as the other, and—in case you are one of those people with whom seeing a fault in themselves is equivalent to trying to correct it,—much more valuable.

NO MORE CONSTIPATION, BILIOUS HEADACHE, BAD BREATH SOUR STOMACH OR LAZY LIVER

Furred Tongue, Bad Taste, Indigestion, Sallow Skin and Miserable Headaches come from a torpid liver and clogged bowels, which cause your stomach to become filled with undigested food, which sours and ferments like garbage in a swill barrel. That's the first step to untold misery—indigestion, foul gases, bad breath, yellow skin, mental fears, everything that is horrible and nauseating. A Cascaret to-night will straighten you out by morning—a 10-cent box will keep you feeling good for months. Millions of men and women take a Cascaret now and then to keep their stomach, liver and bowels regulated and never know a miserable moment. Industrial Training And Technical Education Study

Report of Summer Work of Royal Commission Appointed by Laurier Government is Being Prepared-'-Interesting Impressions of Memorable Tour in Europe.

After spending six months in Europe, Dr. J. W. Robertson, chairman of the Royal Commission on Industrial Training and Technical Education, has returned to Ottawa. The other commissioners returned to Canada several weeks ago, and are at work upon the many reports, records and documents obtained abroad. From time to time, communications have been sent to the Minister of Labour, outlining the progress of the enquiry in Europe. The substance of these has been given to the public through the Labour Gazette.

After an enquiry covering the cities of the eastern portion of the United States is made, the report of the commission will be prepared for presentation to the Minister of Labour.

The commission was very fortunate in the conditions under which it pursued its investigations. The weather was constantly agreeable, and travelling accommodation in Europe, by railway, steamer and by road, was invariably more than comfortable.

The credentials of the commission, the helpfulness of Lord Strathcona, the co-operation of the educational authorities in England, Scotland and Ireland, and the generous assistance of the British Embassies in the foreign countries, opened every desirable door.

The commissioners regard themselves as exceedingly lucky in the opportunities which came to them; and the pleasures of their experiences in seeing and learning were increased by the belief and hope that the work they were doing would prove beneficial to Canada. They consider themselves as trustees of special work in which the people of Canada have invested.

For example, in the city of Halifax 80 per cent of all the boys and girls who leave the elementary day schools continue their education at evening vocational classes and technical day courses.

In the city of Edinburgh the schemes to secure educational effort and opportunity for the boys and girls who have left the elementary school have been also most successful. Edinburgh could not be designated as an exclusively industrial city. In many of its best features it resembles what one would hope a grown-up Ottawa would become. If the proportion of boys and girls who attend continuation, commercial, technical and art evening classes in Edinburgh were applied to the present Ottawa the numbers of such pupils in Ottawa would exceed 5,000.

The earnestness of the pupils, their interest in their work, and the regularity of their attendance were evidence of their own recognition of the value of the education they are receiving. In the United Kingdom attendances at these technical and evening classes is voluntary, whereas in twenty-one out of the twenty-six states of the German Empire attendance for a number of hours per week (from four to eight) is compulsory for boys from fourteen to seventeen. In a few of the states it is compulsory also for girls. The employers are required to provide opportunities for their employees to attend such classes, to be over before seven o'clock in the evening.

Notwithstanding the immense progress and the manifold evidences of progress in this new field of educational effort in England, Scotland and Ireland, one seldom hears any laudation by the people themselves of what they are doing. The refrain of nearly every comment on the educational work of England, by an Englishman is lamentation at its backwardness compared with that of Germany. I could not fully share that feeling after being over Germany and other European countries.

Whatever of backwardness, due to neglect or indifference in the past may still exist in the United Kingdom—and it still stares at you out of the factory workers and their living quarters in the big cities—it appears to me that a most resolute and well directed effort has been continued during the last seven or ten years and that it is only a question of time when the spirit and fruits of the present movement will have reached all classes as fully as in Germany. Whether the workers and their families in England will get as much from the education when it has reached them all, is another question. In Germany I was impressed by the apparent solidarity of the citizenship with remarkable absence of restrictions on personal tastes and preferences. Education did not seem to be planned or cherished as a means whereby the individual got ahead of other individuals. It looks like a great national service whereby all the individuals are being trained towards ability for their respective occupations in the interest of the State. The personal power and wellbeing of the units of the community are looked after for the sake of the State. Elsewhere more emphasis was laid on the development of individualism with its tendency to exploit the uneducated for profit.

The spirit of sociability and the evidence of "feeling at home" by the children in their classes and playgrounds impressed me. There was not the shadow of an indication that the military or any other system of organization to excess had cowed or curbed the natural spirits and manners of the children. The demeanor was that of well-bred, gentle-mannered children at ease, interested and enthusiastic regarding their work. Everywhere thoroughness was not proclaimed but was revealed by what was being done. I need not remark upon the excellence of the specimens of hand-writing in the schools, but I could mention the legibility, beauty and neatness of the hand-writing I observed in general, on envelopes and addresses of parcels that came under my notice. I have seen as good examples of hand-writing in Canadian schools as I have seen in any in Germany, but a glance over the address labels of parcels at railway stations or shipping offices would give one an impression that every German wrote clearly and neatly.

SINGING AND CULTURE

Singing was taught, not merely as a means of voice production or voice culture. It impressed me as being rather the culture of the whole child—body, mind and spirit, trained towards controlled expression. I had not thought it possible that singing could be made such an instrument for physical and spirit development. I found the same thing in the Danish schools. To excel in music appears to be only a minor part of the means, whereas to train towards control of the physical and emotional nature and into a feeling rather than an understanding of solidarity in citizenship were the main objects.

One of the main aims of the system of education in most of the German states seems to be to make for the efficiency of the individual as a citizen as well as for effectiveness as a worker. Attendance at educational classes of some sort between fourteen and seventeen years of age is compulsory on the sake of technical improvement and industrial efficiency no doubt, but also for the development of power and a sense of responsibility on the citizen as such. Comparing a German city with one in England or Canada, one is struck by the absence from the streets in the evening of the youth of both sexes, standing on street corners or wandering aimlessly about. The vocational classes for all sorts of workers between the ages of fourteen and seventeen have evidently given the people generally a liking for, and satisfaction from, attending classes after the ordinary elementary school days are over.

MUST ATTEND CLASSES

In the technical classes themselves provision is made for all classes of workers, and practically for three sorts of careers, viz.: for the hand workers, for the foremen and superintendents, and for the leaders and managers. During apprenticeship, the youths are required to attend classes during several hours per week, ranging usually from four to ten; and employers are required to let their apprentices go at such times that the classes can be over before 7 o'clock in the evening. Many of the leading employers let the apprentices go to attend classes during one or two forenoons or afternoons per week. In such cases the wages of the apprentices are paid for attendance at the school just as though they were at work in the shop.

After apprenticeship is over, there are evening technical classes, and even Sunday forenoon classes. We were told that when compulsory attendance was first required by Government action, there was a good deal of hostility on the part of employers, and even of the youths themselves. After two years of experience the most of the opposition had disappeared, and now compulsory participation in some educational work is accepted as part of the civilization.

In visiting an apprentices' class in one of the schools in Switzerland, I asked the lads who had attended two years under the compulsory regulations to vote whether or not they would now attend voluntarily. Thirty voted they would attend voluntarily and only one did not vote. I enquired from the teachers their opinion as to how many of the pupils would have come voluntarily from the first. They thought not more than one-third of those in that particular class would have begun without the compulsory requirement.

At Zunich and Winterthur, also in Switzerland, we found real apprentice trade schools. The young men served their apprenticeship under shop conditions in those schools, were taught a trade thoroughly, and were able to pass the State examination for the completed apprenticeship at the end of their course. The course in the engineering trade was four years. Such workmen were esteemed as being so well trained that they were in greater demand than apprentices who had served in the usual way in shops only. These apprentice schools are run under commercial factory conditions, and the output is sold at a higher price than the output of similar factories where the work is done by journeymen.

In France, great attention is paid to drawing and applied art. For the gaining of scholarships and admission to the highest grade of technical institutions, the examination includes the making of some specific article in iron or steel from a drawing and specification. A certain length of time is allowed for the work, and the hand skill and constructive power of the student counts for a good deal in the examination results. That was rather a new aspect in the character of examinations.

BUILDING TRADES CLASSES

In Denmark I was impressed by the fine appearance of the cultivated fields, by the spirit of contentment—but not of apathy—that one found among the rural population, by the persuasiveness of their patriotism, and the intensity by which they pursue co-operation methods in connection with rural life, particularly in the production of butter, in the production of bacon, in the collection of eggs and in the improvement of their cattle and pigs. While Denmark is chiefly an agricultural country, we found technical schools in the comparatively small towns. These provided classes especially for those engaged in the building trades.

Physical culture is made much of. The people's high schools, which are peculiar to Denmark, are in a class by themselves. They consist of a one-year course of 5 months in the winter for young men between 18 and 25 years of age, and a 3-months' course in summer for young women of the same age. They are cultural schools, devoting much time to history, Danish literature, physical culture and singing, and they are one of the prime forces in Danish efficiency in agriculture and domestic life.

Perhaps from no other countries were we able to learn as much concerning efficiency in organization and in the carrying out of methods for the training of the workers as in Ireland and Scotland respectively.

IRISH SCHOOLS

The Municipal Technical College at Belfast is a beautiful building, and a model of well considered suitability for instruction in the principles that underlie the various trades, crafts and occupations followed in that great shipbuilding and textile centre. The organisation of instruction for the rural population in Ireland provides for all classes and all localities. Leaders are trained at the Royal Albert Agricultural College near Dublin. Farm schools with a one-year's course for practical farming are provided at different centres, and a travelling pastoral instructor, who visits anywhere from four to twelve farms and farmers per day, spends his whole time in a small area settled anew by small holders under the Congested Districts Board. We found such a man in charge of some two hundred and fifty "colonists," each having about twenty-five acres of land. That had formerly been a large grazing estate. I was there three years after the first allocation. Many of the "colonists" had put half of their area under tillage, and were growing fine crops of oats, barley, potatoes, and replacing the old attitude of resentment at conditions in the beautiful, arable, distressful island.

From Scotland there is so much to learn that one is embarrassed in seeking for only a few examples that may be presented in a few words. Edinburgh and Glasgow, with the present provision for industrial training and technical education, have no reason to be ashamed of their effort in the presence of the best that is being done in Munich, Dresden, or other German cities. They were probably twenty years later in getting started, but have made up more than five years of the leeway during the last eight years of energetic work. In the smaller towns of Scotland provision is made for technical education in a manner full of instruction.

BEAUTY IS IMPRESSIVE

In all these old lands one is impressed by the beauty of the countryside, where centuries of labour have given a richness of finish which is as yet absent in this new country. The excellence of the roads is wherein perhaps they are most in advance of us in Canada. In travelling over some six hundred miles in England and Scotland, I found more than three-fourths of the roads better highways than the Driveway of the Ottawa Improvement Commission.

TO CHECK A COLD

It is easy to check a cold if you begin in time. Frequent doses of Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine keep the cough loose, allay the inflammation, and so prevent it spreading to the bronchial tubes and lungs. Mrs. S. M. Moore, Shortreed, B.C., writes: "I wish to state my gratitude for Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine, for it cured a cold which a friend said would soon put me in the grave."

NOTHING TO PAY

Sandy had come into the city to see the sights, and his attention was attracted to a big building, where an attendant at the door was shouting for everybody to come in and view the place. Seeing Sandy hesitate, the attendant said, "Come on, walk in. You have nothing to pay." Thus reassured the Scotsman was walking past when the attendant remarked, "Just have your umbrella in the stand there at the door." "Oh, will, a'," said Sandy, as he wheeled round and began walking out again. "A'm no' just as daft, ma man. A kent there wis a fraud about this 'free business some whaur."

HEAVIEST DREADNOUGHT IN THE WORLD LAUNCHED

Fifty thousand people witnessed the launch at Portsmouth on October 16, by Princess Christian, of the first of the Coronation super - Dreadnoughts, H.M.S. King George V. The vessel took the water superbly at the appointed hour ,and without any assistance from the hydraulic jacks, so perfectly was the weight adjusted to the strength of the dog-shores. Without a hitch the great gray and red hull took the water, and so perfect are her lines that there was scarcely any return wave.

Long before daylight nearly 400 shipwrights were engaged upon the arrangements for the launch. Only about thirty keel blocks remained at a quarter to eleven. Indeed, the religious service itself was punctuated by thud after thud, as still more were knocked out. Every inch of available space was black with people, and from stands that appeared mere pigmies beside the great gray hull which soared with unbroken sides 490 feet into the air, privileged folk eagerly watched the wrights at work.

Among the distinguished party on the gaily decorated launching platform were Princess Christian of Schleswig-Holstein and her daughter, Princess Victoria, Admiral Sir Arthur Moore, Rear-Admiral Alban Tate, Rear-Admiral C. J. Briggs, General Sir Charles Douglas, and representatives of all the great naval shipbuilding companies.

Preceding the launch there was a short religious service conducted by the Bishop of Southampton. The warships in harbour boomed forth a royal salute of twenty one guns, the naming ceremony followed, and with one vigorous blow Princess Christian dashed the heavy-garlanded bottle of Australian wine against the ship's steel bow. "I wish success to King George V. and all who sail in her," she declared.

Then came the actual launch. Across the bow of the ship, which rose not two feet in front of Princess Christian, was stretched a white rope. The admiral - superintendent held against it a chisel, and with a few sharp taps the Princess severed it. Slowly the great ship moved. In stately fashion ,without a sound except the lapping of the waves, and without a quiver, she entered the water.

A luncheon in the new joiners' shop followed, and Princess Christian was presented with a picture of the ship in oils.

There was an amusing encounter between the naval police and so-called "fat-snatchers" anxious to obtain the valuable Russian tallow and oil mixture with which the ship is coated. With fishing nets they lay in watch at the mouth of the slipway, and risking the launching wave they promptly pulled in and captured as much tallow as they could before the boom was thrown across. Several men fell overboard in escaping the police, but they got away with pounds of tallow on their clothes and bodies as well as in the boat.

The King is expected shortly to pay a visit of inspection to his namesship ,which when completed in January will displace 24,000 tons, and will thus be the heaviest British warship as well as the largest. Her Parsons turbines will develop 31,000 horse-power, and she will have a speed of 21 knots. As armament the King George V. is to carry ten 13.5-inch guns mounted in pairs on the central line of the ship and a battery of the newest 4-inch quick-firing guns.

The Store that Satisfies

GOOD FOR COMPLEXION

Of all the skin beautifiers we have had in our store there is none that we can recommend more highly than the D.D.D. prescription.

D.D.D. is such a logical remedy for all kinds of skin trouble and so scientifically compounded that it clears up the complexion over night.

D.D.D. is most widely known as the most reliable treatment for Eczema, but it has also been found invaluable for all kinds of minor skin troubles We do not hesitate to give D.D.D. our special recommendation. In fact, we are convinced that D.D.D. will give relief that no other remedy can. —

Surely if you have any skin trouble you should give D.D.D. Prescription a trial.

Don't delay, for if not promptly checked ,minor skin troubles often develop into serious disease, difficult even for D.D.D. to cure.

Better drop into our store anyway and get posted on this wonderful remedy. Ask also about D.D.D. Soap, which is so invaluable in keeping the skin in healthy condition.

Or write the D.D.D. Laboratories, Dept. P.E., 49 Colborne St., Toronto, for a free trial bottle. In either case, don't put it off.

Wonderful Work Of The Laurier Regime Record Of Progress

(From the Winnipeg Free Press)

In resigning the helm to his successor, Sir Wilfrid Laurier can look back with satisfaction over the progress the good ship Canada has made during the fifteen years he has been guiding her course. The Canadian people, too, have reason for satisfaction that Sir Wilfrid's successor measures up so worthily to the high standard which has happily been fixed by the men who thus far in our country's history have, as chiefs of state, carried the burden of responsibilities attached to that high office. We need never cease to hope the best for our country, so long as the choice of pilot lies between men of such high character as Laurier and Borden.

It must be a supreme satisfaction to Sir Wilfrid that, though defeated, he stil has the respect and admiration of his fellow-countrymen. That that attitude of the Conservative press, in commenting upon his defeat, has been singularly generous, is a fact whose significance is not lessened by the consideration that the victorious party can afford to be generous. Partisanship has been made to smother such sentiments. The tributes to Sir Wilfrid have been given in a spirit which will be appreciated by all true Canadians.

In defeat ,as in victory, Sir Wilfrid is an inspiring figure. His example is an inspiration to all who fought with him . It must be a satisfaction to him that it was upon a big issue that he went to defeat. The verdict of the electorate is one which does not challenge the record of his Government. He finds himself in the minority in Parliament because a majority of the electors disagreed with him and his colleagues upon a matter of policy.

Under the guidance of the Government of which Sir Wilfrid was the head, Canada has grown in strength and in standing, until to-day our country's unexampled prosperity is a matter of comment the world over. The Government which has gone out of office will be known in Canada's history as the Governemnt that developed the west, promoted the expansion of Canadian trade and commerce, inaugurated the British preference, and called the young men of Canada home. When Sir Wilfrid and his colleagues took office in 1896 they found a Canada from which its young people were departing. Mr. Borden and his colleagues in the new Dominion Government find it a country to which the young people of other lands come gladly.

It was said of Gladstone that he had the power as a speaker of investing even the dry bones of statistics with interest and charm. The statistics which show the difference between the Canada of which Sir Wilfrid Laurier became Prime Minister in July, 1896, and the Canada of which Mr R. L. Borden becomes Prime Minister in October, 1911, are, however, so remarkable as to claim attention of themselves, without any adventitious enhancing of their significance. The aggregate trade of Canada in the fiscal year 1896 was $239,025,360. In the fiscal year 1910, the last for which the completed figures are accessible, it was $693,211,221. The figures for eleven months of fiscal year 1911 show an increase of $76,798,352 over the year preceding. In 1878, the year in which the Government of Sir John Macdonald took office, the aggregate trade of Canada was $172,405,454. Thus in the eighteen years of the Conservative regime, from 1878 to 1896, the aggregate trade of Canada increased about 40 per cent., while in the fifteen years of the Liberal regime it has increased nearly 200 per cent.

Canada's total trade with Great Britain rose from $73,113,879 in 1878 to $95,512,446 in 1896, to $234,879,372 in 1910. Canada's total trade with the United States rose from $70,134,2127 in 1878 to $87,999,818 in 1896, to $321,702,090 in 1910. The assets of the chartered banks amounted to $175,450,274 in 1878; they amounted to $320,937,643 in 1896; they amounted to $1,211,452,351 in 1910. The bank discounts in 1878 were $136,222,470; in 1896 they were $226,960,482; in 1910 they were $870,100,900. In 1878 there were 5,378 post offices in Canada, and 44,000,000 letters were mailed; in 1896 there were 9,103 post offices and 116,000,000 letters were mailed; in 1910 there were 12,887 post offices, and 456,085,000 letters were mailed. In 1878 there were 6,226 miles of steam railway in operation in Canada; in 1896 there were 16,270 miles; in 1910 there were 24,731 miles. The number of tons of freight carried by the railways was 7,883,472 in 1878; it was 24,266,826 in 1896; and it was 74,482,866 in 1910. These are sample showings of how the statistics of Canada's progress and prosperity during the eighteen years of Conservative rule previous to 1896 compare with the statistics of growth and prosperity in the period of Liberal rule since 1896.

Mr. Fielding holds the record of having been not only by far the most successful of Canadian Ministers of Finance, but of having been in charge of the Dominion's finances longer than any other minister has held that position in the Dominion Government or in any other Government in the Empire overseas, and longer than any Chancellor of the Exchequer in Great Britain since the beginning of the last century. When the Liberal Government took office in 1896, the country was in an era of annual deficits running into millions For the fiscal year 1897 Mr. Fielding cut the deficit down to $519,981, and for every succeeding year there has been a surplus. The series has been unbroken, last year's reaching the figure of $22,091,184. The growing annual surpluses made it possible for the Government to undertake great national works and improvements. "The large sum our predecessors expended was extravagance," said Mr. Fielding on one occasion, "because they did not have it to expend; the larger sum we have expended is economy, because we have lived within our means."

The outstanding principle of the Liberal Government's fiscal policy has been, of course, the British preference, which at once arrested the decline of Great Britain's exports to Canada, and resulted in greatly increased trade. Its inauguration was followed by a wonderful increase in the export of Canadian farm products to Great Britain. In introducing the original British preference resolutions in 1897, Mr. Fielding said: "Why should we wait for Britain to take action Britain has dealt generously with us in the past. Britain has given us a larger degree of liberty perhaps than is possessed by any other country on the face of the earth. She has given us liberty to tax her wares, even when she admits our goods free ,and we have taxed them to an enormous degree. Why should we wait for Britain to do more? Someone must make a move in this matter, and we propose that Canada shall lead the way." The preference was subsequently increased, and the Liberal Government, as Sir Wilfrid Laurier declared a short time ago, had the principle of tariff preference to Great Britain nailed to the masthead.

When the Liberal Government took office, Western Canada was stagnant. The trails across the boundary were worn smooth by the passage of departing population. The development of the west was made a foremost work of the new administration, the department of the interior being wholly made over and a policy of immigration created under which this country has been securing annually hundreds of thousands of new and worthy citizens from the old world and the United States. Concurrently with the new, vigorous and successful immigration policy, means were devised for making it easy for settlers to get well started, the homestead laws being simplified, more liberal terms given to settlers to buy school lands, liberal timber permits being granted, assistance given in supplying seed grain, tree-planting started, and other intelligent, businesslike methods of aiding in the development of the country being established.

In transportation matters the National Transcontinental wil be a worthy monument to the Liberal Government ,which also made a practical beginning of the great national undertaking of opening up the Hudson Bay route; among the other construction works inaugurated by the Liberal Government being the deepening of the Welland Canal ,the completion of the St. Lawrence canal system, and the improvement of lake and ocean harbours.

In military and naval matters, the Liberal Government has contributed to Canada's progress in a manner that will be ever memorable. Great advances have been made in the militia. Canada has taken over the military and naval stations of Halifax and Esquimalt, which were formerly maintained by the British taxpayer. Command of the Canadian Militia by a Canadian military council has been constituted for command by an Imperial military officer. The Canadian troops won glory in the South African War, to which the Government adopted the patriotic course of sending contingents. As for the Canadian Navy, it is yet in its infancy. The policy inaugurated by the Liberal Government is that the vessels shall be built of Canadian materials, shall have Canadian officers and crew, and be under the jurisdiction of the Canadian Parliament.

Among the matters of outstanding importance in the fifteen years' record of the Liberal Government stands the series of reforms worked out for the benefit of the grain-growing industry of the west. The loading platform provisions, the provisions in regard to the furnishing of cars, the improvements in the inspection system; in a word, the whole compulsion of the railways and the elevator interests to conform with just and equitable requirements in the interests of the individual grain grower has been worked out, in a chain of amending acts of Parliament, under the Liberal Government. Mention must also be made of the provision of a complete equipment of cold storage transportation, the establishing of a complete system of supervision and inspection of the handling and transit of food products from the point of production in Canada to the markets in Great Britain, the appointment of a live stock commission, the creation of a seeds branch, and the reorganization of the veterinary department.

One of the first reforms introduced by the Liberal Government was the reduction of the rate of postage from three to two cents. Mr. Foster, the Minister of Finance in the Conservative Government, had said in his place in the House in 1896 that such a reduction was out of the question. The Liberal Government also took the lead in bringing about Imperial penny postage; and more recently established a special low preferential rate of postage on British papers, magazines and periodicals, in order to encourage their circulation in this country.

A specially creditable feature in the Liberal Government's record is the manner in which Mr. George P. Graham, as Minister of Railways, was able, by means of a sound, businesslike policy, including the taking over of branch lines as feeders, to put the Intercolonial Railway on a paying basis. Mention must also be made of the new railway act of 1903, by which the railway law was extensively amended and the railway commission created. Another great reform which stands to the credit of the Liberal Government as the creation of the civil service commission, and the placing of appointments to the inside service on the basis of merit, by competitive examination.

No resume, however hurried, of the Liberal Government's record can fail to make mention of the immense advance in the status of Canada in Imperial affairs during the past fifteen years. Notable in this connection to the arrangement made, with the hearty co-operation of the British Government, by which Canada now makes her own commercial treaties.

The Liberal Government thus passes out of office in honour, with a record of work faithfully done for Canada which will ever stand to the credit in the memory of the Canadian people. No wellwisher of Mr. Borden and his colleagues in the new Dominion Government can wish them better than that their record of service may be worthy of comparison with that of the Government which has just passed into history, and that when the time comes for Conservative Government to pass out, its passing will be without dishonour. No Canadian citizen who in the exercise of his franchise supported the Liberal Government has reason to regard the new turn in the affairs of the country in any other light than as giving him inspiration for greater devotion than ever to the principles which are of the essence of Liberalism, in working for the welfare and advancement and honour of Canada, which it is the common duty and privilege of all Canadians to labour for.

Cheerfulness

Is the result of body and mind working smoothly.

The fretfulness and irritability of many coffee drinkers are due to caffeine—the drug in tea and coffee.

To be cheerful and energetic, try leaving off tea and coffee and in their place use well-boiled

POSTUM

It is made of different parts of wheat (and a small portion of New Orleans molasses) skilfully roasted and blended.

When made according to directions on the package and served piping hot with cream and a little sugar, Postum is a palatable beverage—really a food drink.

The change from tea or coffee to Postum is easy, and the better health and increased comfort is something worth while.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"THE RIGHT OF WAY."

"The Right of Way," Eugene Presbrey's dramatization of Sir Gilbert Parker's famous novel of the same name, was capitally presented by a capable company, headed by Mr. Sanford Dodge at the Grand last night. The action of the drama closely follows that of the book, which is well known to all readers of contemporaneous literature and need not be referred to here. Suffice it to say that it is a powerful story of life in Quebec, the scenes being laid in Montreal and at Vendome Mountain, two hundred miles away. Last night's cast demonstrated its ability to portray the drama to the entire satisfaction of the audience. Mr. Dodge in the leading role, a most difficult part, gave a splendid characterization of Charley Steele, at first the drunken cynical lawyer and later the simple man of the back woods, whose memory is a blank. He was given the best of support by a large and excellent cast. Mr. Harry Bernard, who played the part of Joe Portugais, the habitant trapper, sharing honours with the star. Scenically, the production left nothing to be desired.

Clever Studies

The Examiner had an opportunity to-day of seeing some clever studies in oils, the work of a new-comer to Peterborough, in the person of Mr. W. J. Pitts. Mr. Pitts, who has studied at the Central Ontario School of Art, and also at the Art Academy of Cincinnatti, has taken up residence at 548 Aylmer street, and will engage in the teaching of painting in this city. His work, as seen by the Examiner and exemplified in a number of very capable landscape studies, shows great promise, and he will be a welcome addition to Peterborough's population.

DEATHS.

TAYLOR—At the family residence, 176 London street, Peterborough, on Wednesday, November 1st, 1911, Wm. C. Taylor, aged 76 years. Funeral arrangements will be announced to-morrow. Friends will kindly omit flowers.

OBITUARY

MR. WILLIAM C. TAYLOR.

The death occurred at about one o'clock this afternoon of Mr. William C. Taylor, at the family residence, 176 London street. The late Mr. Taylor has been suffering for many months past, from Brights disease, and his death at the ripe age of 76 years, was not unexpected. At the time of going to press the funeral arrangements had not been completed, but interment will probably take place on Friday afternoon, in Little Lake cemetery.

In the death of Mr. Taylor, Peterborough County loses one of its oldest and most highly esteemed residents. Born near Bridgenorth, in the Township of Smith, on May 10th, 1835, he passed the entire portion of his life in Peterborough county and city. The deceased was a son of the late Charles Taylor, of Yorkshire, England, one of the early settlers of the Township of Smith. The late Mr. Taylor carried on farming operations in Smith until the year 1874, when he moved to Peterborough, and was interested in the grain business for some years. In 1885 he purchased Beechwood Farm, in the Township of Douro, and resided thereon until about four years ago, when he retired from active life, and took up his residence at 176 London street, Peterborough. During Mr. Taylor's residence, in Douro, he was, perhaps, the most extensive farmer in the Township, and developed one of the finest farmsteads in the district. Beechwood farm is situated just near the Peterborough Golf Links.

Although the late Mr. Taylor never took any active part in public affairs, he was well versed in municipal and political matters. He was a Liberal in politics, and had been a reader of the Globe since the early days of George Brown. He was a faithful member of St. Paul's Presbyterian church. He had a wide circle of friends and was esteemed by every person who knew him for his kindly and sympathetic disposition and staunch integrity.

In addition to his widow and a son, and daughter, the late Mr. Taylor is survived by several brothers and sisters. They are, Mr. Nathan Taylor, Wescott street, Peterborough, James, of Elston, Sask., Mrs. Jonathan Mann, Water street, and Mrs. J. J. Hartley of Peterborough, and Mrs. George Wallace, of Winnipeg.

PAGE—CRAWFORD.

An interesting event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Crawford, on Wednesday afternoon, at half-past 3 o'clock, when their eldest daughter, Violet Laurie Elizabeth, was united in marriage to Mr. Bertie H. Page of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. A. Ben-Oliel, in the presence of about thirty guests. The bride, who was attired in a travelling costume of navy blue and carried a bouquet of white chrysanthemums, was assisted by her sister, Miss Oral Crawford, who wore a costume of blue panama cloth, and carried a bouquet of pink shrysanthemums. Mr. John Fitzpatrick of Peterborough, acted as groomsman. After the ceremony the assembled guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding dinner, a pleasant hour being then spent. The happy couple drove to Peterborough and took the train for Toronto and points west. The bride was the recipient of a large number of handsome presents, testifying to the esteem in which she is held by her many friends. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful necklace set with pearls, and to the bridesmaid, a bracelet set with amethyists, and to the groomsman a beautiful signet tie pin. Mr. and Mrs. Page will reside in Lakefield and have the best wishes of their numerous friends.

TRUSTEE BOARD MET

The Trustee Board of the Mark St. Methodist church met in the basement of the church last evening. The Rev. Mr. Cragg occupied the chair. The question of a new choir leader was considered, as Mr. Callander, the present leader, who is removing to the south end of the city, is resigning. However, nothing definite was decided upon. The financial situation was found to be very satisfatcory.

Returned From Trip

Three months ago Mr. H. A. McNichol, of Norwood, left for a trip in the West. He has now returned, and yesterday gave an Examiner reporter an account of his travels. He has visited Vancouver, Winnipeg, Calgary, Banff, Victoria, Seattle, Mussula and Butte city (Montana), Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Detroit and Toronto.

"All the Canadian west is certainly booming at a great pace," said Mr. McNichol. "Calgary is progressing at an enormous rate. No man can describe what buildings are being erected there at the present time. There are even more at Vancouver. It is only three or four years ago that North Vancouver was a settlement; now it has a population of upwards of seventeen thousand. There is work for everyone, and good pay, but of course the living is more expensive than in the east."

"I noticed," continued the traveller, "that there were very few grocery stores in Winnipeg, and on asking the reason was told that the rents were so high that grocery men seldom opened business in that city."

Generally speaking, Mr. McNichol was very pleased with the west, and remarked on the activity prevailing there. "All the people," he said, "are either young or middle-aged, and very few old people live there."

While remarking on the progress of the west of Canada, Mr. McNichol said that cities across the border were very quiet.

NO SERIOUS DAMAGE

Chief Thompson reports that Hallowe'en was apparently spent more quietly in Peterborough last night than a year ago, as there were fewer complaints in regard to property damage. The youngsters were out in force with pea-shooters and "tick-tacks" but they respected property and little damage was done. Of course steps were carried off and gates found a lofty perch on telegraph poles but these are looked upon as the common accompaniment of Hallowe'en. The police had the city well covered and the vigilance was no doubt responsible for the absence of any serious damage. A number of boys were captured and brought to the police station but were turned out again with a warning.

AFTER FORTY YEARS

Camden, S.C., Woman Recovers from Stomach Trouble.

No one who is not well nourished can be good-natured. That is why dyspeptics are always irritable.

But stomach trouble can be cured in nearly all cases, even after years of suffering. Mrs. Sarah C. Ammons, Camden, S.C., says "I suffered from nervous dyspepsia for forty years and feared I should never get over it. It kept me in misery all the time. I was terribly run down, could not sleep—thought my health was ruined.

"Last spring I began taking Vinol and it has no equal. I soon began to improve and now I am a well woman again—for the first time in forty years. My appetite is good, I sleep well and have no stomach trouble at all. These are the plain facts."

Take our word for it, when you are weak and run down, cannot eat or sleep, Vinol is what you need for it will build you up and make you strong. We guarantee Vinol to please your money back if it does not.—McDermid & Jury, druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets, Peterborough, Ont.

MUSIC AND DRAMA

"THE RIGHT OF WAY."

"The Right of Way," Eugene Presbrey's dramatization of Sir Gilbert Parker's famous novel of the same name, was capitally presented by a capable company, headed by Mr. Sanford Dodge at the Grand last night. The action of the drama closely follows that of the book, which is well known to all readers of contemporaneous literature and need not be referred to here. Suffice it to say that it is a powerful story of life in Quebec, the scenes being laid in Montreal and at Vendome Mountain, two hundred miles away. Last night's cast demonstrated its ability to portray the drama to the entire satisfaction of the audience. Mr. Dodge in the leading role, a most difficult part, gave a splendid characterization of Charley Steele, at first the drunken cynical lawyer and later the simple man of the back woods, whose memory is a blank. He was given the best of support by a large and excellent cast. Mr. Harry Bernard, who played the part of Joe Portugais, the habitant trapper, sharing honours with the star. Scenically, the production left nothing to be desired.

Clever Studies

The Examiner had an opportunity today of seeing some clever studies in oils, the work of a new-comer to Peterborough, in the person of Mr W. J. Pitts. Mr. Pitts, who has studied at the Central Ontario School of Art, and also at the Art Academy of Cincinnatti, has taken up residence at 548 Aylmer street, and will engage in the teaching of painting in this city. His work, as seen by the Examiner and exemplified in a number of very capable landscape studies, shows great promise, and he will be a welcome addition to Peterborough's population.

DEATHS.

TAYLOR—At the family residence, 176 London street, Peterborough, on Wednesday, November 1st, 1911, Wm. C. Taylor, aged 78 years. Funeral arrangements will be announced to-morrow. Friends will kindly omit flowers.

OBITUARY

MR. WILLIAM C. TAYLOR.

The death occurred at about one o'clock this afternoon of Mr. William C. Taylor, at the family residence, 176 London street. The late Mr. Taylor has been suffering for many months past, from Brights disease, and his death at the ripe age of 76 years, was not unexpected. At the time of going to press the funeral arrangements had not been completed, but interment will probably take place on Friday afternoon, in Little Lake cemetery.

In the death of Mr. Taylor, Peterborough County loses one of its oldest and most highly esteemed residents. Born near Bridgenorth, in the Township of Smith, on May 16th, 1835, he passed the entire portion of his life in Peterborough county and city. The deceased was a son of the late Charles Taylor, of Yorkshire, England, one of the early settlers of the Township of Smith. The late Mr. Taylor carried on farming operations in Smith until the year 1874, when he moved to Peterborough, and was interested in the grain business for some years. In 1885 he purchased Beechwood Farm, in the Township of Douro, and resided thereon until about four years ago, when he retired from active life, and took up his residence at 176 London street, Peterborough. During Mr. Taylor's residence, in Douro, he was, perhaps, the most extensive farmer in the Township, and developed one of the finest farmsteads in the district. Beechwood farm is situated just near the Peterborough Golf Links.

Although the late Mr. Taylor never took any active part in public affairs, he was well versed in municipal and political matters. He was a Liberal in politics, and had been a reader of the Globe since the early days of George Brown. He was a faithful member of St. Paul's Presbyterian church. He had a wide circle of friends and was esteemed by every person who knew him for his kindly and sympathetic disposition and staunch integrity.

In addition to his widow and a son, and daughter, the late Mr. Taylor is survived by several brothers and sisters. They are, Mr. Nathan Taylor, Wescott street, Peterborough, James, of Elston, Sask., Mrs. Jonathan Munn, Water street, and Mrs. J. J. Hartley of Peterborough, and Mrs. George Wallace, of Winnipeg.

PAGE—CRAWFORD.

An interesting event took place at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Richard Crawford, on Wednesday afternoon, at half-past 5 o'clock, when their eldest daughter, Violet Laurie Elizabeth, was united in marriage to Mr. Bertie H. Page of Toronto. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. H. A. Ben-Oliel, in the presence of about thirty guests. The bride, who was attired in a travelling costume of navy blue and carried a bouquet of white chrysanthemums, was assisted by her sister, Miss Oral Crawford, who wore a costume of blue panama cloth, and carried a bouquet of pink chrysanthemums. Mr. John Fitzpatrick of Peterborough, acted as groomsman. After the ceremony the assembled guests sat down to a sumptuous wedding dinner, a pleasant hour being then spent. The happy couple drove to Peterborough and took the train for Toronto and points west. The bride was the recipient of a large number of handsome presents, testifying to the esteem in which she is held by her many friends. The groom's gift to the bride was a beautiful necklace set with pearls, and to the bridesmaid, a bracelet set with amethyists, and to the groomsman a beautiful signet tie pin. Mr. and Mrs. Page will reside in Lakefield and have the best wishes of their numerous friends.

TRUSTEE BOARD MET

The Trustee Board of the Mark St. Methodist church met in the basement of the church last evening. The Rev. Mr. Cragg occupied the chair. The question of a new choir leader was considered, as Mr. Callander, the present leader, who is removing to the south end of the city, is resigning. However, nothing definite was decided upon. The financial situation was found to be very satisfactory.

Returned From Trip

Three months ago Mr. H. A. McNichol, of Norwood, left for a trip in the West. He has now returned, and yesterday gave an Examiner reporter an account of his travels. He has visited Vancouver, Winnipeg, Calgary, Banff, Victoria, Seattle, Missula and Butte city (Montana), Minneapolis, St. Paul, Chicago, Detroit and Toronto.

"All the Canadian west is certainly booming at a great pace," said Mr. McNichol. "Calgary is progressing at an enormous rate. No man can describe what buildings are being erected there at the present time. There are even more at Vancouver. It is only three or four years ago that North Vancouver was a settlement; now it has a population of upwards of seventeen thousand. There is work for everyone, and good pay, but of course the living is more expensive than in the east."

"I noticed," continued the traveller, "that there were very few grocery stores in Winnipeg, and on asking the reason was told that the rents were so high that grocery men seldom opened business in that city."

Generally speaking, Mr. McNichol was very pleased with the west, and remarked on the activity prevailing there. "All the people," he said, "are either young or middle-aged, and very few old people live there."

While remarking on the progress of the west of Canada, Mr. McNichol said that cities across the border were very quiet.

NO SERIOUS DAMAGE

Chief Thompson reports that Hallowe'en was apparently spent more quietly in Peterborough last night than a year ago, as there were fewer complaints in regard to property damage. The youngsters were out in force with pea-shooters and "tick-tacks" but they respected property and little damage was done. Of course steps were carried off and gates found a lofty perch on telegraph poles but these are looked upon as the common accompaniment of Hallowe'en. The police had the city well covered and the vigilance was no doubt responsible for the absence of any serious damage. A number of boys were captured and brought to the police station but were turned out again with a warning.

AFTER FORTY YEARS

Camden, S.C., Woman Recovers from Stomach Trouble.

But stomach trouble can be cured in nearly all cases, even after years of suffering. Mrs. Sarah C. Ammons, Camden, S.C., says "I suffered from nervous dyspepsia for forty years and feared I should never get over it. It kept me in misery all the time. I was terribly run down, could not sleep—thought my health was ruined.

"Last spring I began taking Vinol and it has no equal. I soon began to improve and now I am a well woman again for the first time in forty years. My appetite is good, I sleep well and have no stomach trouble at all. These are the plain facts."

Take our word for it, when you are weak and run down, cannot eat, or sleep, Vinol is what you need for it will build you up and make you strong. We guarantee Vinol to please—your money back if it does not.—McDermid & Jury, druggists, corner George and Charlotte streets; also Payne's drug store, corner George and Simcoe streets, Peterborough, Ont.

EVERY-DAY LIFE IN CURIOUS TRIPOLI

(By David T. Rose in London Daily News)

For a luxurious holiday Tripoli is emphatically not to be recommended. Holidaymakers are not expected, and certainly not catered for, in either of the two so-called hotels, hidden away in the quiet retirement of back streets.

Nor is the landing inviting. From the anchorage inside the bay nearly a mile of shallows intervene. Passengers are landed by boats at the custom house, which is so arranged that unutterable confusion prevails; while a mob of excited boatmen make frantic efforts to secure their "fare" a foothold on the rickety platform forming the threshold to this much-coveted town.

The Pasha's Mosque not only marks the centre of industrial and business activity but in itself is a picture of rare beauty. A tall, turreted minaret, purest white against the sky, shimmers in the soft southern atmosphere—shadows, luminous with reflected light, turn to ivory and cobalt; while a long colonnade, under which picturesque groups weave and mould the white fez caps, gives to the building a peculiar distinction.

Covered bazaars and long narrow streets lead from the mosque towards the ramparts. Here, in unpretentious workshops—in many cases merely deep recesses in the walls—silversmiths, weavers, potters, tanners, etc., work away in somewhat squalid conditions. Bakehouses are a feature of certain streets, the process of breadmaking going on in unsavoury proximity to the street. The baker stands a few feet below the street level, in a small recess, and as the loaves are baked, they are dumped on slices of deal or on the pavement itself outside.

The town is terminated to the north-west by a string of antiquated forts and custom house, behind the latter of which lies the Jewish and Italian quarter. At the extreme east is the governor's castle, a long, rambling structure, including the Turkish administration offices and prison. Along the sea front, about a mile in length, mosques, consulates, post office and most of the principal buildings are situated, also numerous taverns and cafés, much frequented by Greek sponge fishers, Turks, Armenians, and Levantines of every kind.

Enclosing the southern or landward side are high ramparts, once of great importance for defensive purposes, but now broken by large breaches towards the east. Here are held the principal Arab markets, sukel-holes, or bread market, and a few hundred yards away the more important weekly market on the sea sands beyond the castle.

All night long innumerable camels, caravans and heavily-laden donkeys have been arriving. Silently poles and screens of matting have been erected, and at daybreak a nomadic city of booths and tents, densely thronged by children of the desert, is revealed in the pale morning mist.

Produce of every description, vegetables and fruit are laid out on the sands or on pieces of canvas. Long alleys, each devoted to its own particular commodity, gives a semblance of ordered method to the market town.

Through the day, under the brilliant sunshine, Eastern life and colour combine in riotous confusion. Bedouins and Arabs in graceful haik, or burnois, bargain and batter with the more gorgeous Jew and Turkish shopkeepers of the town.

To this rendezvous converge the Sahara and Soudan caravan routes. For miles eastward of the town, long belts of date palms three to four miles in width, separate the Sahara from the sea—through these lovely groves are beaten tracks of a wandering people. To this district, however, the casual visitor pays his homage by daylight. Beyond the town for romance—inside for safety.

Little has been said about the narrow streets which lie inside the ramparts. A maze of winding alleys, they pick their crazy ways through miles of picturesque dilapidation. High up against the broken sky-line the houses all but meet. At times they span the street itself, a cloistered avenue, through which sandalled natives and soft-footed camels thread their way. Shadow and sunlight alternate in bewildering effect, but details there are, alas, which even a prejudiced enthusiast may not approve.

AN ASSIGNMENT

Mr. W. Buller, Interim Liquidator of Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Company

The Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Navigation Company, which has been operating the steamers "Otonabee," "Geneva," "Lintonia," and other boats along the Trent Canal system, during the past season, has made an assignment, with Mr. W. Buller acting as interim liquidator. It is understood that the company will be thoroughly reorganized and placed on a sound basis.

You Read a little, Write a little, Visit and Sew, but You get 1000 Meals a Year

A little journey to the home of the average woman shows clearly that the most important part of her daily routine is the "bread-and-meat" problem in the kitchen.

Three meals a day—more than a thousand times a year—the housewife plans and prepares the family diet. Success depends largely on health, health depends on food and its cooking, and the success of that cooking is assured by the use of a Gurney-Oxford range.

This range is built with all that highest skill and best materials can put into it—all the lasting qualities—all the points that tend toward comfort and convenience of operation.

The Oxford economizer is a big factor in the working out of the fuel and time-saving principle. This Economizer is a small lever used only on Gurney-Oxford stoves. A turn of the Economizer and your fire is held at even temperature for hours without attention and with 20% saving in coal. It will bake though the pipe be cool.

The divided flue-strip gives an honest oven-baking that never disappoints, because the heat waves travel equally all over it. Ask the dealer to demonstrate the principle by which this oven-arrangement is assurance of baking success.

Gurney-Oxford STOVES AND RANGES

It is built on honour by a firm of sixty years' standing, whose splendid reputation depends on a continuation of the integrity and square dealing that has made it famous.

In short, the housewife, to whose care is intrusted the imperative "three-times-a-day" demand for meals, will find every possible aid to perfect results conveniently obtained in Gurney-Oxford Stoves and Ranges.

Ask to see, also, the clever working of the Reversible Grate. It can be cleaned with a half-turn to the right, and there is no trouble with clinkers, owing to the force of the strong interlocking teeth. The Gurney-Oxford special soft-coal grate is equally good for bituminous coal.

Come and let us demonstrate these splendid features.

STORY OF THE POST OFFICE IT BEGAN IN YEAR 1637

Few stories can unfold a more interesting narrative than that of the rise and progress of the post office. Its history is almost an epitome of modern civilization, and from a small beginning it has developed into a huge department of state, which touches almost every side of our daily life. In a book just published, some of its most noteworthy stages are traced. Great as have been the developments of the post office in the past, new ones are still being carried out with uninterrupted frequency, and not a year passes but the ways of the post office have been made cheaper and easier for all manner of written communications between man and man.

The Flying Coaches

Prior to 1637 there was no such thing as a regular postal service in Britain. Letters were dispatched by private servants or contractors, and depended on a hundred and one accidents for their safe delivery. Then the matter was placed under the control of the King's Postmaster-General, and for the next hundred years or so letters were carried by runners and postboys, whose chief characteristics were a lack of public responsibility and a disposition to get drunk on every possible opportunity. With the establishment of John Palmer's "flying coaches" in 1784, the post office may be said to have embarked on its most picturesque era. The guard, with its scarlet coat and coaching horn, the galloping horses and jingling harness, the inns and turnpikes, and the rlasked highwaymen, who lurked on heath and moor, almost created a whole school of romantic fiction in themselves, and remain as immortal as the writers who exalted them into idealistic pictures. But George Stephenson and his prosaic railway trains banished these from the roads for ever and at the same time initiated that era of swiftness and absolute security which today is the chief glory of the post office service.

Modern Developments

The story of the penny post and the heroic efforts by which Rowland Hill induced the Government to establish it, is too well known to require recapitulation. Within the last few years we have had a great development of the same principle, of which the extension of the penny postage to America has been the chief outcome, and it is more than probable that before another decade has passed we may be able to dispatch a letter to Timbuctoo for the same fee that takes it from Fleet Street to Chancery Lane. The German system by which a postcard can be sent to any address in the same town at the cost of something less than a farthing, is one that might be adopted in London with advantage, and a cheaper rate for books and magazines is also a reform that every literary man would welcome.

But the delivery of letters and packages is only a very small part of the work undertaken by the British post office of to-day. It will act as your banker, and will enable you to invest in Government securities without the medium of a stockbroker. It issues money orders and postal orders, which make it possible for the public to engage in many transactions where it would be difficult to transmit cash or cheques. By doing so it has opened up branches of retail trade that depend for their very existence on the dispatch and receipt of such remittances.

The telegraph and the telephone are the two factors that have done most to increase the speed of modern life, and they have both been incorporated into the work of the "post office." It was not till as late as the year 1870 that the electric telegraph companies were taken over by the state, and only the other day saw the nationalization of the telephones, which have now become an indispensable feature both of business and private life.

Difficulties Overcome

The smoothness and security which is rightly associated with the modern post office in most civilized countries has only been reached by a wholehearted devotion to public service on the part of all the officials. Many stories are told in all lands regarding the heroism which has been displayed by the letter-carrier and the ingenuity which he has shown in overcoming all obstacles. During the siege of Paris a balloon service, which reminds us of the aerial post of to-day, was established, and carrier pigeons were employed to fly out with messages from the beleaguered city. The besiegers on their side were just as active, and had a squadron of hawks trained to catch the pigeons, and guns specially constructed to bring down the highest balloons. Every one of us has had experience of the tireless energy with which the most obscure addresses have been ferreted out by the postal authorities, and the number of lost or wrongly-delivered letters which we can point to is so small as almost to be negligible.

These are but a few features of the great organization, which Mr. Bennett attempts to describe. His book is not intended in any way to be an exhaustive history, and is somewhat marred by a multiplicity of silly anecdotes, but it helps one to understand a life better the manifold activities of an organization which is perhaps the most prosperous and efficient of all our state departments.—London Daily News.

NO CAUSE TO DOUBT

A Statement of Facts Backed by a Strong Guarantee.

We guarantee immediate and positive relief to all sufferers from constipation. In every case where our remedy fails to do this we will return the money paid us for it. That's a frank statement of facts, and we want you to substantiate them at our risk.

Rexall Orderlies are eaten just like candy, are particularly prompt and agreeable in action, may be taken at any time, day or night; do not cause diarrhoea, nausea, griping, excessive looseness, or other undesirable effects. They have a very mild, but positive action upon the organs with which they come in contact, apparently acting as a regulative tonic upon the relaxed muscular coat of the bowel, thus overcoming weakness, and aiding to restore the bowels to more vigorous and healthy activity.

Rexall Orderlies are unsurpassable and ideal for the use of children, old folks and delicate persons. We cannot too highly recommend them to all sufferers from any form of constipation and its attendant evils. That's why we back our faith in them with our promise of money back if they do not give entire satisfaction. Three sizes. 12 tablets 10 cents, 36 tablets 25 cents and 60 tablets 50 cents. OPEN NEW OFFICES

The Horn-Baker-Smith Advertising Company, Limited, has opened new offices at 23 Bank of Toronto Chambers, Main street, Winnipeg.

The business will be under the management of Mr. Charles O. Smith, who during the past four years has developed and had charge of some of the most important advertising campaigns in Western Canada. Mr. Smith's entire business experience has been along advertising lines, both in Western and Eastern Canada, and he is qualified to give expert assistance in planning and placing advertising that will bring business.

Mr. E. S. Horn has been in advertising agency work for twelve years, and is a former vice-president of the National Association of Advertising Clubs, as well as president of the Kansas City Advertising Club. Mr. Horn's experience in connection with many prominent advertising successes in the United States and Canada will prove valuable to advertisers in Winnipeg and the West.

The new company will devote its entire attention to advertising in all its phases. Monthly payments to papers will be made and advantage taken of all cash discounts.

Cobourg Has Lots Of Hockey Material Ready

G. Holmbeck, of Cobourg, who was in Peterborough for the Examiner road races, informed the Examiner that the Lakeshore town is going to have two great hockey teams this winter. Both intermendiates and juniors will be very strong. There are no less than twenty-one candidates in the field already for places on the junior line-up, in spite of the fact that Freeman, the crack little forward, will be drafted by the intermediates. The annual meeting was held last week, and everyone in Cobourg is enthusiastic over the prospects.

It is not likely that the annual meeting of the Peterborough Hockey Club will be called until the return to the city of President Sam Ray, who is in the Parry Sound district on a hunting trip.

PROGRESSIVE MILITANT LEADER.

because I felt it was the call of duty, and because I found it more difficult to say 'No.' I have only said 'Yes,' because I feel that the Liberal party can render this province great service in days to come. And, knowing the energy and enthusiasm and the fighting spirit of the Liberal party of this province I feel it a privilege to be associated with you in the fight which I know you are going to make now and in the future.

FIGHT OF PROGRESSIVE FORCES

"The fight upon which we are entering is not my fight—in one sense it is not your fight. It is the fight of the progressive forces of this province with which we are associated. And in entering upon it I feel in accepting the call you have made that you are going into it just as heartily and as enthusiastically as you expect me to do; that you will not accept any sacrifice from me you are not prepared to make yourselves. And I am sure that if the Liberal party of this province enters on the contest in that spirit, each man in his place doing his duty, that the party will not only give a good account of itself but that give a good account of itself, but that the province will have cause for satisfaction in the good fight which the Liberal party will put up.

"I could not undertake this responsibility if I did not feel that I have your confidence and your most enthusiastic support. We will go into this fight together, eac hdoing his best. We will all work for the principles which we all hold in common, and I am sure we will maintain the very best traditions of the Liberal party in the fight.

WORK IN NORTHERN ONTARIO

"I learned to-day that among the many matters that were up for consideration you were giving a good deal of thought to the questions affecting New Ontario, and it just occurred to me that it was through the efforts of the Liberal party that New Ontario was won over, or saved, to Ontario. Its resources were made known to Ontario and to the world by the Liberal party, and it would be very fitting that its splendid and successful development should be carried out under the auspices of the party which had made its resources known. (Applause.)

"There are other questions touching the life of the people, measures of progress and social reform, that need to be taken up. I believe we all agree in this: that the Government of this province in its legislation and administration comes more closely in touch with the real life of the Province than does the Government of the Dominion, and in its effect upon the life of the Province exercises wider influence than does the Government at Ottawa.

In the Interests of the People.

"I believe the Liberal party will stand for wise measures of legislation in the interests of the great masses of the people, tending to develop the best type of citizen, and to administer the affairs of the Province upon such progressive lines as will set the pace for this great Dominion.

"We all appreciate the ability and splendid services Hon. A. G. MacKay has rendered to the party and the country, and regret that circumstances were such that he felt compelled to resign the leadership.

"I thank you again more than I can tell you for your kindness for your confidence. To the measure of the ability I possess I will throw myself into this fight, and let the result be what it may, with your co-operation, we will give a good account of ourselves." (Loud cheering.)

The President said the enthusiastic reception that had been accorded to Mr. Rowell was only symbolic of that he would receive through the whole Province. "We have got a leader," he said, "who will in a very short time bring the Liberal party back to power. The day is hastening when he will be Prime Minister of this Province."

Will Confer on Platform.

Mr. F. F. Pardee, M.P., announced that the Resolutions committee would without loss of time confer with the new leader on the subject of the platform for the election. The committee would meet accordingly in the morning at 10 o'clock at the Reform offices, Toronto street.

The sub-committee of the Parliamentary committee that waited on Mr. Rowell and asked him to accept the leadership of the Liberal party in Ontario consisted of the following: Messrs. C. M. Bowman, North Bruce; William Proudfoot, Centre Huron; D. D. McDougal, Ottawa East; J. C. Elliott, West Middlesex; A. E. Bradwin, Parry Sound, and James McEwing, West Wellington.

Mr. Rowell is engaged at present in the trial of very important and heavy patent cases, which will occupy his time for some days, so that he will not be able to take any part in the campaign at least before the end of next week.

The Liberalism of Faith.

Hon. Geo. P. Graham described it as the strongest and most vigorous Opposition conference since Confederation. It was composed of men "who had been licked, well licked, and didn't know when they were licked." It was the Liberalism of faith, undismayed, confident and militant; undaunted by present disaster, assured of future achievement. It was the Liberalism which, as Col. A. T. Thompson happily put it amid an ovation of cheering, no longer was led by the Canadian Premier, but still was headed by the premier Canadian.

The gathering was the largest and most representative in the history of the General Reform Association of Ontario. Every part of the Province, from the far unorganized districts of the north and west, from the St. Lawrence counties on the extreme east, from the southwestern peninsula, sent its quota of stalwarts. It was significant that the majority of delegates were young men, pressing for radical and progressive policies, and filled with the enthusiasm which is born of conviction rather than expediency. "Liberalism," said the President-elect, Hon. W. L. Mackenzie King, "grows stronger under adversity."

Fellow Workmen Tell Of Accident

"Did you give any instructions to Mr. Thompson?" inquired the defence."

"No," answered the witness.

"It says in the evidence that Darke and Carpenter were engaged in putting on a clamp before ten o'clock. Did you give them any instruction, or did they get any to do so?"

"Not that I am aware of."

"Assuming for purpose of argument, that it was necessary to do the work, was there room for a man to do it on the belt?"

"There was room for one man between the belts. There was 12 or 15 inches, but they did it voluntary, and if I had been doing the job I would not have sat on the belt at all."

"You have no personal knowledge how the accident took place?"

"No."

"Were you there when the machine was fastened to the floor?"

"Yes; I personally supervised the work, and it was securely done."

"Can you say if it was a practical thing to put any guard on inside of the belt?"

"No, it is not."

"Would a guard be of any use, when machine is being erected?"

"No use whatever. No person has any right there, but the test employees."

Witness was cross-examined by Mr. O'Connell.

"Have you been speaking with Mr. Patterson to-day?"

"Yes."

"Anything about this case or evidence?"

"No."

With Mr. Patterson or any person else?"

"No."

"Did you see Darke working at the machine on the night of the accident at a quarter to ten?"

"No."

"Were the other men working at that machine at the time?"

"Not with my instructions, but it is possible they may have been."

"If there was a belt loose would it be their duty to fix it?"

"Yes."

"Why?"

"If it were loose, they would do it to make the machine more secure."

"Was there a clamp at the corner of the block?"

"Yes; under my instructions."

"Were there any more put trere after the accident?"

Defence objected.

"Evidence shows that there was one put there after. When did you find it out?"

"When I saw the photograph."

"There was a conversation between Darke and Cartner that night. Did you see them talking?"

"No. Darke spoke to me and asked if Cartner could stay with him, in case the belt should come off."

"What instruction did you give?"

"For Cartner to stay in case that anything went wrong."

"What was the width of that belt?"

"Twenty-four inches."

"How far from the ground?"

"Nine or ten inches."

"Was it possible to work at the bolt without coming in contact with the belt?"

"Yes."

Judge—"Since the belting is put on after the machines are securely fastened, does the putting on of the belt suggest anything? Is it a signal that the machine is ready?"

"No."

"Is it a regular order to secure the machines before putting on the belt?"

"Yes."

Then, what does that indicate?"

"He will know the machine is ready of course, when he sees the belts all tight. He would know that the machine was ready to test, and that there was nothing more to be done at the fitting."

"How could Darke work a wrench on the bolt under the lower belt, when the bolt was higher than the belt?"

The nut was below the belt."

The next witness called was John C. Wilson.

He was examined first by the lawyer for the defence.

"What is the first instruction that you received re the generator, and from whom?"

"Mr. Jeffrey told me that the generator was ready to be tested on the evening of the 13th."

"You were not there all evening?"

"No, but I had communication with the men by telephone."

"I gave them advice how to proceed They called me that night for information."

The witness was then cross-examined by Mr. O'Connell.

"Anything they wanted to know they could call you up and get instructions?"

"Yes."

"The next witness was then called.

This was as far as the case had progressed at the time of going to press and there were several witnesses still to be heard.

Hallowe'en Was Quietly Celebrated

The passing of All Hallow's eve was quiet and uneventful. But for the appearance on the street of small bands of juveniles armed with pea shooters, and their faces covered with grotesque masks, Hallowe'en would have passed into oblivion without any ceremony whatever.

An Examiner man, for the purpose of ascertaining the exact condition of affairs as regards the celebrations attendant upon the traditional occasion, set out on a tour of investigation last night, to different parts of the city. But his investigations disclosed nothing out of the ordinary. The first sign of trouble encountered was at the corner of Bethune and King streets. Here about twenty or thirty boys were congregated, whose ages would range from ten to probably sixteen years. In the centre of the ring which they formed, were two young lads, engaged in deadly combat. The fight waxed warm and merry, until the younger and more active of the two drove in a left hand jab amidships. This ended the fray, and the stealthy step of P .C. Brown in the distance broke the party of fight fans up, probably the scintillating rays of the officer's buttons were too much for their youthful nerves.

From Dalhousie to Chamberlain street small bands of boys and girls, some of the latter masquerading in male attire, were encountered, but their depredations did not extend beyond the ringing of a few doorbells and bombarding passing pedestrians with the contents of their pea shooters. The presence of a special constable in this neighbourhood, had a deterrent effect upon the spirits of the enthusiastic celebrants.

The same condition of affairs predominated in East City, and the North End. Several complaints have been reported where fences were destroyed, signs torn down, and gates removed. The general behaviour of the youthful element of the town on such an auspicious occasion was on the whole good.

One of the best jokes of last evening played by the boys of the Centre Ward was the displaying of a large sign, "Wife Wanted" on the Chinese laundry, opposite Cox's butcher shop, George street. If it was looked into, however, possibly it might not be a joke, but the real wishes of the Chinamen themselves.

POST CARD COLUMN

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I read in last evening's Examiner a letter from an East City parent, regarding the proposed site of the new Public School. I heartily concur with what this writer has stated in his letter. I think, however, that from a point of beauty the site is an excellent one, and no one can deny the fact that a school at the top of Armour's hill would command more than passing attention, but I do not think this should be considered solely, but the safety and convenience of the children should be looked after. What about the little tots who go to Kindergarten? Would they be able to climb the hills in winter? And, in the summer, would the mothers not be very anxious, owing to the close proximity of the Canal?

The old site appeals to me, but I am not advocating it against any other suitable site. I do think the matter of the site on Armour's hill should be carefully gone into, before the Board makes its decision.

Yours truly,
East City.

To the Editor of the Examiner:

Dear Sir,—I read Mr. Hall's speech in your issue of last evening with a great deal of pleasure. On the educational question Mr. Hall's views are sound, and, as a working man, I am in hearty accord with his attitude on questions affecting the working man.

The working man should have Mr. Hall elected, and have a man in Parliament with ability to stand up for their rights, and force Whitney and his party to give some attention to what he has seriously neglected — that is, legislation to save ourselves and families from—in case of accident—dependence upon charitable institutions.—Yours truly,
Working Man.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I would like to say a few words about the road race on Monday. I was up to Lakefield, myself, and the betting was 15 to 5 on Smoke, but the lookers-on could not see there way clear, betting against Smoke. All the runners lined up at Lakefield, and, after their picture was taken, they were off like a shot, Willis leading Montgomery, who was close to their heels, looked to be a dangerous man. Willis put up a good race, but after five miles he was beat. I sized up the runners, and they were nearly all experienced men. The roads were kept clear all the way and every man had a chance. The police did their part fine, and also deserve credit.

Thanking you for this space in your beautiful paper, I am,
Yours truly,
A Sport.

To the Editor of The Examiner.

Dear Sir,—I see in the columns of your paper a little note referring to the proper place of our city buildings and the person suggested the corner of George and Charlotte streets. The letter also said that it should not be built too far from the street-car track so that strangers would not have too far to walk to reach the building. Now, on this score I would agree with him, and also would advise being sure to get somewhere in the vicinity of the present track, for I don't think the road will ever extend any more, especially to the north end. It has been surveyed two or three times to my knowing, but they are no worse than our City Fathers. They, too, will promise to do lots of things, but it is only a bag of wind. I have lived for a number of years; in fact I was raised at the corner of Edinburgh and Bethune streets, and now live on Edinburgh street, and not within a stone throw from where I now live, or from the place where I was raised, has there been over ten dollars spent in over sixty years to the benefit of the property in that location. It is no wonder that the city spreads south and west. We pay our way just as they do and you must understand there is just as much room and just as good ground in the north end as there is in the south or any other part of our city. It seems we have to give the money and the people in the south and west get the benefit of it. Now, I, for one, would be dealt with fairly. Shut your eyes to the low end and look this way, and spend a dollar or two this way. There are lots of men who could tell you and will, if necessary.

Yours, etc.,
Mark H. Spencely.

SHEPPARD DISCHARGED

Special to The Examiner:

NEW YORK CITY, NOV. 1.—Mel. Sheppard, the famous runner, who under the colours of the Twenty-Second Regiment, New York militia, has won many championships in the United States and Canada, has been dishonourably discharged from his regiment for not attending drills, and will probably lose his amateur sports standing.

T. A. S. NOTES

A very enthusiastic meeting was held in the T. A. S. roms last evening for the purpose of reorganizing the gymnasium. There was a large attendance, numbering some 150 persons, many of whom became members after a display by Mr. Thompson of the Y.M.C.A., assisted by a class. The athletic programme was as follows:

Gymnasium marching.
Free hand exercises.
Pyramid building without apparatus.
Exhibition of mat work.
Class work exercises on parallel bars.
Combination tumbling.
Basketball match.

BLACKLISTED

Two local poung men were put on the black list at this morning's session of the police court. A well known figure in the court was "pinkled" again, and contributed $2.00 to the city treasury. Another man named Ernest Buck failed to appear.

LEAVING THE CITY

Mr. Edward Webb, who was recently rendered homeless by fire, which destroyed his home, on Albert St., a few weeks ago, left the city to-day for Orillia, where he will reside with his son, in the future.

New Cars

One of the new cars recently purchased by the Peterborough Radial Railway Company has been placed in commission. They are of the pay-as-you-enter type, single truck cars. The new car has ben placed on the Jackson Park route.

THE LAST RETORT

It was Jacks night at the theatre. For two hours he had bravely struggled to get a glimpse of the stage round a very large hat and a mop of hair. "Excuse me, madam," he said, at length, "but would you kindly remove your hat?" "No, I won't!" snapped the woman. "Well," said the sailor, after a few seconds of deep thought, "if you won't remove your hat, miss, would you kindly fold your ears?"

NEW KIND OF ROPE

A new kind of rope is on the market which is said to be 50 per cent. more durable than cotton, stronger and equally flexible. It is made of galvanized steel wire which is covered with several layers of paper, making it serviceable for clotheslines and the like.

Since the foundation of the British and Foreign Bible Society in 1804, 239,000,000 copies of the Scriptures have been issued, of which over 72,000,000 have been in English.

Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Hayden, of Davenport Road, Toronto, left for home to-day after spending Thanksgiving, the guests of Mrs. Myles Henry, 294 Brock street.

"Daddy" Haskill, the conductor of the Grand Trunk flyer, who was taken ill a day or two since, is still in a precarious condition, and it was found necessary to take him to the Nicholls Hospital this morning.

Mr. John Adams, who was born in Peterborough some seventy-one years ago, but now proprietor of Longford (Ont.) Quarry Co., was in the city yesterday. Mr. Adams, it is understood, was here in regard to the supply of stone for the two proposed new local schools.

Mr. and Mrs. R. J. Rice and their two daughters, Miss Gladys and Miss Verona Rice, of Medicine Hat, Alberta, are visiting in the city, the guests of Mr. James Flynn, Dennistoun avenue. Mr. and Mrs. Rice are on their way to New Brunswick, and intend spending the winter in Eastern Canada. Master Glenn Rice, who accompanied them this far, will spend a few days with his uncle, when he will attend St. Michaels' College, Toronto.

"There could be no better medicine than Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. My children were all sick with whooping cough. One of them was in bed, had a high fever and was coughing up blood. Our doctor gave them Chamberlain's Cough Remedy and the first dose eased them, and three bottles cured them," says Mrs. R. A. Donaldson, of Lexington, Miss. For sale by all dealers.

Shiloh's Cure
quickly stops coughs, cures colds, heals the throat and lungs. 25 cents.

Poultry Meeting.—The next regular meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association will be held in their hall, Simcoe street on Thursday evening, and every breeder of Wyandottes of every kind and colour, and Brahmas are asked to be present with their birds. This is a very important meeting, as matters concerning the annual exhibition will be discussed.

Returned True Bill

Yesterday afternoon the Grand Jury returned a true bill against Samuel Newall, and were dismissed to make their usual inspection, as Newall was not in a physical condition to stand trial. He is at present in the hospital, where he has undergone two operations as the result of an abscess. He has been out on bail of $1,000 and two sureties of $1,000 each, and this was renewed. Newall will come up for trial at the spring sittings of the High Court.

In the case of Mrs. Darke vs. the C.G.E., Mrs. Darke and Mr. E. G. Patterson, supt. of the C.G.E., were examined by Mr. D. O'Connell, counsel for the defence, and the Judge then accompanied the Grand Jury to the C.G.E. works, where they examined a machine similar to the one which is alleged to have caused the death of Mr. Darke, for the purpose of getting a better knowledge of the circumstances of the case.

Bad Scare

A young man working in the Opera House yesterday afternoon had a rather bad fright. He was engaged in the repair of some of the steam pipes under the floor of the house, when some one turned the steam on. The young man was badly scared, but was not hurt.

HOCKEY

All members of the All Saints' Hockey Club are reminded of the meeting which is called for to-night at 8 o'clock in the Chapel Hall. Matters of importance in connection with the coming season will be discussed and it is therefore highly desirable that every member who intends to play should be on hand to-night.

A MYSTERY WOMAN

Mrs. Vermilya's Relatives and Friends Die Suddenly

NO EVIDENCE OF CRIME

Chicago, Nov. 2.—Chicago police today pursued their investigation into the deaths of nearly a score of relatives and acquaintances of Mrs. Louise Vermilya, to make certain whether the similar demises constituted only a remarkable series of coincidences as Mrs. Vermilya asserts.

Nine deaths are included in the list with which Mrs. Vermilya's name has been connected, including two husbands, three step-children and three roomers at boarding-houses she kept.

No positive evidence of crime has been uncovered. The following new facts became known yesterday:

That while Mrs. Vermilya has said one of the death roster, Richard T. Smith, a conductor, was only a boarder at her home, a former roomer asserts the two claimed previously to have been married and that they lived together as man and wife.

That while the woman told the police she had assisted an undertaker at Crystal Lake, a former home, in embalming bodies, the undertaker there denies he ever had any such experience. She gave this as a reason why she could discuss the deaths with composure.

That R. N. Bruington, a photographer, of Peoria, and a brother-in-law of the conductor, Smith, had made love to the widow, following Smith's death, to investigate suspicions he then had about the reason for his relative's demise; that the widow had told him part of her matrimonial history, which he desires to give to the coroner.

That Smith died during convulsions and after drinking some substance, but that the doctors gave the cause of death, from descriptions of symptoms given by the widow, as acute gastritis.

That Bissonette was really engaged to be married to Miss Lydia Rivard of Kankakee, this was shown by the filing yesterday of the policeman's will, in which Miss Rivard was named as his fiancee. Mrs. Vermilya was a witness to the will and the police will endeavor to ascertain whether the widow had shown jealousy of the policeman.

A new coincidence developed yesterday following the sudden illness of Mrs. Vermilya herself, when a sister living in the house adjoining, Mrs. Mary Buch Hela, suddenly became ill. Mrs. Vermilya told enquirers yesterday she had never studied medicine nor sought to become a nurse, as had been reported, but that she had some little knowledge of medicines that she had acquired to enable her to aid neighbors and relatives. She insisted she was innocent.

The deaths being looked into follow: Fred. Brinamp, first husband of Mrs. Vermilya, died on a farm near Barrington, Ill., after brief illness; Charles Vermilya, second husband, died after six days' illness of gastritis, at Maplewood, Ill.; Florence Brinamp, four-year-old daughter, died at Barrington; Cora Brinamp, eight-year-old daughter, died at Barrington; Harry G. Vermilya, step-son, 35 years old; Lillian Brinamp, step-daughter, 28 years old; Frank Brinamp, son, died of pneumonia, in Chicago; Richard T. Smith, reported to be the third husband; Arthur Bissonette, policeman, roomer to whom she was engaged, died of gastritis last Thursday.

It was the suddenness of Bissonette's death, coupled with the widow's statement that he was addicted to drink, whereas members of the police force knew him as an abstainer, that decided the authorities on an investigation.

Burned to Death.

Fort William, Nov. 2.—John, the four-year-old son of J. H. Garner, principal of the Ogden street school, was burned to death in the basement of his home here about noon yesterday. His infant sister was also badly burned, but may recover. Little John is thought to have started the fire in some papers during his mother's absence next door. When the mother returned she could not rescue the children because of smoke and flames.

CRUELTY IS DENIED

Italian Government Repudiates Stories Alleging Brutality

BEDOUINS TO BLAME

Rome, Nov. 2.—The reports which have been spread in foreign countries that the Italian troops at Tripoli have practiced extreme cruelty in the war against the Turks and Arabs, killing women and children, the aged and infirm and non-combatants, have caused intense indignation throughout Italy. These reports have already been officially denied, but Premier Gioletti took occasion again last night to emphasize the denial and to make a statement in behalf of the Government and the whole nation.

"If any reproach is admissable," he said, "it can only be on account of excess of humitarianism. We have, perhaps, through exaggerated scruples, spared the lives and property of the enemy, and, in so doing have exposed ourselves to grave risks. This, however, we have been pleased to do, to prove that we are civilized and human. Perhaps what is the bounty of the strong may be judged as weakness.

"Our soldiers, trained in the school of loyalty and accustomed to the uprightness of the Abyssinians, who are open enemies or steadfast friends, did not expect that the Arabs, after they had sworn fealty and received grain and flour and other concessions, would treacherously break their oaths and traitorously turn their arms upon the wounded. Among those heroic dead many of them were barbariously killed by the enemy after they had fallen gravely wounded.

"He who asserts that the Italian soldier would offend woman or child shows ignorance of our country and race. The acts of treachery were due partly to the efforts of Bedouins, about 15,000 of whom migrate at this season of the year from the interior to the coast for the date crop. They formed a kind of conspiracy with the Turks and succeeded in persuading the Arabs, who had already declared themselves our friends, to rebel. But, indeed, the Arabs were ready to take up arms against those they considered weak, at any moment. This is shown by the fact that many of the habitations when set on fire, exploded like gunpowder magazines, so great were the quantities of corn and ammunition hidden in them.

"After the betrayal, when the Arabs, hidden by the trees, walls and houses in the oasis, shot in the back the troops courageously fighting the Turks, our soldiers defended themselves. They attacked the oasis and routed the traitors, killing those caught in the act of firing and taking others prisoners. For safety, we transported the prisoners to Tremiti and Ustica Islands, where on their own admission, outside of the curtailment of their liberty, they are better treated than in their own country."

Aviator Dropped Bombs.

Tripoli, Nov. 2.—The last twenty-four hours have passed quietly. An Italian military aviator, while making a reconnaissance Tuesday night, succeeded in dropping four bombs in the midst of the Turkish encampment.

Marching on Tripoli.

Constantinople, Nov. 2.—The chamber yesterday loudly cheered the reading of a telegram from Suleiman el Baruni, the deputy from Tripoli, commanding the Arab volunteers. The telegram, dated Oct. 28, said: "I reached the coast, accompanied by the volunteers, on Oct. 28, and delivered a formidable assault upon the enemy, who were driven out from their entrenched positions. To-day I am marching on Tripoli. Thanks to Divine assistance, I shall enter the town."

Riots In Egypt.

Alexandria, Egypt, Nov. 2.—Reports of Turkish victories were received here during the night in a tumult that at one time threatened to be serious. The natives turned out in thousands, calling up Allah to confound "the infidels."

Shots were exchanged between Moslems and Europeans. One native was killed and 14 others were wounded before the police had suppressed the rioting. Scores of arrests were made Vaniman's Venture.

Atlantic City, Nov. 2.—Test flights of the big airship Akron, which will attempt a journey across the Atlantic Ocean to Europe some time this month, will not be held until Friday or probably Saturday, according to Melvin Vaniman, the head of the venturesome expedition. If the wind is favorable a flight up and down the beach from the inlet to Longport, a distance of 10 miles, may be attempted Friday.

The start on the transatlantic trip is expected to be made about Nov. 15.

Child Fell to Death.

Toronto, Nov. 2.—Word has been received in the city of the accidental death in Fresno, Cal., of Ray Haley, 3 1-2-year-old child of R. J. Haley of Hambly avenue, real estate broker of this city.

Mr. Haley was traveling with his wife and child, and the boy fell down the elevator shaft at the Fresno Hotel, at which they were staying, being instantly killed.

The body is being brought to Toronto for interment to-day.

Hecigrocity.

"Bridget," said Mrs. Grouchey, "I don't like the looks of that man who called to see you last night."

"Well, well," replied Bridget. "Ain't it funny, ma'am? He said the same about you."

TELL OF STARVATION.

Holy Ghost Missioners Appear In the Police Court.

Portland, Me., Nov. 2.—Rev. F. W. Sandford, leader of the Holy Ghost and Us Society of Shiloh, was held at a preliminary hearing yesterday for trial before the December term of the United States court on a charge of causing the death of Charles Hughey, on board the yacht Coronet, by failing to provide proper and sufficient food when the yacht put to sea.

Robert McKay, one of the witnesses, was first mate of the Kingdom before she was wrecked, and testified that after the disaster, her masts were cut away and the vessel was set on fire. Mr. Sandford, he said, declared the Kingdom was a burnt offering for Africa.

He told at considerable length of the voyage across the Atlantic to Chesapeake Bay and up the coast to Newfoundland. At one time while coming over they fasted 28 days, and only one meal a day was eaten. It consisted of cornmeal mush and bread, served in the morning. At midnight sometimes the men working at the pumps were given a half pint of thin gruel.

Mr. Mackay said that when they were in the northern waters, George Hughey, one of the brothers, who died on board, was told by Sandford, while sick that he had withstood the leader at some time, and God was going to deal severely with him.

Six Vessels Wrecked.

Boston, Nov. 2.—The severe October storm which swept northern waters badly damaged the fishing fleet, according to a letter from Dr. Wilfred T. Grenfell, the missionary physician, written at Red Bay, Labrador. Dr. Grenfell writes that six vessels were totally wrecked, including his own costly auxiliary yacht Andrew McCosh, which was given to the Labrador mission by Princeton University. The other vessels lost were schooners, four of which foundered at Lewis Bay. The crews of all the vessels escaped.

The McCosh was wrecked at L'Anse Amour while on her way to take off Dr. Harrison Webster of Boston, who is stationed at Battle Harbor and who was visiting a patient at Forteau Lighthouse. The yacht's crew narrowly escaped with their lives. Dr. Grenfell was not on board at the time.

Dun's Manager Dead.

Toronto, Nov. 2.—Wilbur C. Matthews, 8 Chestnut Park, general manager for the R. G. Dun Co. in Canada, died at the Toronto General Hospital last night. On Thursday last he was operated on for appendicitis, but pneumonia developed on Tuesday, and he never rallied from its effects.

Deceased, who was in the 60th year of his age, leaves a widow and three daughters.

Mr. Matthews was born at Maple, Ont., and had been 43 years with the firm. He first began work in Toronto and was afterwards manager at Memphis, Tenn. He was again transferred to Toronto, where he has lived for the past 37 years.

Charge False Pretence.

Chatham, Ont., Nov. 2.—A warrant has been issued for the arrest of E. F. Parker, weighmaster for the Michigan Sugar Co., who is charged by Isaac Coffel and John Thackeray, farmers, with securing quantities of beets by false pretences. It is claimed that in weighing the beets Parker cheated the complainants out of 900 pounds in one load and 800 pounds on another by underweighing them. The farmers claim they were not allowed to enter the weighing room, but were told by Parker that according to custom they must remain on the wagons both before and after they had been unloaded.

Starts Campaign To-night.

Ottawa, Nov. 2.—Hon. W. T. White will make his debut as Minister to-night at Lansdowne, in Leeds County, where George Taylor has withdrawn in his favor. His speech is being looked forward to with considerable interest, not only as it is the first appearance of the new Minister, but because it is expected he may make some important announcements. Amongst other things it is understood he will advocate assistance of the provinces by the Dominion Government in opening up new and undeveloped countries, such as New Ontario, by grants for good roads, etc.

Choked to Death In Wagon.

Welland, Nov. 2.—An inquest was held yesterday by Dr. Park, coroner of Marshville, as to the death of John Anderson, residing near Wellandsport, who was found dead in the wagon upon his return from Dunnville Friday last, and the verdict was rendered that Anderson came to his death on Friday, Oct. 28, while lying in a wagon coming from Dunnville from choking on particles of food lodging in the windpipe.

Leeds Liberals.

Brockville, Nov. 2.—The Liberals of Leeds have arraigned to hold a convention at Delta on Saturday, to arrange as to whether Hon. W. T. White of Toronto, will be allowed to sit for the constituency without opposition, as well as to select a candidate for this riding to contest the provincial election.

Hotelkeepers Go to Law.

Chatham, Nov. 2.—A writ is to be issued by the Hotel Sanita Co. against John McCoig, proprietor of the Grand Central Hotel, St. Thomas, charging that he took without permission a fall mirror and a number of valuable pictures from the walls of the Hotel Sanita and carried them off to St. Thomas with him. McCoig was the former proprietor of the Hotel Sanita, and sold to the present company. Recently, it is alleged, while on a visit to the hotel, he quietly appropriated the mirror and pictures.

HOPES FOR PEACE

Startling Report Says That Hankow Has Been Recaptured by the Imperialists

PRIME MINISTER APPOINTED

Pekin, Nov. 2.—The appointment of Yuan Shi Kai yesterday as Premier of China will be followed by a cessation of hostilities on the part of the Imperialists and the opening of negotiations with Gen. Li Yuan Heng, the leader of the revolutionists at Hankow.

An Imperial edict providing for important administrative changes also accepts the resignations of the Ministers, but until Yuan Shi Kai returns to Pekin, Prince Ching will continue to perform the duties of Premier and the present Cabinet will remain in office.

All the Ministers attended a secret session of the National Assembly, which, it is understood, practically agreed to the demands of the disaffected Lanchow troops. A member of the War Board was appointed to confer with the troops and express the assembly's views.

The Assembly also discussed the recent loan for which arrangements had been made with a Belgian and French syndicate. The Ministers explained that the loan was needed for the purpose of carrying on field operations. The Assembly thought there was a good prospect of the termination of hostilities, in which case the loan would not be necessary. It was finally decided to refer the matter by telegraph to Yuan Shi Kai. A member brought up the question of the Shanghai Taotai's failure to pay the instalment of the Boxer indemnity, and a Minister explained that two months' grace, with 4 per cent. interest had been allowed.

The panic among the people of Pekin which ensued after the issuance of the first Imperial edict, has been largely dispelled, and the newspapers are beginning to sum up the results of the 17 days rebellion. The Daily News considers that the appointment of Yuan Shi Kai will change the entire political complexion, restore peace, inspire the people with confidence, command the respect of foreign countries and place the empire on a solid basis.

Reports received here state that Yunnanfu, Anking and several other small places in Anwei and Kuhkian provinces have gone over to the revolutionists. Soldiers in North China are avowedly awaiting the action of Yuan Shi Kai.

The Government troops and the Shansi rebels are encamped not far apart. Apparently they do not intend to fight, for the present at least.

Hankow May Be Captured.

Pekin, Nov. 2.—The War Office has received a report that the Imperialist forces have recaptured Hankow and massacred the population.

Short Lived Republic.

Washington, Nov. 2.—The independent republic, which was set up at Canton, China, a few days ago, has had a short life. Mr. Williams, the American in charge at Pekin, informed the State Department yesterday that the vice-roy and other Imperial officials had absolutely refused to recognize the newly-proclaimed republic, and as the troops in Canton decided to remain loyal to the throne, the new republic perished.

Situation Changing.

Shanghai, Nov. 2.—The edict appointing Yuan Shi Kai Premier, and his active participation in negotiations with the rebels, have considerably cleared the situation. It is evident that the revolutionists throughout the south are awaiting Yuan's word.

While the Government's action has been delayed so long as to possibly seriously affect the negotiations, there is reason to believe that the tone of the edict will appeal to the sentiment of Chinese, and a few days may serve to settle the whole question. A great obstacle, however, is skepticism regarding the sincerity of the administration at Pekin.

Yuan Shi Kai has sent a wireless message to Shanghai, instructing the telegraphs department to send operators and material for repairs to Hankow, indicating that he expects to have control.

Rear Admiral Murdock, commander-in-chief of the American Asiatic squadron, is distributing the smaller vessels to points where Americans are nervous. He expects to establish wireless communication with Hankow to-day.

Local Option In Chatham.

Chatham, Nov. 2.—The petition for a plebiscite on local option which has just been presented to City Clerk W. G. Merritt for examination, contains 1,012 signatures out of 3,140 names on the voters' list for municipal elections. This is 45 per cent. of the total vote, and the temperance people claim to be greatly elated. In Dover Township, a like percentage has been secured, and, though it is not thought likely that local option will carry in Chatham, it is looked on as an assured thing in Dover.

London Lines Merge.

London, Nov. 2.—The Amalgamation of London electric tubes and the London General Omnibus Co., has been practically agreed upon according to The Evening Standard. The omnibus company practically has a monopoly of the London street traffic. The combined capital of the undertakings is roughly estimated at $165,000,000. A new company, the newspaper says, will be formed to carry out the fusion.

Aftermath of a Celebration.

Brantford, Nov. 2.—William Walker, a Port Burwell man, charged three local colored men in the police court here yesterday with relieving him of a wad of $190. The defendants were W. Williams, G. Walker and Douglas, the latter pleading guilty to receiving part of the stolen money. Walker was discharged, and Williams was held for sentence. All were celebrating.

Kyrle Bellew Ill.

Salt Lake City, Nov. 2.—Kyrle Bellew, for many years a leading actor of romantic roles, is critically ill here with pneumonia. He became rapidly worse yesterday and the physicians fear he will not recover.

The remainder of Mr. Bellew's tour through western and Pacific coast cities has been cancelled and his company will return to New York.

Low Water Delays Navigation.

Montreal, Nov. 2.—As a result of the state of low water in the lift lock at the head of the Cardinal Canal, five steamers and eight barges, all of them carrying capacity cargoes of grain, are held up unable to proceed to Montreal.

A serious state of congestion exists and a local transportation official prophesies that there will be half a million bushels of grain unable to get to Montreal if matters do not improve before the end of the present week.

Formed New Church.

Brantford, Nov. 2.—A new Baptist Church is being established here in Eagle Place by Rev. G. H. North and his following, who left Emmanual Church some time ago owing to differences. The pastorate of Emmanuel Church, which has been vacant some months, will be assumed by Rev. C. J. Loney of Bloomfield.

Pope For America?

Rome, Nov. 2.—It is stated that the Pope intends to create Archbishop De Almaraz of Seville, a cardinal. Thus the foreign and Italian cardinals will be almost equal in number. The probability of the election of a foreign Pope is increasing, and the chances are said to favor America.

Seven Killed By Explosion.

Chehalis, Wash., Nov. 2—Fire which destroyed the powder factory of the Imperial Powder Co. here late yesterday, caused seven young women employed in the factory to lose their lives, and an eighth probably will die.

Only two girls escaped, although a dozen men were hurt.

WOMAN ESCAPES OPERATION

Was Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Elwood, Ind.—"Your remedies have cured me and I have only taken six bottles of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. I was sick three months and could not walk. I suffered all the time. The doctors said I could not get well without an operation, for I could hardly stand the pains in my sides, especially my right one, and down my right leg. I began to feel better when I had taken only one bottle of Compound, but kept on as I was afraid to stop too soon."—Mrs. SADIE MULLEN, 2720 N. B. St., Elwood, Ind.

Why will women take chances with an operation or drag out a sickly, half-hearted existence, missing three-fourths of the joy of living, when they can find health in Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound?

For thirty years it has been the standard remedy for female ills, and has cured thousands of women who have been troubled with such ailments as displacements, inflammation, ulceration, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion, and nervous prostration.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Mrs. Pinkham at Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be absolutely confidential, and the advice free.

"The Gun Runner"

By ARTHUR STRINGER

"And on the other side of Paraiso Hill is Guariqui," she said.

It started him to see that she was crying a little, for no accountable reason, as she sat back in her seat at his side.

CHAPTER XXIX.
THE DISPUTED TRAIL.

McKinnon kept slowing the car down, at the repeated warning of Alicia, until they did nothing more than creep along the rails. No lights were to be seen now, and the heavy foliage on either side of the track left them in what was almost an unbroken tunnel of darkness.

So McKinnon leaned out over the side of the slowly moving car, waiting for the telltale chug of the wheels against the metal of the switch-points. They groped their way on for a quarter of a mile at this snail's pace before this telltale jolt told them the wheel-flanges had struck and swerved against the "points."

The switch was set for the left-hand track, so they had to reverse and back away again, coming to a standstill some ten or twelve paces east of the switch-stand target. Then McKinnon went forward to reconnoitre leaving the girl, with the revolver, to guard the car.

He made two discoveries as he crept hurriedly about the track in the darkness. The first was that the switch was locked. The closed pad lock resisted his fiercest tugs and wrenches. He had to compel himself to calmness and demand of his jaded intelligence some more adequate means of attack.

He returned to the car, after a moment of thought, and groped about until he found one of the army rifles lying between the cartridge boxes. Then he felt his way back to the switch, and worked his gun-end carefully in through the lock-chain. It did not take him long, using his carbine-barrel as a crowbar, to pry and twist the lever.

His second discovery was a more alarming one. Standing on the Guariqui track, blocking his way, was a flat-car. This car was piled high with roughly hewn sticks of logwood. To push any such dead weight as this ahead of them to Guariqui was out of the question. He knew it would have to be hauled back and side-tracked on the rails to the left. Whether or not it was beyond the strength of his motor only an actual test could tell.

He found a chain binding the logwood pile together, and after a few minutes of hard work this chain was securely attached to his car axle and hooked over the coupling-pin of the flat-car.

But try as he might, the obstacle was not to be removed. The loaded car refused to stir. One of its wheels pocketed in a half-inch depression caused by a flattened rail-end, held it anchored to the spot. His motor, sulking and back-firing under the unnatural strain, was not strong enough for the task. And he was sorely afraid of injuring his engine and finding himself broken down and helpless on the very outskirts of De Brigard's lines. He saw that there was nothing to do but unload the flat-car where it stood.

Alicia would have helped him at that slow and dreary labour, but he pointed out to her the necessity of standing on guard while he worked. The rough-hewn sticks of logwood seemed heavy beyond belief. Some of them, which he could not lift, he had to work slowly outward and let fall from the side of the car. He also had to make sure that every log and stick fell clear of the track.

His muscles ached, his fingers seemed without joints, his strength was gone. Twice he had to resort to heavy drafts from his brandy flask.

But he worked on, doggedly, sullenly, arguing with himself that he ought to be grateful that he was gaining his end without being discovered, picturing what such labour would be under the fire of a dozen half-breed sharpshooters at short range. Then he tried to console himself with the thought that his gasoline had held out, that another seven-mile dash would see them pounding their way into Guariqui. And once in Guariqui was safety, and rest, and sleep—above all things, sleep. There would first be good, hot coffee, in plenty, and food. And then he would be given a bed somewhere. The thought of that bed seemed the most consoling of all. It suggested a Nirodha of utter indifference after a night of utter anguish; it grew to symbolize an utter Nirvana of rest for his over-wearied body.

But a new fear suddenly stabbed through him as he stooped and laboured so doggedly over his lumbering sticks of logwood. Would daylight come before they were on their way again? Were they to be caught and trapped, after all, by the rising sun?

His watch had run down; in the excitement of the last twenty hours, he had neglected to wind it. All sense of time had long since passed from him.

He turned and looked up at the sky. It seemed to him that the great velvet dome studded with silver star-points was less opaque, was more luminous, than it had been. The eastern horizon was shut off from him by a wall of heavy foliage; he could see no telltale line of breaking light. But it seemed to him that the darkness about him was waning, merging into a gray and ghostlike translucence. Somewhere out of the distance, as he looked, came the sound of a rooster crowing.

There was something incongruous in the trivial everydayness of that casual cock-crow. Yet this ludicrously commonplace sound sent a tingle of terror through him. It caused him to turn back to his ragged and ponderous slabs of logwood, lifting and tearing at them until blood dripped from his bruised finger ends and his head swam as with a vertigo.

He leaped back, suddenly, with a galvanic start, as though the log at which he clutched had been a power, the figure of Alicia, ghostlike in the circuit. For close beside him stood uncertain grayness about him.

"The light's coming," she warned him. "I must help you."

"No—no," he cried, knowing such work was beyond her strength, "you must go back to the car! For God's sake, guard the car!"

"But you can't do it—you can't keep this up!" she cried, in pitying protest.

"Go back to the car . . . . . this is my work . . . . . and I'm going to finish it!"

The maddening thought that a new enemy, this relentless enemy of light, was on his heels, turned him back to his work, frenziedly, until his heart pounded like a trip-hammer under his aching breast-bone, and his breath in that rarified atmosphere came with short, painful gasps.

He had to resort to his brandy flask before he could reach the car again. There he rested for a precious minute or two, explaining to Alicia that he would pry against the empty flat-car's wheel with a logwood stick, while she hauled and tugged at its lower end with the reversed motor.

It was perilous work, calling for the utmost caution lest one fault of judgment undo all his labour. It was a moment when everything hung in the balance, when one grain of ill-luck would send a beam swinging up against them. But an inarticulate little cry burst from him as he saw the black mass slowly yield, and then move, inch by languid inch. He heard the grind of the rusty wheel-flanges against the switch-points, and knew that he had won.

Then the operation was repeated, when once the switch had been cleared and the lever thrown over, and again the stubborn flat-car was pried and pushed into motion. When it came to a standstill, it was left resting well off to the left of the switch, with the road to Guariqui once more open.

CHAPTER XXX
THE LAST DITCH

McKinnon's ears were ringing, and his head still swam a little, as he climbed into the track-motor's driving seat. He noticed, too, as they gathered speed that he was wet with sweat, and that the cool mountain air was sending a chill into his very bones.

"Look! It's daylight coming!" cried the girl at his side. He peered out through the phantasmal grayness that lightened about him, and a new anxiety crept and corroded through all his aching body. There would be no appreciable period of friendly twilight. The tropics, he knew, would explode the full light of day on them like a rocket. And between him and safety still lay seven miles of track.

"It will have to be full speed now—to the end," he told the girl.

She called back, "Yes—I know," as the lever went to the last notch and the car racked and pounded along the uneven rails. The forest fell away, and they came to a more broken country, winding and twisting between bald and rocky hills, past coffee farms from which early awakened dogs barked out at them. But the ragged-hooded car raced and pounded forward, taking the sharp curves with a scream of protest, striking with malignant heels at every passing switch-point. Then the light grew stronger; they could see a more orderly and level country studded with rancho and haciendas, and a crooked, sun-baked road, white with dust, and broken walls, and clumps of stunted trees.

Then the girl gave a cry and caught at his arm.

"Guariqui!" she said, pointing toward the north-west. He had no time to look, for at the same moment his own eyes ha deaught sight of something which filled him with an even more compelling emotion.

Before the rocky hillcrests toward which they were sweeping, he caught sight of a row of smoke columns and the serried white splashes of tent walls against the yellow-gray of the parched fields. He leaped to his feet as he saw it. He surrendered the lever recklessly, and turned and struggled with one of the cartridge boxes on the row behind him. He pulled and tugged and worked it quickly forward, to heighten the barricade on the right hand side of the car, for he knew they were charging down on De Brigard's camp. He realized that their climacteric moment was at hand, that the time for their last dash across the enemy's lines had come.

Already he could see the pacing sentries as they met and countermarched between the scattered splashes of white. He could see the corraled horses and mules of De Brigard's cavalry feeding together. As the car raced on, he could even make out groups of men in ragged uniform, barefooted, squatting about the campfires.

Some of them he could see stooping quietly over black pots; one group was splashing and washing at a long wooden water-trough. There seemed something tranquil in the scene, something strangely unlike the way of war in the slowly rising smoke columns, in the slowly moving barefooted men, in the randhos of palm and tree-boughs, in the water-trough and the tranquilly feeding horses and mules.

Then the scene changed, with the quickness of a stage-picture. The cue for that change came with a challenge from a sentry and then a single rifle shot from a second sentry on guard further along the track-edge. The camp changed with that shot.

It seemed to McKinnon like the sudden change that swept through his coherer dust when vitalized with its magnetic current. The sentry, in the meantime, repeated the shot, three times, until the man in the charging car stood up and returned his fire, sharply, driving him to cover.

But the alarm had been given, the tree-clumps and the broken stone walls seemed to swarm with men; the white tents became strangely like hornets' nests disgorging excited occupants. The barefooted idlers grouped about the campfires no longer watched the pots and splashed about the water-trough. They became armed irregular infantry; they were suddenly transformed into a vindictive and resolute-minded company whose one purpose in life was to pour lead into a huge, rusted, bullet-riddled track-motor that had ridden down their sentries and broken into their very lines.

For one incongruous moment McKinnon had felt vaguely sorry for those lean and hungry-looking and unkempt idlers in dirty denim uniforms. He had thought of them as homeless and unhappy men who were being made the tools of forces which they could not comprehend. Now they seemed to him dancing and running brown-faced fiends, doing their best to put a bullet through the head of a stranger who was very tired and hungry, and a little tipsy, perhaps, from immoderate drafts of brandy on a wofully empty stomach.

He saw them, as in a dream, but he scarcely gave them a thought. All he knew was that the woman huddled down at his side was still safe, and his car was still under way. Beyond that, he knew, nothing counted. Death had snapped at his heels too often and too closely that night; he was supremely contemptuous of their firecracker powder and their potmetal guns. He wanted to get to Guariqui and have something to eat and then sleep for twenty good hours. And the racing of the car made him dizzy. And every bone in his body ached. And he wondered how long he would have to keep shooting.

Then he sat back, with a sigh, and rested his arms. He noticed that his gun-barrel was hot to the touch. He noticed, too, that the noise of the shooting was not so disquietingly loud in his ears. It began to dawn on his dazed mind that they had faced the worst of the fight. He began to understand that they had forced their way through De Brigard's lines, that they were swinging up to the outskirts of the capital, that they were to reach Guariqui, after all.

Then he remembered pounding out over a narrow iron bridge, under which flashed and rippled a little stream as blue as a robin's egg. It made him think, for a moment, how thirsty he was, how much he would give for a bathful of that rippling blue water. Then all thought of the stream passed from his indifferent mind, for before him he could see walls, white walls and blue walls and pink walls, and above them huddled red roofs, and the dark green of tree-tops, and a yellow cathedral tower and still farther away a copper-red roof-dome glimmering like a ball of fire in the slanting sunlight. Then he heard a bugle call, and call again, sweet as silver, like a voice out of a dream.

That mellow and trailing note was punctuated by the sudden blow-like sounds of rifle shots from somewhere amid the soft white and blue and pink of the very walls ahead of him. He saw the track-ballast about him leap and erupt into ominous little clouds of flying dust. Ulloa's outposts were shooting at him, from Guariqui. They were under fire from their own people.

"Quick—" he called to the girl. "Show a flag!"

"How?" she asked, not understanding.

"Tie it to a carbine-end! Quick!"

"Tie what?" she called in his ear.

"A flag—a white flag—anything white!"

He knew, the next moment, that she was tearing a linen underskirt from her own limbs. He could see her quick fingers rip it into an oblong of fluttering white. He stooped for the carbine that lay in the car-bottom, and as he stooped he heard the girl call to him.

It was a call of something more than alarm. It was terror, unthinking and abject terror.

He was back at her side in a second: his first sickening thought was that a bullet had reached her.

But he saw only her outstretched hand, pointing foolishly and vaguely to something in front of her. He saw her wide and staring eyes, as she crouched down and back, lower and lower in the driving seat, as though preparing herself for some vast and overwhelming blow.

Distress From Indigestion

Tried in Vain to Get a Cure—All Medicines Failed

Old Trouble Disappeared When the Liver and Bowels Were Set Right by

DR. CHASE'S KIDNEY-LIVER PILLS

You cannot make a greater mistake than to think that indigestion is confined to the stomach. It is a disease of the liver and bowels, and it is only by getting these organs healthy and active that you can ever hope to cure chronic indigestion.

Here are two cases reported by Mr. Skinner, which tell of continued failure to cure indigestion by dosing the stomach. Both were cured thoroughly by using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills.

Mr. A. C. Skinner, Atlantic St., Hardwoodhill, Sydney, B.C., writes: "My wife was troubled with indigestion and tried all sorts of medicines in vain. Hearing about Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills, I got her to try them, and to our great delight she was cured. We would not think of being without them in the house for use when the liver and bowels become sluggish.

I told a friend about them and gave him a box. He had suffered from indigestion for years and tried most everything he could get. Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills were also successful in his case, and he says they beat any medicine he ever came across."

THE FATHER OF YELLOW JOURNALISM IS DEAD

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Joseph Pulitzer, proprietor and publisher of the New York World and the St. Louis Post-Despatch, who died on his yacht on Sunday, was born in Hungary, April 10, 1847, and received a good classical education by private tutors and at the Vienna University. After a few years of travelling in France and Britain, he came to the United States in 1864, entered the Union Army, as a cavalryman in a Missouri regiment ,and served to the end of the war. Then he returned to St. Louis, where he made a precarious living by serving as a waiter in a cafe. His ability was discovered by Carl Schurz and Mr. Pretorious, the owners of the Westlich Post ,a German daily published in that city, and they made him an offer to become a member of their editorial staff.

In rapid succession he became city editor, managing editor, and part-proprietor. In 1878 Mr. Pulitzer bought the St. Louis Despatch, and, combining it with the St. Louis Post, formed the Post-Despatch. While conducting that paper he studied law and was admitted to practice. In 1869 he was elected member of the Missouri State Legislature, and soon became prominent in Democratic State and national politics.

He was a member of the Missouri Constitutional Convention in 1879, and contributed political editorials and a series of European letters to the New York Sun. In the early '80's he went to New York and bought the New York World on May 10, 1883. Two years later he was elected to Congress to represent the Ninth New York District in the forty-ninth Congress. He resigned, however, after having served a few months.

Father of "Yellow Journalism"

After he had become the proprietor of the New York World, Mr. Pulitzer bent all his ability and tremendous energy to the development of his paper, determined to make it a great and important journal, and the mouthpiece of the masses. His methods did not, at first, meet with the approval of the people. At first only the lower classes welcomed the "yellow journalism" which Mr. Pulitzer inaugurated in his paper ,but in the course of time even the more conservative elements became reconciled with the new tendency and accepted it as a new phase in the development of American newspaper life.

Mr. Pulitzer always took great interest in educational matters and contributed liberally from his wealth to enable bright, but poor young men, to acquire a good education and a fair start in life. In 1889 he established ten annual collegiate scholarships for the poorest, brightest and most deserving boy graduates of the New York public schools, giving the winners in open competition $250 annually for seven years to pay for the expenses of a preparatory and college course. He also gave to Columbia University $100,000 for free tuition to winners in prize contests, and established three free scholarships in Barnard College.

College of Journalism

Probably the most important of his various educational gifts was the donation in 1903 to Columbia University of $1,000,000 for the establishment and maintenance of a College of Journalism, to rank with similar professional schools of law, medicine, engineering and architecture. He also agreed to increase his endowment by another $1,000,000 after the school had been in operation and met with success three years.

Mr. Pulitzer married Miss Kate Davis, of Washington, D.C., shortly after his return from the west, and she bore him two sons, Jos. Pulitzer, Jr., and Ralph Pulitzer. The latter had an excellent newspaper training under the direction of his father, and showed such marked ability that his father in 1907 entrusted him with the management of the New York World and the presidency of the St. Louis Post-Dispatch Company. Ralph Pulitzer married Miss Frederica Vanderbilt Webb, the only daughter of Dr. W. Seward Webb, and a grand-daughter of the late Commodore Vanderbilt, in 1905.

Mr. Pulitzer was always fond of outdoor life, and retained his physical strength remarkably long, notwithstanding several nervous breakdowns and a serious affliction of the eyes, which caused almost complete blindness during the latter part of his life.

The McNamara Jurors Were Allowed To Go To Polls

LOS ANGELES, CAL., Nov. 1.—Interest in the primary election overshadowed yesterday's session of the McNamara trial, the jurors now in the box being rushed to the polls and permitted to vote before court opened. There are now seven men in the box who have been passed by both sides ,and an eighth against whom the defence has tried to lodge an impeachment challenge, which is considered almost certain to fall.

Those passed for cause are: S. B. Manning, rancher; Robert Bain, carpenter; F. D. Green, capitalist; Water N. Brampton, farmer; George W. McKee, retired builder; A. C. Winter, butcher; Samuel F. Mendenhall, farmer.

Challenged for bias, but likely to remain: George W. Johnson, retired moulder.

When court reconvened to-day, the State was trying its hardest to eliminate Frank Frakes, a farmer, who has been passed by the defence, for cause. He inclines to the theory that gas destroyed the Times building, and the State, hoping to impeach, demanded whether he had not told R. B. Cameron ,of Lancaster, on Sept. 18, that he didn't believe dynamite had anything to do with the Times explosion. 'Frakes, a hard-headed farmer ,insisted:

"Mebbe I did; mebbe I didn't. Cameron talks too much. I'm likely to tell him anything an ytime in order to get away from him."

Attorney Darrow is trying his best to keep this juror, as Frakes insisted he had no opinion, and had never read much or talked about the case. His brother is a member of the Plasterers' Union of SanFrancisco, and for this reason the state is striving desperately to keep him from being seated.

Yesterday's late session was marked by much wrangling between attorneys a severe rebuking of the defence by Judge Bordwell. This was specially noticeable when the defence was trying to get rid of Veniremen Johnson, who characterized all union men as "tramps."

When he said he had conscience scruples against hanging a man on circumstantial evidence alone, the defence challenged. The challenge was ruled out by the court, who held the defence could not challenge for this cause, that being a right exclusively retained in the State.

Darrow was angry and said that it was the first time in his little life he had ever heard there was one kind of law for the State and another for the defence. He cited the code and insisted that such a juror should not be "permitted or compelled to serve," and declared Judge Bordwell had committed a reversible error by his ruling.

The defence planned to-day to renew its effort to impeach Johnson, but the defence's detective, Fitzgerald, made an unfavourable appearance on the witness stand late yesterday. His story that Johnson defended General Otis and said the McNamaras undoubtedly were guilty was challenged.

The defence managed to land Veniremen Mendenhall on the jury, he insisting that he could be fair and resisting all efforts of the state to dislodge him. He is a bitter personal enemy of District Attorney Fredericks, making it certain the state will have to waste a peremptory challenge to remove him. The present indications are that the defence will have to use four peremptories, and the state two to remove men from the box, leaving only Manning and possibly Green. The State had ten, the defence twenty peremptories.

A Youthful Criminal

Special to The Examiner:

CLEVELAND, Nov. 2.—A unique and sordid series of burglaries, in the perpetration of which a boy of 21 years worked with death as his partner, came to an end with the arrest of Harry Nichols, famous in police circles as the "funeral burglar," who has been working in Cleveland for two months.

In modest attire, always black, passing easily for a mourner or an undertaker's assistant, the youth plied his gruesome ,ghoulish "trade" in homes where funerals were being held. Slipping into the bereaved homes while the last services over the dead tenant were being held, and mingling tears with those of the mourners, he attracte dno attention, and after the funeral he stayed behind and gulglarized the house.

He showed no sign of alarm when taken into custody and when confronted with the long list of crimes charged against him at police headquarters, he confessed without show of emotion. In his pocket when he was arrested the police found a valuable gold watch ,the property of the late Michael Hannan. The watch had been stolen, with money and jewellery, from the Hannan home, Sept. 2, the day of Hannan's funeral.

CARE OF HORSES

From Farm and Dairy.

If the horse is in good working order have the new collar just a trifle tight, and let him work in it. He will soon pull that collar into the shape required to fit him and will work in comfort.

About six months after purchasing have the collar lined and stuffed, and it should be all that is necessary for the horse.

If possible have a separate collar for each horse, and do not allow "Bonnie" to work in "Trooper's" collar.

On no account put too much oil on the collar; it is not required, and the oil penetrates to the straw, and when they are lined and stuffed they will not give satisfaction.

When not in use place collars in the shade, especially when wet. Do not let the sun play on them, for it will draw on the straw and alter the shape.

Have all collars lined with check for farm work, as it is cheaper and cooler than leather lining. Leather gets very hot and is likely to scald when the horse sweats.

If leather lining is preferred, wipe it with a damp rag occasionally, but do not put any oil on it or it will penetrate to the hair and take all the spring away.

Sore shoulders are in most cases due to the fault of the driver. These bad sores do not occur in one day. It takes some rubbing to rub the skin off, which should be noticed when removing or placing the collar on the horse. Why not then attend to it? Ease the place on the collar where it hurts the horse. See if the draught of the hames is on the right place to suit the animal; also see if the chains are exactly the same length.

Look for any other little part that may be misplaced; see to it at once and we will get better results from our horses and a lot more pleasure in driving them.

CONDENSED INFORMATION

(Detroit Free Press.)

It requires 190 years to grow a 30-foot cedar pole for telegraph purposes, but there are other poles which answer all purposes which are grown more quickly.

In striking contrast with the slow growth in the number of acreage of farms and the area of improved land during the ten years is the enormous rise which has occurred in the value of farm property.

One of Britain's most eminent physicians has advanced the theory that the increase in the number of cases of appendicitis in recent years is due to modern methods of grinding wheat.

In an analysis of a group of accidents to workmen while following their line of work, for 30 per cent. of the accidents no one was responsible, for 30 per cent. the workman killed or his fellow-workmen were responsible, for 30 per cent the employer or agent was responsible, and for 10 per cent. both employer and workman were responsible.

The Jolly Good Fellow, in the bar: "Come on lads, another on me; whoop 'er up; I've money to burn." At Home—"Confound it woman, why do you bother me about shoes for the kids; I've got no money."

Comfort and content are desired by every one. Comfort may be wholly a thing of circumstance. Contentment must be learned. Remember Paul—"I have learned" not to be comfortable, but "to be content."

The man who has learned to do something better than anyone else, has learned to do a common thing in an uncommon manner, is the man who has a power and influence that no adverse circumstances can take from him.

A business man overtook a negro trudging through the snow humming to himself. He talked with him and found that he was very poor. Finally, he asked him if he didn't think he'd be happier if he were rich. "No, boss, all the rich men I work for never laugh."

The garden where flowers bloom is the garden where flowers were planted and tended. The life that shows blossoms of goodness is the one where good thoughts, words and deeds are cultivated so diligently that the weeds of evil have no room or chance to grow.

MARRIAGE AND LONG LIFE

Matrimony is the greatest aid to longevity is the conclusion advanced by Dr. Jacques Bertillon. His contention is based on a world-wide census. A married man or woman has thrice the chance of a long life possessed by a bachelor or a spinster. The Doctor shows that the mortality among widowers is greater than the average among married men, and he recommends them to look out for a new partner. This is his advice to young men: "Marry; you will do well, even from a selfish standpoint. But watch carefully over your wife's health, as even from this egotistical point of view her loss will be a terrible misfortune, for your life depends in a great measure on hers."

GRAVE HUMOUR

The punster is irrepressible; he even indites his jokes on tombstones. An epitaph in Waltham Abbey informs us that Sir James Fullerton died "fuller of faith than of fears, fuller of resolutions than of pains, fuller of honour than of days." There is another of Daniel Tears: "Though strange, yet true, full seventy years was his wife happy in her Tears." This was written of an organist, "Here lies one, blown out of breadth, who lived a merry life, and died a Meridgth." Another says, "Here lies Thomas Huddlestone: reader, don't smile, but reflect as this tombstone you view, that Death, who killed him, in a very short time will huddle a stone upon you."

WHY NOT?

A Short Story

Young Stiles was going to be married in a couple of weeks, and his friend, Caperton, dropped in to congratulate him.

"She's a wonderful girl, old fellow," he said, "and you ought to be thoroughly happy. Yes, I have known Josephine Trayne for years. Oh, my! But you must be making money!"

"What do you mean?" said Stiles.

"Her clothes, man! But, of course, you've provided for all that."

Stiles began to argue. He was conscientious.

"Of course, Josephine dresses well," he said. "Why shouldn't she? She has a rich father, but those are the kind of girls who always settle down afterward. We have talked it over, I assure you, and she understands."

"Bless you, my boy," replied Caperton, "I didn't mean to say anything that would disconcert you; but have you any idea how much Josephine Trayne spends on her clothes?"

"No. Have you?"

"I have."

"Where did you get it?"

"She buys all of her clothes at Pinkmarsh's. Now, I happen to know the head bookkeeper in that establishment; of course, this is confidential. He could not give away secrets, but we know each other pretty well, and he tells me some strange things."

"You couldn't find out how much Josephine had been spending for the last year, could you? It might be well for me to know."

"I think I could—on the quiet. You meet me at Pinkmarsh's late this afternoon; I'll introduce you to our friend the bookkeeper, and get him to give you an abstract of Josephine's account."

"Good!"

At 6 they met at the smart dressmaker's establishment, with its huge plate glass windows, its fashionable air of exclusiveness, and its quiet, unostentatious general appearance. Stiles was introduced to the head bookkeeper on the third floor.

"You must keep mum about this," he whispered, as they sat down in his office.

"Sure!"

He turned to the page.

Miss Josephine Trayne—account sent to her father. Here we begin on the first of January. Evening frock, $275; house gown, $175; four skirts at $50 each, $200; three hats, one at $80, one at $60, and one at $120, total, $260; February, riding habit, two pieces, $160; evening gown, $200; walking suit, three pieces, $250——"

"Hold on!" exclaimed Stiles, "don't bother to read off all these items. What's the total? That's what I want."

"You mean for the whole year?"

"Yes."

The bookkeeper turned the leaves. He figured silently with a pencil at the bottom of the ledger.

"Well," he said, "I can't tell exactly, as some items have been carried over, but it's about $9,000. Yes! Wait a minute. Deducting this and adding this! Here's the exact sum: Nine thousand four hundred and twenty dollars and thirty-three cents."

He smiled.

"I suppose that seems large to you," he said, "but I assure you it isn't. Why, some women spend $25,000 and $30,000 a year here alone on their clothes. Miss Trayne's account is a good one, of course, but nothing extraordinary."

"Where does her bill go?" asked Stiles.

"To her father."

"She doesn't know anything about it, I suppose."

"Dear me, no. He sends us a check twice a year."

They thanked him, promised secrecy and went out to dinner together. Stiles was beginning to think:

"I am very glad you told me about this," he said. "Why, that girl is spending on her clothes almost twice as much as I make."

"And the worst of it is," said Caperton, "is that she doesn't know it. Of course, it's none of my business, and I know she is a fine girl."

"She isn't to blame."

"Nobody is to blame. Only you ought to know the situation before you go into a thing like that. I have seen a great many of my married friends made unhappy by ignorance of facts."

"Exactly. Well, we'll see what we can do."

The next morning Stiles called to see Mr. Trayne, Josephine's father. He wasted no time.

"How much does Josephine spend on her clothes a year?" he asked.

"How do I know? It's probably enough."

"You know my income?"

"You told me."

"Well, isn't she spending more on her clothes than I make?"

"I presume so. She isn't marrying you for your money. We all know that."

"I've told her that we would have to live within our income," replied Stiles, warmly, "and she says that she is perfectly willing; but now that I think it over, I don't believe she understands."

"Well, what of it? You don't expect a young girl like that to understand figures, do you?"

Stiles was beginning to lose patience. The whole situation had suddenly come over him almost in the nature of a sensation.

"Possibly you don't understand, Mr. Trayne," he said. "I am going to marry a lovely girl, who has never had the slightest thing to do with practical management of affairs. Now, my income is only about one-half, say, of what she spends on her clothes. I tell her that she will have to live on what I am making, and she laughs and says of course; she will be delighted. She hasn't the remotest conception of what this means. I thereupon came to you, and you laugh lightly and say that it doesn't matter; that she is not marrying me for my money; in other words, you expect to support us, don't you?"

"That's absurd. Josephine has always had what she wanted. I think I have had experience enough to size people up; I like you and I was glad that she selected you for a husband. The fact that you have a small income is of no consequence. Let Josephine try the experiment of living within your means; when she gets tired of it, why, we'll fix her up—that's simple, isn't it?"

The calm, businesslike manner in which Mr. Trayne had evidently disposed of the whole affair staggered Stiles.

"Do you mean to say," he stammered, "that you've talked this over, and that you expect to 'help' Josephine out if necessary? Well, you haven't counted on me! I am making a good income, so far as I am concerned, and at any rate, I am making ample enough for two people to live upon. It isn't that I don't care for money, but I don't care to be 'helped,' as you put it, when I can easily take care of Josephine myself. The thing that troubles me is that she doesn't understand; she has been used to spending about $10,000 a year on her clothes, and she will have to cut it down to $1,000."

"But I've told you that she would not."

"She will if she marries me, because I won't permit her to accept a cent from you."

"Why not?"

"Because, as I have explained, it isn't necessary. I am not finicky about these things. If I lost my job, or was unable to support her, I shouldn't hesitate to call on you, but as long as I am able to give her a decent home, I can't let her take any superfluous help."

Mr. Trayne turned sharply around in his seat.

"Then you'd better not marry her," he said, shortly. "You wouldn't be happy, either of you."

"That's just the conclusion I have come to."

Stiles telephoned to Josephine, and half an hour later was arguing the question with her.

"You see, Josy," he said, "the way it is we couldn't possibly marry on my income—why, you must be spending—from what your father tells me—almost if not quite twice as much on your clothes alone as I make in a year!"

"But I have told you that I would cut down. I can be awfully economical if I try."

"Could you live on one-tenth of what you have been getting?"

"What nonsense are you talking? You don't have to pay Pinkmarsh's bill right away—papa never does—and by the time it comes due you may be making ever so much more; besides, they don't care about the money—I have often heard papa say so."

"You don't understand at all. You have always had these things, and they are second nature to you; you meet me, and I am somewhat different from the rest, and we fall in love with each other without considering the practical details; but, my dearest girl, when we got married, it would be the same old story; you couldn't do it—it would be impossible to ask you; to be deprived of all the things you have been used to would be like taking a goldfish out of the water and expecting him to be happy in a bureau drawer."

"But, papa——"

"If papa helped you out, it would be the same; I never could stand it, simply for the reason that it would be unnecessary to me; I couldn't get used to that sort of thing any more than you could to my income. It can't be, Josephine. It's terrible, but absolutely impossible for us to marry."

"What does papa say?"

"It was he who said it."

. . . . . .

It was 18 months later. Stiles sat in the window of his club one day as a huge automobile went slowly by down the avenue. A friend, standing near him, said:

"Who are those people?"

"A Mr. and Mrs. Caperton."

"Wasn't she a Miss Trayne?"

"Yes."

"And didn't he fall into a fat thing?"

And Stiles replied:

"Well, I suppose that's the way you look at it. I understand he has an income of about $4,000 a year."—Life.

Newsy Paragraphs From the Land of Our Forefathers

William Lovett fell thirty feet from a scaffold at Southchurch, and was killed. He was fifteen years old, and only began work that morning.

Woman Workhouse Barber

Owing to the illness of the barber who holds the contract for shaving the inmates of the Bourne (Lincolnshire) Workhouse, the work is being done by his wife.

Serious Pottery Fire

Damage to the extent of £15,000 was caused by fire at Messrs. S. Fielding and Co.'s pottery works at Fenton, Staffs. Between four and five hundred workpeople will be temporarily thrown out of employment.

Yorkshire Railway Spill

A truck axle broke while a heavily laden goods train was running near Croft, North Yorkshire. The wagon left the rails and dragged two others with it. Much damage was caused to the permanent way, and traffic was greatly delayed.

Artfulness of Pensioners

Chatham Guardians resolved to make representations to the Local Government Board about the practice of old age pensioners returning to the workhouse after spending eight, ten, and twelve weeks' pension which they had allowed to accumulate.

Fifty-eight Years Churchwarden

A stained glass window has been placed in the Parish Church at Glinton, near Market Deeping, to the memory of the late Mr. Samuel Vergette, who for fifty-eight years held the office of churchwarden. He was a nonagenarian, and was believed to be the oldest churchwarden in England.

Widow and Twelve Children

The dead body of Joseph Ryan, farm laborer, was found on the road between Buttevant and Doneraile, Munster. Beside him lay his bicycle, buckled and broken. He left a widow and twelve children.

A Notable Auctioneer

The death is announced of Mr. Joseph F. Keogh, a well-known citizen of Dublin. He carried on an important business as auctioneer and valuer, and was a prominent figure in the commercial life of the city.

New Dean of Belfast

Canon C. T. P. Grierson, Rector of Seapatrick, Banbridge, has been appointed to the Deanery of Belfast, in succession to the Rev. J. J. Robinson, who has settled in Canada in order to take up Church work in the Dominion.

Best Cattle Going

Ireland has been losing its best cattle, which are shipped away. A meeting has been held at Monaghan to take steps to improve the quality of the milking cattle in the country. Sir Nicholas Gosslin said the people must be induced to keep the cattle at home and to pay more attention to milking qualities.

A Start in Life

George Wilson, the boy who tramped 600 miles in seven weeks—walking from Liverpool to London, twice to Carnarvon, one of the visits being for the Investiture, back to Blackpool, and thence to Cardiff—has gone to sea, having been given work on a Cardiff steamer. When he comes back—paid off with his $10 a month—he will stop, he says, at a restaurant kept by a Cardiff Socialist. Asked why, he replied, "Because the first time I was in Cardiff they told me whenever I was hungry to go in there, and they gave me my breakfast."

Sanatorium Love Story

The Cardiff Guardians have had a letter from the matron of The Mount, a Worcestershire sanatorium, protesting against the publicity given to the case of a girl who had fallen in love with a male inmate. When the young man was discharged in the ordinary course he took lodgings near the sanitorium, and continued his courtship, with the result that the guardians acquiesced in the removal of the girl (who had to be confined to the premises) to another institution. The letter made it clear that there was no intention to detain the girl.

SHRINKABLE HEADGEAR

Ribbons When Tightened Reduce the Size of the Bonnet

"Shrinkable" headgear has arrived in Paris. The new style is especially suitable for motor bonnets and soft toques which are intended to fit closely round the head. A very charming example of the "shrinkable" bonnet is of black velvet edged with fur. It is made in the shape of a butterfly net, nearly two feet long. At either side interlaced in tabs of the same velvet are two ribbons, to be fastened in a bow under the chin. As the ribbons are drawn tighter the size of the bonnet is reduced, hence the "shrinkable" bonnet.

THE ANGORA INDUSTRY

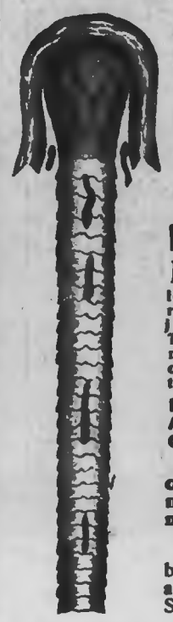
F. P. Fletcher Will Raise Goats in Alberta Province

Fergus P. Fletcher, Alberta, is bringing the nucleus of a herd of Angoras from Montana. "There are many people in Alberta who regard the Angora as a beast with great possibilities in this country," he said "and I am one of them. They are not only invaluable for clearing scrubby country, but they can be run with great profit on any piece of poor land. I have seen a herd of goats put on land that was absolutely useless, and they have improved it that much that it is now well prepared for other stock or grain growing; there has been an ever increasing demand for this in the past few years, and the prices realized in London England, during the years from 1905 to 1910 have been very gratifying. And there is no fear of an over production. The Angora industry is only in its infancy, but it is full of great possibilities, and when the general public become educated to eat goats' flesh the industry will grow fast. In all the big restaurants of Europe England and the United States, the flesh of the Angora is deemed a great delicacy, and the demand for it is increasing all the time."

Mr. Fletcher expects to pass through the city again in about ten days with forty goats with which to start his herd.

HUMAN HAIR ROOT

Showing Dandruff Germs At Work



WYETH'S SAGE AND SULPHUR HAIR REMEDY

Kills the Dandruff Germ and Makes the Hair Grow

Restores Gray Hair to Natural Color

FEW people are aware of the number of Dandruff Germs that infest the human hair and scalp. The germs which locate themselves in the follicle or sack which envelopes the root of the hair, spend a lazy existence in sucking up the juices which should go to keep life and strength in the hair. These germs cannot be seen by the naked eye, but with a magnifying glass of from 300 to 400 diameters the spores of this hair destroyer may be seen in masses, clinging to the hair.

DANDRUFF, ITCHING OF THE SCALP AND FALLING HAIR ARE A SURE SIGN OF DESTRUCTIVE GERMS.

Wyeth's Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy not only kills the dandruff germs and prevents baldness, but it also restores faded and gray hair to natural color.

Don't Experiment With Old Fashioned Hair Dyes

FORCES FOR PORTUGAL

An Effort was Made in London to Assist the Royalists

Circumstances have just come to light which point to efforts having been recently made in London to assist through enlisting Englishmen, the Portuguese Royalists in their attempt to regain the throne of Portugal for ex-King Manuel.

The advice of a member of the Government was sought in the instance alluded to, and it was very pronounced against Englishmen running risks of capture, inasmuch as no official interference on the part of Ministers could be expected. The person approached was Lieutenant-Colonel D. P. Driscoll, D.S.O., chief executive officer and secretary of the Legion of Frontiersmen, who was head of Driscoll's Scouts in the Boer War.

"Some time ago a gentleman called upon me," said the Colonel, "and inquired whether I was willing to take up the matter of recruiting forces for Portugal. He invited me to see a high Portuguese official in London, but I told him that before going further in the matter I would consult a relative who is conversant with Portuguese affairs, having lived in the country, and was formerly a member of the House of Commons. The advice of this friend was not to commit myself in any way until he had ascertained the wishes of the British Government. He saw a member of the Government, who told him that they could not countenance such a movement at any cost. When my mysterious visitor called a second time, about a week or ten days afterwards, I told him I would have nothing to do with the matter."

STORY OF A FORTUNE

Music Hall Doorkeeper Suddenly Becomes Wealthy

A romantic story of a fortune is reported from Cardiff, where the doorkeeper at the Empire Music Hall, Sergt.-Major Thomas Smith, has just been informed that he is part heir to the estate of his brother Richard, who died at Strathroy, Canada. The value of the estate is estimated by the executors at $10,000,000, and the residue is left in equal shares to the brothers and sisters. The solicitors' letter informing the Sergt.-Major of his fortune was posted to his old regimental address in Monmouth, and, of course, was returned. He has a sister in Plymouth. The family belongs to Devonshire, and the brother Richard emigrated to Canada sixty years ago. He saved money and invested it in land. In sinking for water he struck one of the richest oil wells in Canada.

A BISHOP'S CRITICISM

Wishes a More Vital Application of Christianity to Problems

In his address at Carlisle Diocesan Conference at Windermere, the Bishop of Carlisle, Dr. Diggle, claimed a more effective and vital application of Christianity to modern problems. "Our age," he said, "is an age of enormous material prosperity. Money is growing into a god and worshiped with an idolatrous and materialistic worship. On the other hand we are losing the sense of the dignity of labor. The heightening of the habits of living has everywhere increased its cost. These, with other causes, are producing an unrest amounting almost to perilous despair among the lower laboring classes, who often work eighty hours a week for twenty shillings. These things ought not to be. They turn the brotherhood of man into a sham."

HISTORIC PRISON CELLS

The Criminal Relics of London Will Be Stored Therein

The authorities of the new London Museum, at Kensington Palace, have secured possession of some historical prison cells, wherein will be housed the criminal relics of London.

The cells were discovered in a common lodging house in Wellclose Square, St. George's-in-the-East, and are believed to date back to the times of Charles II., and to have been subsequently used in connection with the Whitechapel Police Court. In the walls, which are built of oak, thickly studded with strong iron bolts, were the original fetters used for the condemned prisoners, together with a plank bed, upon which, no doubt, many a criminal spent his last night.

The complete cells have been dismantled by experts, acting under instructions from Mr. Guy Laking, custodian of the new museum, and will be re-erected in their entirety in the annex at the museum at Kensington, where visitors will be able to pass in and out of them and inspect the many quaint inscriptions on the walls. An old oak staircase still stands in the house in Wellclose Square, but this will not be removed.

LOGGERS' NARROW ESCAPE

They Had to Make a Quick Dash From the Flames

One hundred loggers employed in the camp of Hastings' Mills on Wales Island, British Columbia, one hundred miles up the coast, last Saturday, had to board a logging train and through blinding smoke and angry flames seek refuge on the beach at Granite Bay, five miles away. A bush fire, fanned by a west wind, travelled five miles in less than an hour and a half, destroying the valuable standing timber. It cleared a pathway a mile wide. The loggers abandoned their camp after loading their supplies and donkey engine on flat cars. The run to the beach was made down grade at a record speed. They had a close call.

Isle of Man Poll Tax

Respecting the tax of one penny per head by the Isle of Man Harbor Commissioners on passengers embarking and disembarking at Manx ports, a return has been issued showing that during May, June and July last visitors to Douglas numbered 239,586, which is a record. The increase over arrivals in the corresponding period of last year is nearly 21,000.

Bonds issued in coupon form with privilege of registration of principal and in fully registered form. Coupon and registered bonds are interchangeable.

TRUSTEE:
NATIONAL TRUST CO., LIMITED, TORONTO

The legal opinion of Messrs. Blake, Lash, Anglin and Cassels, Toronto will be furnished.

We emphasize the following salient points of this issue:

(1) Value of assets as of July 1st, 1911, $5,000,000—Consisting of Real Estate, Buildings, Plant and Goodwill, $3,837 911.94, and Net current quick assets in excess of current liabilities, $1,162,088.06.

Included in current assets is the sum of $734,909 invested in Municipal and other bonds.

(2) Average annual net earnings for past four years (1907-1910) $291,719 or practically 3 ¼ times the interest on the present bonds.

(3) An annual Sinking Fund beginning July 1st, 1916, sufficient to retire the present issue prior to maturity at a maximum price of 105 and accrued interest.

The Company has outstanding $1,500,000 7% Cumulative Preferred Stock and $2,000,000 Common Stock, both of which are listed upon the Toronto and Montreal exchanges.

The present capacity of the plant which may be said to comprise everything required for the building of the most modern and up-to-date locomotives, provides for a yearly output of seventy five engines, but as each year many satisfactory orders have been declined owing to the inability of the Company to make the deliveries required, it has been decided to proceed immediately with such enlargement of the works as will increase their future output to at least double their present capacity. Therefore, it may safely be assumed that a corresponding increase in the earnings of the Company will be assured.

At the present time, the Company has a sufficient number of orders on its books to keep it fully employed for about a year, and if negotiations for additional contracts now pending are successful, the Company will have abundance of work until the early months of 1913.

The excellent management of the Company has been further strengthened by the acquisition of Mr. A. E. W. Wheatley as its General Manager. Mr. Wheatley is one of the foremost locomotive manufacturers in America, having, previous to joining this Company, been the General Manager of the American Locomotive Company's plant at Dunkirk, N.Y., the second largest locomotive works on this continent.

DOGS GO WILD

Our tame dogs would all go wild if left to themselves for a few years. They tried the experiment once on Robinson Crusoe' island. They left some of their dogs there, and nobody called at the island again for about 30 years. And they found all the dogs had become quite wild. They hunted just like wolves, and they had forgotten how to bark; they could only howl. It was not until they became used to men again that they learnt to bark. A few years ago two dogs near to Nottingham lost their owners, so they made homes for themselves in a field. They hunted sheep and lambs, and did a great deal of damage, just as the wild dogs of India and Africa and Australia do. They looked just like wolves—so much had they changed during the months they had lived the life of wild dogs, and finally, they had to be shot.

DIFFERENT TRAITS

The man who is always crowing over his own achievements is quick to complain when his neighbour's rooster does the same thing. Many a man who prides himself on the pedigree of his horse doesn't care a fig about his own family tree. It is the occupant of a three-room flat who protests loudest about being crowded in the subway. The man who doubts every other man's fish story feels insulted if anyone doubts his. The man who expects payment for the slightest service is the one who kicks on having to fee the porter. The man who has failed in everything he has undertaken considers himself competent to tell how the Government should be run. Some people get "all het up" trying to keep cool.

WHEN BLOOD IS POISON

The blood must be filtered, otherwise you are poisoned. If the kidneys fail the liver is overworked, and becomes torpid. By using Dr. Chase's Kidney-Liver Pills you get both these filtering organs working right, and also ensure healthful action of the bowels. For this reason these pills are an ideal family medicine. They cure biliousness, constipation, chronic indigestion and kidney disease.

BIRD THAT NEVER FLIES

Some Interesting Facts About the Swift-footed Ostrich

The ostrich, because of its resemblance to the camel, has been said to be the connecting link between the beasts and the birds. There is a horny excrescence on the breast of both the dromedary and the ostrich, on which they lean while resting; they have similarly formed feet; the same muscular neck; their food is much the same, and both can go an incredibly long time without water.

Moreover, an ostrich never flies, nor is it possible for it to lift itself from the ground in the slightest degree by the use of its wings; but, like the camel, it is very swift-footed. In its native country the shells of the eggs afford almost the only household utensils used. An egg will weigh from three to four pounds, and is equal to two dozen hen's eggs. It requires thirty-five minutes to boil one, and longer if required hard. A fresh egg is worth twenty-five dollars.

The keeper of an ostrich farm says the birds are the only thing he ever tried that he has not succeeded in taming. They are known to live to be seventy-five years old, and some think they will reach a hundred. They are about eight feet in height. Their hearing and sight are very acute, and these seem to be about all the senses they are blessed with. Their legs are very powerful, and are the only weapon of defence; when they attack an enemy they do so by kicking, but always strike forward and never backward.

The choice "ostrich feathers" are found only in the wings; the undressed feathers vary in price, having been as low as twenty-five dollars per pound and as high as three hundred dollars, and there are from seventy to ninety feathers in a poung. A single bird rarely furnishes more than a dozen fine feathers, and the birds themselves, if fine ones, are valued at one thousand dollars per pair—Our Dumb Animals.

LAST OF GOLDEN EAGLES

The Species Once Numerous in the Black Hills is Now Extinct

When the pioneers entered the Black Hills 35 years ago golden eagles were as common as are English sparrows at present, but with the death of Old Sentinel, that occurred several days ago, it is believed that the birds have become extinct. Unlike eagles of other sections of the country, the golden eagles were much larger, fiercer, swifter of flight and of a different color. The feathers and plumage of the back were almost yellow, hence the name

In the early days of the hills the birds were so numerous that they were considerable of a menace to the settlers. Frequently they would swoop down into the ranch lots, pick up a lamb or a small pig and fly away to some crag, where they would devour the catch or carry it to their young. Many stories are told of golden eagles having attacked small children.

Recently E. M. Norman, Rapid City, went to Deadwood, S.D., determined if possible to capture the golden eagle alive. He realized that Old Sentinel was the last one of his race in the hills and that in his capture he would secure a prize well worth effort. Going out to the Ragged Top range with a small party of friends, he was told that Old Sentinel, that had guarded the peak for years, had not been seen for more than a month.

Mr. Norman concluded that a trip to the lofty home of the eagle was worth the trouble, and climbed to the top of the mountain. There, covering a space of more than 20 feet square, were the bones of almost all kinds of small domestic animals lying about in heaps.

Down in a crevice of the rocks, some 20 feet below, was the body of the eagle. Ropes were put around one of the men and he was lowered and pulled back, bringing with him the prize, not alive, but a dead eagle. Making an examination, Mr. Norman became convinced that the eagle must have been fully 100 years old, and that his death was due to age. The body was taken down and brought to Deadwood, where the skin will be mounted and probably become the property of the Historical Society of South Dakota.

The measurements of Old Sentinel prove that he was one of the largest of the birds of North America.

IMPATIENT AGE

Primate on Mania for "Short Cuts"—The Perils of Hurry

The Archbishop of Canterbury, preaching at Lambeth Parish Church, where the mayor and corporation of the borough paid their annual visit in state, said that though the world was better than it was, present-day faults were great. Impatience and hurry were what we saw, and, he thought, suffered from every day. In every department of life people were striving for what in common talk were called "short cuts" towards the solutions they wanted to reach. Anxious problems were being faced in a spirit which was surely a new spirit and a dangerous one—a spirit of hot impatience. It was wholesome to be hotly intolerant of wrong, but intolerance or impatience of wrong would not usually solve great perplexities by itself. Patience had a foremost place in sustained effort to mend these things. To-day's temptation was speed rather than thoroughness.

GETTING MEN TO CHURCH

At a conference of the Church of England Men's Society, held in Bath, under the presidency of Dr. Kennion, Bishop of Bath and Wells, the Rev. Hylton Stewart, rector of Bathwick, declared that if they were to attract men to church they must in the first instance get the women to reduce the size of their hats. The statement was received with laughter, and Mr. Hylton Stewart added that "a friend had declared that he would not go to church again until this was done, for he declared that he could neither see nor hear anything. Very often, he said, the women were more particular about the arrangement of their hats and their hair than they were about their prayers."

Hair Becomes Soft, Fluffy, Lustrous and Beautiful Immediately After a Danderine Hair Cleanse

Get a 25 Cent Bottle Now and Forever Stop Falling Hair, Itching Scalp and Dandruff

A little Danderine now will immediately double the beauty of your hair—No difference how dull, faded, brittle and scraggy, just moisten a cloth with Danderine and carefully draw it through your hair taking one small strand at a time. The effect is immediate and amazing—your hair will be light, fluffy and wavy and have an appearance of abundance; an incomparable lustre, softness and luxuriance, the beauty and shimmer of true hair health.

Try as you will after an application of Danderine, you cannot find a single trace of dandruff or a loose or falling hair and your scalp will not itch, but what will please you most will be after a few week's use when you will actually see new hair, fine and downy at first—yes—but really new hair—sprouting all over the scalp.

Danderine is to the hair what fresh showers of rain and sunshine are to vegetation. It goes right to the roots, invigorates and strengthens them. Its life-producing properties cause the hair to grow abundantly long, strong and beautiful.

Get a 25 cent bottle of Knowlton's Danderine from any drug store or toilet counter and prove to yourself tonight—now—that your hair is as pretty and soft as any—that it has been neglected or injured by careless treatment—that's all—you surely can have beautiful hair and lots of it, if you will just try a little Danderine. Real surprise awaits you.

Exit Buffalo Bill.

Richmond, Va., Nov. 2.—Col. William F. Cody, "Buffalo Bill" to the world, retired from public life last night. His show was packed off to winter quarters and his Indians will return to their tepees in what is left of the Redman's land, while "Buffalo Bill" intends to spend his remaining years in the Wyoming Big Horn, where he helped to make American history. So far as public exhibitions are concerned, he has shot the ashes from the last cigar and chased the last Indian.

During a career which began as a pony express rider, led him through more Indian battles than any other living white man and included twenty-eight years as a showman, Col. Cody became known as one of the most picturesque figures of American frontier life.

Would Regulate Intercolonial.

Montreal, Nov. 2.—In the matter of the Intercolonial Railway rates on ex-water grain from Montreal to points east on the Intercolonial Railway, the managing board of the Canadian Government railways have notified the Montreal Board of Trade that the matter had been further discussed and that the views of the board could not be met.

The Board of Trade council, at a meeting yesterday, was of the opinion that this decision further emphasised the desirability of the Intercolonial being placed under the jurisdiction of the Railway Commission.

C.P.R. Express In Collision.

Calgary, Nov. 2.—When it ran into an open switch at Wessex, five miles north of Crossfield, yesterday morning, at about 2.30 o'clock, the express that left here at midnight for Edmonton collided with a southbound freight, and Fireman Tom Currie of Calgary, of the passenger train, was killed, while Engineer Houston of the same train was severely scalded, and J. Carson, baggageman, and a brakeman named Parsons, were injured. All the members of the crew were Calgary men. None of the passengers were injured.

Blame Put on Patriotism.

Port Huron, Nov. 2.—Contractor Alexander S. Tracy, who was arrested on Labor Day for fast and reckless driving of his automobile at Toronto, which subsequently resulted in a $1,000 fine being imposed upon him, blames the whole trouble to excessive patriotism.

The severe sentence handed out to Tracy caused a great deal of surprise when announced in this city. He was found guilty of fast driving, but it was thought the court would inflict nothing more than a nominal sentence.

The Oldest Organ.

What is believed to be the oldest organ in existence has been discovered by a German musical director, who visited fifty-nine churches in Gothland and in a village called Sundne came upon the remnant of the quaint old instrument. MORGAN'S FEW FRIENDS.

They Are Chiefly Men Whom He Has Known All His Life.

It is said there are scarcely fifty men in the financial district who have a speaking acquaintance with J. P. Morgan. Whether the number is correct or not, it is certain that his acquaintance is relatively small and that his real friendships are reserved for a very few people, chiefly the men whom he has known all his life and with whom he is very likely not associated at all in a business way.

His dislike of having a meaningless fuss made over him by strangers is shown by his never appearing at public meetings and by his perennial irritation at the never-say-die reporters and camera men who unfailingly close in upon him when he is sailing or returning from across the water. In London he insists upon not being noticed when he goes in or leaves his office and has stopped the custom of showering him with deferential bows which was long clung to by his employees.

When he drives up to his house or his office in New York he is out of his cab or automobile and into the building in two strides, swift and purposeful. Any one who hoped to intercept him would carry away nothing from the attempt but the mental impression of the financier's air of extraordinary vigor and the recollection of the intent and piercing expression of his eyes, fixed straight before him.—Metropolitan Magazine.

Hewgill Out on Bail.

Toronto, Nov. 2.—Stephen Hewgill, charged with manslaughter in killing a Chinese boy with his motor car, was yesterday admitted to bail by the Attorney-General. The bond is $10,000 and Harry Magee is the bondsman. Bail had been refused by Magistrate Denison and by Mr. Justice Clute. Mr. Hewgill was released from the jail, where he spent Tuesday night.

It's the Carlton-Ritz Now.

Montreal, Nov. 2.—At a meeting of the promoters of the Carlton Hotel Co., held yesterday, the proposal to increase the 5 per cent. bond issue from $600,000 to $1,000,000, was adopted, as was the proposition to change the name of the hotel to the Carlton-Ritz.

The Elbe Going Dry.

The river Elbe is going dry, says a report from Tetschen-Bodenbach, in Bohemia. The "famine rocks" in the river bed, called so because they were never seen except when great droughts caused much suffering, are now visible. A part of the Tetschen bridge, which in normal water conditions is submerged, now stands high and dry, and the low water marks bearing the dates 1616, 1638, 1707, 1746 and 1857 can be seen.

MARKET REPORTS.

Liverpool and Chicago Wheat Futures Close Lower—Live Stock—Latest Quotations.

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—Wheat rebounded to-day after being for a time demoralized owing to huge sales by a house that has been identified with the leading bull clique. Reports of export flour sales at Toledo helped to cause the rally. Closing figures were 1-4c and 1-4c net lower, but firm. Corn finished unchanged to a shade up, oats either not altered or 1-8c higher, and hog products at 2½ 1-2c to 27 1-2c advance.

The Liverpool market closed to-day ⅝d to ¾d lower than yesterday on wheat, and 1⅛d lower on corn. Berlin closed ¾c lower on wheat.

Montreal Grain and Produce.

MONTREAL, Nov. 1.—There was an increased demand from foreign buyers for Manitoba spring wheat and as bids for the low grades were in line in many instances, a fair volume of business was worked, but the bids for the regular grades were 1c per bushel below cost. There was a fairly good demand from local buyers for oats and sales of round lots of extra No. 1 feed, amounting to 70,000 bushels, were made to arrive. The tone of the spot market is very firm on account of the light stock on spot. American No. 2 yellow corn in car lots is firm at 61c, ex-store. A fair trade continues to be done in flour for local account, but the demand for export is slow. Demand for mill feed is good, of which supplies are limited. Cheese and butter

CHARGE WAS DISMISSED

Charge Against V. Veiner and Company, of Toronto, of Alleged False Misrepresentation, Was Dismissed

OTHER CASES

The charge against V. Viener and company of Toronto, who it is alleged, attempted to defraud one Frank White, a flour and feed merchant of this city, was dismissed. Crown Attorney Wood acted for the prosecution and Mr. Basil Hall for the defence. Mr. White, when put into the box, stated that he had given the prisoner a check for $115.75 in payment for a carload of hay on Friday, Oct. 20th. The hay had been shipped from Cannington a day or so before. When Mr. White went to unload the hay on the following Monday he was forbidden todo so by the Grand Trunk authorities, and was told that the hay did not belong to him, but had been shipped to Mr. Savigny on order of Mr. Carmichael, Cannington.

In the meantime the prisoner had cashed Mr. White's check for $115.87 being the purchase price of the hay. Mr. White, before signing the check, had secured an agreement from the prisoner guaranteeing the hay to be of good quality; if not the money was to be refunded. When the hay arrived in Peterborough, it was found hot and steaming. Some conversation had ensued between Mr. White and Mr. Carmichael relative to purchasing a car of hay, but Mr. White had no idea that it was the same car which he had already purchased.

The teller of the Royal Bank was called and recognized the check, and admitted having cashed it.

The next witness called was D. C. Carmichael of Cannington. He admitted having sold the hay to Savigny for Viener and gave considerable evidence concerning the signing of the shipping bill and the transaction of the deal throughout. Following the sale of the hay to Savigny, the prisoner had resold the hay to White unintentionally, under the impression that it was the same party that Mr. Carmichael had been dealing with. Carmichael had also given Viener an order authorizing Mr. Savigny to pay Viener the money for the hay, on receipt of same. But when the hay arrived, Mr. Savigny refused to take it on account of the condition it was in. The deal between Mr. White and the prisoner then followed.

Mr. J. H. Savigny was then called and corroborated what the previous witness had said.

Mr. Sandy, station agent, on being called to the witness box, gave testimony to the effect that the car had been opened without authority to do so. This closed the case.

In dismissing the case, His Worship stated that no guilt had been founded on fraud or misrepresentation. D. C. Carmichael, of Cannington, who was transacting the deal, was recognized as an authorized agent, acting for V. Viener and company. As to the inferior quality of the hay that was another matter.

V. Viener and company, consists of mother and son, the latter being under age. Therefore the court inferred he was not of legal age to do business on his own account.

For riding his bicycle on the sidewalk, a local man was fined $2 and costs, amounting in all to $4.00, in the police court this morning.

A local youth was charged with being found drunk in a public place. He was fined $2 and costs, amounting in all to $5.75, or in default of payment 15 days in gaol. He paid the fine.

George Seney of Havelock, faced a charge of being drunk and disorderly in the police court this morning. "I plead guilty and I am sorry for it," said the prisoner from the dock. Two dollars and costs was the sentence meted out to him. He had not sufficient money with him, but was given a chance to secure it.

MARRIED OVER COFFIN

Special to The Examiner:

HARRISON, N.J., NOV. 2 — Miss Cordelia Harrison, prominent and popular in society here, was married this morning over her mother's coffin. Mrs. Harrison died some hours previous, just after expressing the wish that her daughter's arranged nuptials be not interfered with by her expected demise.

INTERESTING SERVICE

There was an interesting service at Knox church last night, when Mrs. Rogers, who was a delegate at the recent Sunday school convention in Brockville, gave some impressions of the gathering and discussed some of the important matters that had come before the convention. There was a large attendance of teachers and officers of the Sunday school and Mrs. Rogers' remarks were followed with close attention

VERDICT OF $1,800 AGAINST THE C.G.E. FOR DEATH OF HUGH DARKE

Jury Brought in Verdict at 3:40 O'clock This Afternoon After Considering the Case for Over Four Hours---Hold That the Company's Negligence Was Responsible for Fatal Accident---Will Be Appealed.

At 3.40 o'clock this afternoon, the jury in the action brought by Mrs. Darke against the Canadian General Electric Company for $10,000 for the death of her husband, Hugh A. Darke brought in a verdict in her favour, of $1,800. The Company will likely appeal the case. The case went to the Jury at 11 o'clock this morning, after His Lordship, Sir William Mulock, had given them a list of questions in regard to the case, to be answered. At 2.30 o'clock this afternoon the jury returned to the courtroom and handed in a verdict to his Lordship, to the effect that Hugh A. Darke came to his death on the night of June 15th, 1911 ,through the negligence of the defendants; that he was ordered to be present at the machinery on the night in question, that there was a lack of a proper code of signals, and that Thompson was negligent in not looking at the machinery before the power was turned on. The jury decided that Mrs. Darke was entitled to $1,800 at a salary basis of $600, for three years.

His Lordship, however, informed the jury that they had gone outside the questions submitted to them, and asked them to retire to reconsider their verdict.

They returned at 3.40 o'clock with the same verdict.

Afternoon Session.

The afternoon session began with the continuance of the Hillier vs. Chicle Co. case. Miss Hillier was questioned by Mr. O'Connell.

"You were working at this work for about four days before the accident?"

"Yes."

"Who asked you to?"

"Mr. Frank O'Connor."

"You observed the rollers being reversed?"

"Yes."

"And you passed the gum back to be rolled again?"

"Yes."

"How thick would it be?"

"About two inches."

"How long?"

"The piece would be about one foot long, but some are longer than others. Some are cut into four pieces."

"Did you carry the gum around?"

"Yes."

"Why not put it back through?"

"We do not do that the first time. The rollers are not reversed until it it put through twice."

"Then the rollers are put closer together and you put the gum back to trim?"

"Yes."

"You observed this when you worked in the old factory?"

"I was not at it long."

"How many times did it have to go through?"

"Six or seven times."

"How thick would it be then?"

"About the sixteenth part of an inch."

"When these rolls were through and cut, did you pile them?"

"Yes."

"What was Harvey doing when you put that piece of gum through?"

"Going to the steam gauge."

"Where was it?"

"About six feet away."

"Do you push on the gum?"

"No; when the rollers get hold they take it, but I have to guide it."

"You began to put the gum through without knowing whether there was any person to take it?"

"No; but the rollers were reversed for me to do it."

"You received your instructions from Mr. O'Connor?"

"Yes."

"Who usually put the gum through?"

"Two men, and if they were short of men they called on the girls."

"How long did that gum take to pass through?"

"I don't know."

"The rollers were not revolving very fast?"

"No; fairly slowly."

"You were not afraid of getting caught before?"

"No."

"You never complained?"

"No."

"The gloves were quite loose, I suppose?"

"Yes."

"If the rollers caught, they might draw off your hand?"

"Yes, possibly."

"How was your hand?"

"Two fingers on top of sheet and the rest under."

"Do you remember that?"

"Well, if I had held it the other way, my first finger would have been caught."

"Do you know if the Superintendent knew if the gloves were too large?"

"Yes; Mr. O'Connor mentioned it to me."

"There were numbers of gloves in the factory, but he noticed yours."

"I often heard him mention the gloves."

"Mr. O'Connor did not know that you were working at the machine with those gloves?"

"No. He did not."

(Gloves were presented.)

"Is that the size?"

"Yes. Those are similar."

"If you had always been employed in receiving the gum this would not have happened?"

"No."

"Did they pay you during your illness?"

"They gave me $4.50 per week while I was in the hospital."

"What was said about a proposition?"

"They said they would give me $4.50 per week while I was in the hospital, and then promised my job back and that they would pay me $4.50 and pay my board. Then went I got out of the hospital, they said they could only give me $6 per week."

HIS HONOUR'S CHARGE.

In addressing the jury, Judge Mulock, said in part: "This is commonly known as a negligence action, the plaintiff claiming that the company is guilty of an action of negligence causing a death, which entitles the plaintiff to damages. When negligence is used in this connection, it is necessary to remember that negligence caused the action, and it must be negligence that caused the accident. Suppose there are two machines in a place; one is defective and the other is in perfect condition. There are two men working on each machine. One man is injured because of the defectiveness of the machine. Then, if the other man is injured at the perfect one, the company is not liable because there is a defective machine there. It must be the defective one that does the deed."

At this juncture, he thoroughly and clearly defined common and statute law, and showed how a person might be liable under one, and not liable under the other.

Continuing, he said: "If a person is injured, as the result of another person's negligence in connection with the company, the employer is liable. In common law, the company is not liable for the negligence of an employee or servant, but that has been modified, and the company is liable for the negligence of a foreman. I will touch on the evidence only slightly, for it is for you to consider the evidence. I want to impress upon you that you are my superior in the situation, and it is your duty to take out of your mind any observation I may make, unless it compares favourably with your own ideas. Don't be influenced by my view of the facts."

"On the 14th and 15th day of June, Darke was directed by Jeffrys, foreman, to set up the generator. This was a machine that was sold, and was to be set up and tested before shipping. Evidence shows that it was important that it should not move or give, and they have everything for bolting down the machine to the floor to make them immovable. The company says they have a mechanical department to set up machines, and Darke was an assistant and was experienced in setting them up. Anson was general foreman, and he had other foremen under his direction. Jeffrys and Wilson are foremen in the department that put machines to the electric test, and it was their object to put this machine to the electric test. These men inspected the machine in the presence of Darke and reported that it was quite safe. They also told Darke that it was finished and he could go to another job. Is the evidence of Jeffrys and Anson correct on this point? Did they tell Darke that they were satisfied with the set up of the machine. You have it from one witness, Mr. Dobie, that when preparing a machine for the test, it is first secured and then the belting put on, so that a man in Darke's position would draw an inference that when the belt was put on, it was done. Did Jeffrys say to go to another job? Did Darke go to another job. We are told that the machine was handed to the Test Department, and that Wilson ordered that the machine be wired, and evidence says some time was spent in preparing the machine for the test ,and the man in charge was Thompson. He was supervising the work. In the evening about 9.30, Darke reappeared at the machine, and you are to ask yourselves why he was there at that time, prior to it being put in motion. You heard the evidence of the various witnesses who said they were there for a particular purpose. It was their duty to watch it. They were there until Thompson set it going and evidence is that these men had no business to touch anything after it was handed over and their only privilege or duty was to be on hand to do anything it was necessary after it was started. That is a material point. Satisfy yourselves on it. Why was Darke ordered to be present at that time? Was it to do anything further or wait until it started? Because if he had no business to touch it before it was set in motion, he was not doing his duty however good his intentions may have been. It is for you to find, whether his negligent act that disentitled him to meddle with the machine before it was started. You have heard that his action in sitting on the belt was a risky thing. Therefore, did he do a negligent act that disentitled him to relief?"

"The employer is liable if the servant or foreman was negligent, unless the other servant (Darke), was guilty of a contributory or later negligence. It is the duty of the servant to avoid the consequence of his master's neg-

WILL BEHEAD MUTINEERS

Examiner Special.

PEKIN, NOV. 2.—The new coalition between the government of imperialists and the leading revolutionists is having trouble in stemming the tide of rebellion in the southern provinces. Word comes early this morning that the rebel troops there continue to burn cities and rob residents. A good many mutinous regiments in these parts will be satisfied with nothing less than a republic. It is expected there will be a wholesale beheading of the men who will not submit to new rule.

NAVY TO ATTACK

Italians Are Preparing to Assail Constantinople and a Big Naval Battle is Looked For

READY TO SAIL

Special to The Examiner:

ROME, NOV. 2.—Rear Admiral Aubrey, in the command of the Italian fleet at Tripoli, has informed his Government that the Italian Army is now in such a shape that he could undertake more agressive measures in attacking Dardenlles or Constantinople, without imperilling the army It is expected that the largest part of the fleet will soon steam to Turkish coasts, where there may be some real warfare, as it is amply protected by inundated mines.

MANITOBA SCHOOL QUESTION MAY BE TO THE FORE AGAIN

Special to The Examiner:

OTTAWA, ONT., NOV. 2.—Now that the Conservative party are again installed in power, his Grace Archbishop Langevin of St. Bonafice, Manitoba, has revived a campaign for remedial legislation for the minority in Manitoba, and on Sunday last preached a sermon at St. Constant in La Prairie county, in which he declared that the School Question had never been settled and announced that if he could get the necessary permission he would make a tour of the province of Quebec to arouse public opinion upon the subject. The intimation has rather startled political circles here and it is thought the Manitoba School Question will be reopened with all its bitterness.

SPECIAL WAITERS

HALIFAX, N.S., NOV. 2.—One hundred and twenty special waiters from H. M. C. S. Niobe, and from the local garrison have been engaged for to-night by the caterer in charge of the banquet to Premier Borden, which promises to be the biggest political dinner ever held here. One thousand dozen oysters and fifteen hudnred chickens will help along with the feast. Hundreds cannot get tickets.

WEDDING BELLS

FISHBURNE—WETHERUP.

A very pretty wedding was celebrated last evening at the home of Mr. John Wetherup, of 36 Cambridge street, Lindsay, when Mr. S. R. Fishburne, of Peterborough, was united in the bond of holy matrimony to Miss Ella Elsie Wetherup. The Rev. Mr. Wallace of Lindsay, performed the ceremony.

The bride, who was unattended, was charmingly attired in a blue silk dress, with a black hat, trimmed with ostrich plumes, and came in leaning on the arm of her father. Mrs. Mazee of Omemee, played the wedding march. After the ceremony a dainty wedding supper was provided, and Mr. and Mrs. Fishburne left for Peterborough, where, at 6 George street, they will take up their abode.

Mr. Fishburne is the fireman on the Grand Trunk Lakefield train.

FELL FROM LADDER

Sherlock Thompson, an inspector in the employ of the Bell Telephone Co. had the misfortune to fall from a ladder, while repairing wires at the National Hotel, sustaining several severe bruises. Fortunately no bones were broken. Dr. Cameron attended the young man, who was removed to his home, 376 Stewart street, where he will be confined for some days.

GIRL CLAIMS DAMAGES FROM CANADIAN CHICLE COMPANY

Action Commenced Before Mr. Justice Mulock at the Fall Assizes To-day—Plaintiff, Miss Grace Hillier, Describes the Manner in Which Accident Occurred---Says She Has Been Disabled Ever Since.

At the close of the case of Mrs. Darke vs. the C. G. E., the case of Grace Hillier vs. the Canadian Chicle Co., was commenced at the Assizes to-day. Messrs. Bennett and Goodwill appeared on behalf of Miss Hillier, while the defence was conducted by Messrs. O'Connell and Gordon. Mr. Bennett opened the proceedings by addressing the Jury, and explained his version of the case. He said that the Company had a defective system of work, inasmuch as the gloves supplied to the girls were too large, and made them liable to get caught in the machine, the very thing that occurred in the present incident. He also endeavoured to show that a young girl of her age was not permitted, within the law, to work at a machine, such as that in which the plaintiff was injured.

The stenographer for Bennett and Goodwill was then called and testified to having served the Company with a notice of injury.

Grace Hillier, the plaintiff, was put in the box, and questioned by Mr. Bennett. She said she was sixteen years of age at the time of the accident, but 17 now. She was employed to pack the gum and label the boxes. Mr. Frank O'Connor was superintending the work. She had no contract with the Company to do any other class of work.

Mr. Harvey gave her instructions to work on this machine, on the 12th of June. She had previously worked on the machine, however under the instruction of Mr. O'Connor. She then described the nature of the machine and also the nature of her work in connection with it.

How It Happened.

"How did it happen?" asked Mr. Bennet.

"I was putting the gum through, guiding it up to the rollers with my fingers, as the gum might catch in the side, if not guided. I was putting it through the rollers, and Mr. Harvey was receiving it at the other side. My fingers caught in the rollers, and I screamed. Mr. Harvey then raised the rollers and set me free. There was nothing to prevent my fingers going between the rollers. There could be some little thing arranged to warn you."

"How long were you in the hospital?"

"Five weeks."

Being then questioned, she stated that she received a bill from the hospital for $29.50. She had not been employed, since the accident, at any place. She has lost the use of three fingers, and the hand is disabled. The caught were about 8 inches in diameter.

Mr. O'Connell, counsel for the defence, then cross-examined the witness.

At this juncture the case was adjourned until 2 o'clock.

CONSERVATIVE PAPER APPLAUDS LIBERAL ADVANCE

OTTAWA, November 1.—The Citizen (Conservative) to-day says, under the heading of "Progressive Plank":

"The Liberal party in Ontario has shown itself particularly sensitive to public feeling in the adoption as a plank in its reconstructed platform of the principle of taxation of land values. According to the published schedule of reforms to be advocated in the future by one of the great political parties in this Province, the system whereby industry is encouraged, and the holding of land out of use rendered unprofitable, is to find a foremost place. It may not be even too much to say that this particular plank will eventually prove the most effective and popular of the various measures to be advocated by the Liberals of Ontario in their efforts to again control the destinies of the Province.

"It is a matter of regret that the Government has allowed the Opposition to forestall it in the advocacy or adoption of a principle which has successfully appealed to the democracy of Britain on three successive occasions, and which is to-day engaging the attention of progressive and enterprising localities throughout the western half of our own land. The immediate results of the taxation of land values, rather than the improvements upon the land, have become so visible in the cases of Canadian western communities that academic discussion of the economic aspect of the question has no longer obstructed the progress of the movement. The West has been 'shown,' to use a native colloquialism.

"In Ontario the educational movement is bearing fruit. It is rather disappointing to find that the Government of the day has thus far failed to recognize the growth of the sentiment in favour of tax reform in this direction, but now that the issue is fairly before the people the opportunity to impress the Administration with the trend of public thought along these lines should not be neglected."

LOCAL MAN HAS PERFECTED MOST USEFUL INVENTION

After working on the project for some months, Mr. W. W. Edwards, George street, this city, has perfected and patented an invention that promises to bring most satisfactory results. He has devised a hydraulic shock absorber for automobiles, and will place the new system on the market at once. There is one hydraulic shock absorber apparatus already in use, but its cost has interfered with its chances for popularity. Mr. Edwards' invention, however, does the work much better and the cost of manufacture is cut in two. The system commonly used on motor cars is the friction method and the device perfected by the local inventor is much more satisfactory in every way. For some time one has been in use on the motor-car owned by Dr. Frederick and it has given entire satisfaction. Mr. Edwards intends to commence the manufacture of the absorbers in Peterborough, and expects that the utility of the article and its cheapness in cost will find a ready market. It differs largely from the other hydraulic systems in the construction of its valves and piston. An Examiner representative was given a good opportunity to test its powers of resistance this morning, and found that the new invention answers fully all demands made upon it.

THE MASQUERADE PARTY WAS A GREAT SUCCESS

The spirit of Hallowe'en was rampant at the Y. W. C. A. last evening, when the annual Hallowe'en masquerade was held, the event proving one of the most successful and enjoyable in the history of the Association. About one hundred girls were present and the costumes were decidedly the feature of the evening. There was no formal programme, the time being spent in the playing of the different games appropriate to such an occasion. The electric lights were turned out and the gymnasium and other rooms were lighted by grate fires, illuminated pumpkins and Japanese lanterns, the effect being wholly pleasing. A witches' frolic, fortune-telling, and other similar amusements were indulged in, and the occasion will long be remembered by those who were fortunate enough to be present.

ELECTRIC RAILWAY

Line Between Port Hope and Orillia Via Peterborough Will be Commenced Next Year

SURVEYING NOW

The Lindsay Warder says:

The survey for the line of an electric road between Port Hope and Orillia through Lindsay is under way. Mr. Harry Graham, son of one of the firm of Graham and Mann, the parties who propose the construction and operation of the road is now in town, and with a gang of men has commenced the survey of the proposed line east of Lindsay.

The Warder in an interview with Mr. Graham, received such information as was possible for him to impart at the initial stage.

Port Hope is the proposed place from which the line will start. At this point it will connect with an electric line running from Toronto to Montreal, coming west to Peterborough. Omemee and Lindsay will be touched and thence on to Barrie and Orillia. As to how the road will run, west of Lindsay the engineer could not speak in a definite way as all plans and specifications are not fully prepared. The new line will take its course north of the G.T.R. from Peterborough to Lindsay and traverse Ridout street on its way to Kent street.

A street car service will be given the residents of probably 15 minutes intervention. Construction work will start next spring and be pushed as fast as possible towards completion.

Power to the car will be furnished from the rails. This will do away with the cost of erecting poles for trolley wire. Niagara Falls power will furnish the electricity used in operating the cars. Stations will be erected at suitable distances along the proposed line and switches or sidings will be placed whereon cars can be backed and unloaded for the convenience of farmers or residents who may order coal or other requisites in connection with domestic life. The coal cars will be operated automatically, so no shovelling will be required to transfer the dusky diamonds to the purchaser's vehicle.

Very little grading is required in forming a roadbed. Cement trestles will be erected where necessity compels the company to carry the rails over gullies and ravines.

The reporter asked Mr. Graham if any danger might be dreaded from the electric current passing through the rails to cars. He replied that there was no danger as the construction of the rail is such that it would be next thing to an impossibility for an accident to occur from this source.

The company expect that the purchase of right of way may be expensive as the lands to be traversed by the line are of a valuable quality.

This will add more to Lindsay's greatness as a centre and the growing pains which it has had of late will be augmented in a greater degree.

SALT LAKE CITY, NOV. 2.—Kyrle Bellew, who has had a most adventurous career on the ocean, railroad and stage and was regarded as one of the foremost of the English actors, died this morning from pneumonia.

THEY WALKED

The Grand Jury established a precedent for this city yesterday, inasmuch that they were compelled to walk around to their various ports of call in the performance of their official duties, as jurymen. On starting out they secured the services of a team and rig from a local liveryman, and everything went well until the approach of the hill leading up to St. Vincent's Orphanage was reached. Here one of the horses balked, and absolutely refused to make the ascent of the hill. The foreman of the Jury then suggested that they walk the rest of the way. This suggestion was accordingly carried out. They then walked to the Protestant Home, St. Joseph's Hospital, Nicholls Hospital, Margaret Cox Home for Girls and other public institutions, and to use the expression of one of the pedestrians, "they walked until dark."

EXCEDINGLY THIN.

The Dominion elections in September were a wet blanket upon business, and fall and early winter trading have been none too brisk. Now we have, without any legitimate excuse whatever, the Provincial elections, brought on by Sir James Whitney a year before they are nominally due, to further bedevil business. Sir James has the flabby excuse that he wants to save the country the cost of the by-elections—$15,000. Why, the elections at the holiday season will represent a loss of more than $15,000 to the merchants of Peterborough alone. The excuse is exceedingly thin.

SINGING SMALL.

The Whitney Government has adopted the chrysanthemum as their flower in relation to the bilingual school question. 'Mum seems to be the word, and the rank and file candidates have apparently been instructed to sing small. Mr. G. H. Ferguson, M.P.P., who was unanimously nominated as Conservative candidate for Grenville yesterday, in his address, made no reference to bilingual schools. Yet, it was the same Mr. Ferguson who introduced the resolution for the abolition of bilingual schools, into the Legislature, last session. Who "called him off"? His silence in his nomination address is suggestive.

MR. BORDEN'S IMPASSE.

Mr. Borden is to be banquetted in Halifax. He will, in his after-dinner oartion, have to do a good deal of hedging to square the speech he made there some time ago with the situation Mr. Bourassa has placed him in. In that speech he advocated a Canadian-built navy and warmed the cockles of Haligonian hearts by painting the glories of the revived Nova Scotia shipbuilding that would be restored by naval construction. Now that dream is over. Mr. Bourassa and his instruments in the cabinet, Mr. Monk, et al, have brought a rude awakening. Mr. Monk says that Halifax cannot have a slice of the navy "because there ain't going to be no navy." Mr. Borden has reached an impasse. He cannot consistently with self-respect go back on the highest Canadian and imperial ideals in the matter of a navy, and his Nationalist allies, with whom he has formed a deliberate compact, the Mephistos, to whom he has sold his political soul, will not let him go forward.

FIFTY YEARS BEHIND.

The manifesto of Sir James Whitney narrows down to pretty much of a township election card when the complaint is voiced that by settling Northern Ontario, expenditures are incurred without a return of revenue. In the same manifesto it is pointed out that the value of the mineral output jumped from eleven to thirty millions from 1904 to 1910 and revenue from mining sources from $70,000 annually to $771,000. The Whitney government seems to have done well out of New Ontario, and there is no doubt about it, if the sixteen million acres of agricultural lands in the north were properly settled, it would mean added wealth to every industry in Old Ontario. It is strikingly true in the case of Brantford, a city of agricultural industries. Sir James Whitney is fifty years behind the times in seeking to make the colonization of a new country pay as it goes, and it was not that spirit which kindled the present prosperity of the Canadian West.—Brantford Expositor.

The despatches report the death in Montreal of another man, from drinking wood alcohol. Nothing remarkable in that; thousands of men die every day from drinking other kinds of alcohol. They may not be as swift, but they are just as sure.

SPARING THE COMBINES.

The Borden government has one good quality that shines out a little conspicuously, and even consistently, at Thanksgiving time. They are grateful for the help that put them in power. Mr. Borden was helped to power by several agencies, and many of them he has recognized. He was helped to power by Mr. Bourassa, and "Nationalism." Of course, Mr. Bourassa and Nationalism, got a big share of the plums—he was first served, and three of his nominees were made members of Mr. Borden's cabinet, with the most important portfolios. The importance Mr. Borden attached to the "French Domination" element, is shown by the fact that he promptly recognized this element at the expense of an Ontario element, of a diametically opposite character. The flag wavers and the faith defenders who stand for a united empire, British connection and Imperial interests — the faith defenders to whom French in any form is as a red flag to a bull — were slapped in the face. Mr. Borden was helped to power by the big financial interests, represented largely by a few renegade Grits in Toronto. This element is recognized by the appointment of a Liberal financial magnate to the position of Finance Minister. The combine element that gave other mighty help to Mr. Borden, has not been specially recognized by cabinet honours, but it is not to be overlooked. It is to get its reward in another way. The new Minister of Justice, Hon. C. J. Doherty, has, out of deference no doubt, to the noble combine principle, stepped in and removed the danger of the shoe combine being investigated. The investigation into the United Shoe Machinery Company, of New Jersey, ordered on complaint of Mayor Drouin of Quebec city, that the company was acting in restraint of trade, has been held up by the new Conservative Government at Ottawa. Judge Lavendeau, chairman of the Investigation Commission, was this morning notified to suspend all proceedings until Hon. C. J. Doherty, the new Minister of Justice, has come to a decision about the case. What decision can the new Minister of Justice come to except to delay the operation of the probe in the interests of the combine in question? The only decision open to him is to quash the investigation proceedings. They are in operation now and if the truth is sought, the only way to get it is to continue the investigation. The new government is showing that it is not the people's government but the government and the guardian of the special interests that are, in essence, hostile to the public interests.

STRIKING RESPONSIBILITY.

The Toronto News, a thick and thin defender of the Whitney government, has the following:

"Whatever may be the report of Chief Justice Meredith on the proposed Workman's Compensation Bill, it is good to know that the principle of such legislation has a warm friend in the Federal Minister of Labour.

Mr. T. W. Crothers has offered to the Chief Justice all the resources of his Department in preparing the draft bill, and has promised the most ardent co-operation on behalf of the Dominion Government within the limit set by the constitution. Workmen's compensation touches upon civil rights and is a Provincial affair. But the offer of the Minister shows his interest and bodes well for his success as Minister."

This is a red herring drawn across the scent that leads to Sir James Whitney's accountability, in respect of the Workman's Compensation Act. What in the world has the Dominion Minister of Labour to do with this legislation? It doesn't make a pin's difference whether he is friendly or hostile to it. He may be "a warm friend to the principle of such legislation." Every workman in Canada, who daily takes his life in his hands when he takes his place in the rank of factory workers, is a friend to the principle of legislation that will improve the Compensation Act. And much good it does him so far. Sir James Whitney has treated organized labour, which represents the chief interest in having the law made plain and explicit and to th point, in this very matter, with the utmost contempt. If the News could assert that "such" legislation has a warm friend" in Sir James Whitney, it would say something to the point. He is the man responsible for doing justice to the workingman and his family, in the matter of providing legal remedies for the injustice to them inherent in the present complicated Compensation Act. Hon. Mr. Crothers has no more practical responsibility in the matter, and no more actual power in the premises, than the child emperor of China. The above paragraph from the News, is only intended to draw the fire of attack in this matter from Sir James Whitney. He alone is responsible, not only for heartless indifference to the interests of workingmen and their families in respect of making the Compensation Act simple and workable, but for neglect to implement his promises of law reform, so as to protect the workmen from the disability he lies under in the matter of the possibility of wearing him down by repeated appeals—in case a jury awards him substantial damages—a condition that gives ultimate victory to the largest purse.

N. W. ROWELL, NEW LIBERAL LEADER, MANY-SIDED MAN

Newton Wesley Rowell, K.C., was celebrating his forty-fourth birthday yesterday and was trying as well as a busy day in court would permit to get used to the Liberal party's birthday present. Few men have ever received just that sort of a birthday remembrance, and it is a pretty safe statement that not one of the other forty-three birthdays has made the same impression on the new leader of the Liberal party in Ontario as will be made by this one. Mr. Rowell was born in 1867, and is just four months younger than the Canadian Confederation. That shows what a young country Canada is, because, although he has mounted high in the legal profession, Mr. Rowell is still a young man.

The new Liberal leader is a farmer's son. He was born in London Township, Middlesex County. His father, Joseph Rowell, was an Englishman, who came to this country as a young man. His mother was a Miss Green, a lady of Irish descent. Mr. Rowell as a boy attended the local school, in all probability a little red schoolhouse, and as all other boys in his position, assisted his father in the farm work. His first experience in town life was when he took to the market the products of his father's farm.

Educated in London.

He completed his education in London, Ont., and elected to become a lawyer. He was called to the bar just twenty years ago and at once settled down in Toronto and began practice there. Since then he has steadily advanced to the front rank of his profession, but has never at a time been completely engrossed in it to the exclusion of other activities. He has been engaged in politics ever since he has been of age. He began this work in 1888, and has taken some active part in every election since that time. His removal to Toronto did not change him in that respect. In the Dominion campaign of 1900 he contested the riding of East York against W. F. Maclean. Mr. Maclean won out then, but he has always since expressed a genuine respect for his opponent of those days. In 1902, when sir James Whitney made his first election tour through Northern Ontario, Sir George Ross, on account of ill-health, was unable to follow him. Mr. Rowell was called upon and addressed a series of meetings right on the Conservative leader's heels.

Mr. Rowell has been active in other ways. He is a prominent Methodist and has taken a large part in the activities of that church. The same progressive attitude he showed in politics was also manifested here. He was one of the first advocates of church union, and one of the ablest workers in the Laymen' Missionary Movement.

Law, politics aad the church have not taken up all of Mr. Rowell's time. He has found time also for recreation. Two or three years ago he was a member of the rink which won the Flavelle Trophy in curling. He has played some golf, but his favourite outdoor recreation now is riding. He is an enthusiastic horseman, and almost every morning takes a ride. His social amusements he has found chiefly in his own home and amongst his friends. He is a member of the St. George's Society and of the Irish Protestant Benevolent Society.

Mr. Rowell is a member of the Senate of the University of Toronto, and also of the Senate and Board of Regents of Victoria College.

Never an Extremist

The new leader is a man of firm convictions, but never an extremist. He is the kind of a man who can disagree with people without attempting to force his opinions upon them or endeavouring to rule their conduct by his ideas. In his views he is progressive, but eminently practical. The plan which he is to follow or the idea which he is to advocate must be within the realm of possibility. He is the kind of a man who insists on promising only what he believes he can carry out.

Mr. Rowell is a quiet-mannered man, genial, but not hail fellow well met. He has a strong personal magnetism, however, which attracts men to him and the evident and genuine sincerity of the man wins the devotion of his friends and the respect of those opposed to him. He is very successful as a platform speaker. Combined with a clear cut logic and a faculty for emphasizing the essential points, he has great oratorical power through which he gets hold of an audience in a magnetic way.

What the World Says.

The following tribute to the new Liberal leader from the Toronto World is of especial interest when it is remembered that in 1900 Mr. Rowell ran against W. F. Maclean in East York. Mr. Rowell was defeated then, but the fight was a hot one.

The World says:

"Newton Wesley Rowell represents the new movement in politics, the movement of the new generation, towards more progressive ideas and away from the hoary but unvenerable bogeymen that have done duty for party idols in the past. Mr. Rowell represents the new movement by the desire of those who constitute a great stream of the new current of political tendency, and it remains to be seen how far he represents that stream, and how inherently he partakes of its nature. Those who know him best do not believe that he will float like a mere block, to be carried as the current determines. It will be a great gain on recent experience should he not become stranded, or develop a partiality for back eddies.

"He is young, and clean, and brave, and able, and eloquent. He has a reputation for keenness and shrewdness which he will have a full scope in the political field to justify. If he can manage to interpret the young Liberalism of Ontario to itself he will come closer to the heartbeat of the Province than those are able to do who warn their followers of the danger of life and action. Mr. Rowell hardly needs to be reminded that a great fight can be made for God and the people, and that no one will ever expect to derive inspiration from the slogan, 'For God and the corporations.'"

EDITORIAL NOTES.

A Rowell in the flanks of the steed of provincial progress is needed and we've got it.

Toronto Saturday Night says that the flag waver is generally the man with the coin, or the man with an axe to grind.

Mr. Borden finds the "chickens coming home to roost" with a vengeance. There will be 1500 offered up at the Borden banquet to-night.

The new Liberal leader has an advantage over the Conservative leader, Sir James Whitney. He will have no awkward question submitted by his followers to answer.

Postmaster-General Pelletier thinks it a part of his official duty to 'stamp' out the Canadian navy, anyway the Premier has given his consent that the navy will be "Monk-eyed with."

A clever pun is excusable. For instance, Colonel A. T. Thompson's remark that while the Liberal party is no longer led by the Canadian premier it is led by the premier Canadian.

After all, remarks the Brantford Expositor, the question of the leadership of the Liberal party in Ontario is not of as much moment as what the leader of the Conservative party has done, or rather, what he has not done after having been in power for seven years.

Hon. A. G. MacKay, retired Liberal leader, is esteemed where he is known, traducers to the contrary notwithstanding. Leading Liberals in his home town, Owen Sound, have secured his consent to run again in North Grey, a Conservative stronghold, with an adverse majority at the last election of 342.

AS TO PATRONAGE.

(Ottawa Free Press)

The whole system of patronage-giving is a Babel of rottenness. Once a cabinet minister permits his course to be dictated, or even affected by patronage considerations, he has opened the door to a host of evils.—Toronto News.

Is this a slap at the new Postmaster-General for recommending the appointment (since ratified by the Cabinet) of Hon. L. O. Taillon, a many-times defeated candidate and long a discard in the game of politics, to be Postmaster of Montreal, when there was a good man, for whom the News had itself pleaded, in the person of Mr. L. J. Gaboury, the assistant-postmaster, who was entitled to promotion, had it not been for the "system of patronage?"

There never was a more flagrant case of departure from an Opposition pledge than there has been in this case. When the late Mr. Harwood was appointed seven years ago, it was complained by the Conservatives that he was too old. He was then only 66, but he has been succeeded by a man who is 71 in the year of his first appointment.

How is that for "Civil Service reform?"

Mr. Borden and his defenders will be kept busy if he and they try to justify every departure made from their platform, in its practical application to the government of the country.

ORIGIN OF "HOBSON'S CHOICE"

From the Strand Magazine.

"It is a case of Hobson's choice," is a phrase used by many persons without knowing exactly what it means. As a matter of fact, this adage has been handed down from the Seventeenth Century, and had its origin in the eccentricities of one Tobias Hobson, a carrier of Cambridge, who died in 1630. In addition to his ordinary business he kept a stable, and let out horses to the students at the university.

Hobson made it an unalterable rule, however, that every animal should have an equal period of rest and work, and never would let one out of its turn. Consequently, instead of being allowed to select the horse they fancied, his customers had to take the one that stood next to the door. If it did not meet with their approval they had to do without a ride. Hence the proverbial expression, "Hobson's choice," used to signify a choice without an alternative.

BAKER ADVISES AGAINST TOBACCO AND LIQUOR TO BECOME STAR PLAYER

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 2.—"Home Run Baker," the star batter of the Philadelphia Athletics, is the most persistent and consistent dodger of the limelight in the public eye. With the entire country discussing his baseball achievements, with writers and artists searching sea, earth sky for quaint synonyms for his very convenient name and rhymesters of the press shattering all precedent in the number of changes they ring on both name and achievement, Baker himself regards the entire performance with a lack-lustre eye and refuses to join in the enthusiasm in any way.

"It's gettin' to be a nuisance," Baker plaintively said to-day. "I can't go away from the house for a few minutes but what I come back to find a lot of chaps camped in the parlour, waiting to interview me. Then the photographers are after me, and even sketch artists come bothering around. This morning one of the papers phoned while I was out, and as good as gave orders that I was to come down to the office and pose for pictures. I took no notice, and they sent a photographer and made me get out in the shed with a broom in my hand, to look like a picture of the bat. It makes me tired."

He is without a trace of self-consciousness, calm-eyed, and natural. He is decidedly outspoken when he touches upon any incident vital to the profession he follows, as, for instance, when referring to the ungentle art of spiking, as practised by one Snodgrass. He is very uncommunicative, however, on the subject that several millions of Americans are burning to know about the Baker who is not seen on the diamond, the Baker of private life.

"I was brought up on a farm in Trappe, Md. In 1886, if you want to know the exact date, I suppose you would like me to say that I began playing baseball when I could just about toddle and made home runs before I was out of the school age. Well, I can't accommodate you, for it was twenty years later, in 1908, before I really got into the game in earnest.

"I went to the village school at Trappe and learned about as little as the other boys did. I had to help on the farm and I grew up a husky chap, with no bad habits, a fine, healthy appetite, and had as good a time growing up as any other country boy. Don't forget that part. I'm a country boy, with no city fol-de-rols, and when I get through playing baseball back I go to the country and enjoy life as I am accustomed to. No 'great white way' for mine. Trappe is lively enough for me.

"I next played ball with Sparrows Point team in 1907, and in the spring of 1908 I hopped to the Tri-State League at Reading, and it was while playing there that one of Connie Mack's scouts found me in the fall of 1908. I joined the Athletics in the fall of 1908, and have been with them since.

"If any American boy can gather encouragement from that dope to try for the bush league with the hope of getting higher, I shall be glad to have helped him, but I pass on the proposition of handing out advice.

"There's one thing, though, that you might put in. I don't drink or smoke. Never did drink or smoke. If any youngster wants advice from one who doesn't mean to preach, there it is. Leave cigarettes or tobacco in any form alone and don't touch 'booze' now or at any time. It's the usual advice and doesn't carry much weight as a rule, but coming from a ball player perhaps it may mean a little more to the American kids.

"There is no rule about smoking in the big league. They don't care for you to smoke in uniform, though. Some smoke; some don't touch tobacco. The managers think the men are old enough to know their own minds about such things. Mine is the total abstinence platform for both booze and tobacco."

AMERICAN RUGBY BECOMING MORE LIKE ENGLISH GAME

BROOKLYN, Nov.1.—Every game of football played this year has brought out the fact that the American game is rapidly acquiring some of the elements of the British rugby sport. There are many points, since the elimination of mass players, that are similar in both, and it is only a question of time, according to some experts, before the American college game will assimilate still more of the principles of the British pastime.

Probably the most noteworthy feature is the fact that football has been made more open ,resembling rugby in this particular respect more than in any other. By one of the last modifications adopted at a recent meeting of coaches and members of the Rules Committee, an offensive player, carrying the ball, shall receive no assistance from any of his team-mates. This was adopted to eliminate in a large measure the many injuries due to the mass play and to interference. It provides for more individuality as in rugby ,and also makes the sport more spectacular.

Another feature of similarity has been brought about by the use of the forward pass. Ever since the new play was placed in the code, until this season, a penalty was given the team which failed to complete the play, providing the ball struck the ground before hitting another player. Since the fifteen yards penalty has been removed and only an additional down is charged for failure to complete the play, the forward pass will be used more than in the past.

The tendency now is to give the spectator a more brilliant and more spectacular exhibition. With the forward pass and long, sweeping runs, football is rapidly taking on many of the features of the game of our British cousins.

The new rules are meeting with favour among players, spectators and coaches, and it is not expected that the immediate future will see any of those sweeping changes necessary several years ago.

In "Great Moments of Football," in the American Magazine for November ,Edward Lyell Fox tells of football defeats that were turned into victories by a tongue-lashing. He writes:

"There are instances, however, whereby coaches have won games all unknown to the public. These are crises that have been faced in the dressing-room, between the halves, with the team stretched out, dirty and bruised. Here enters the psychological, to say nothing of the dramatic. Lashed by coaches' tongues or stirred by the appeal personal, an apparently disorganized and defeated rabble often becomes a steady but furious fighting unit. For instance:

"In 1905 Pennsylvania went to their dressing-room after playing a 6 to 6 first half with Harvard. The tie score was misleading. Harvard had played the better football. They had ripped the Red and Blue line to tatters. And Harvard would have crushed Pennsylvania if Mike Murphy, the veteran trainer, had not jumped upon a table and talked three minutes to the team. Murphy, like Antony, was no orator.

"Do you want a lot of bean-eaters up there in Boston to crow over the hash their team made of you?' cried he. 'They'll turn that city inside out and on good ePnn. money at hat! Your friends'll be courtin' free lunch counters for weeks if you let those dubs get away with this! Myself—it almost made me cry to see that big stiffs walk all over you.' (He gulped noticeably.) 'Because I know how good you are. You weren't right that half. You'll kill 'em now. You've got to. Think of the crowd. And say, fellows, if there's no mother, father, sister or girl up there watchin', just think of me, fellows. Think of me, that takes care of you all. For I've got the 'con,' boys.'

"He coughed, brushed his eyes with the back of his hand, and faltered on:

"'I won't' be with you very much longer, and I want you to win this game.'

"He finished speaking and stole away without a word. There was no cheering; the men were thinking too hard. The next half Harvard found a different Pennsylvania team—a team whose emotions were keyed up to such a pitch that their fierce football has never since been seen on Franklin Field. Harvard was dazed, swept away, and beaten—because a man spoke. To-day Murphy is alove and well."

TY COBB FOR HIGHLANDERS

PHILADELPHIA, Nov. 2. — Ty Cobb, regarded as the greatest ball player of a century, may be seen in the uniform of a New York Highlander next season.

Cobb's contract with the Detroit team expires this year, and Pres. Ban Johnson, of the American League, has figured that with Ty Cobb in the line-up the Highlanders would be the biggest drawing card of the American League.

Following the world's series game here Jennings of the Tigers and Johnson held a conference, the subject of which is understood to have been the transfer of Cobb from Detroit to New York.

While neither Jennings nor Johnsonwould talk, it is common gossip among baseball men here that Johnson is planning to make it doubly hot for the National League in at least four cities next season. These four cities are Boston ,where McAleer is to run the team; Cleveland, where Harry Davis probably will shine; Chicago, where Callahan will manage the White Sox; and New York, with Hal Chase as manager and Ty Cobb as a sidelight to draw the crowds.

Ready To Face Music

CHICAGO, Nov. 1.—President John T. Brush ,of the New York National League Baseball Club, issued a statement yesterday in reply to the charges of ticket scalping which President Ban Johnson, of the American League, is reported to have made. The letter is as follows:

"B. B. Johnson, Esq., President,
American League Baseball Club.
Chicago.

"Dear Sir,—My attention has been called to a recent newspaper article, attributed to you, to the effect that eight or nine thousand tickets for the recent world's series were given to speculators by the New York club at an advance of $1 the ticket; that while you exonerate me personally, the article states that you know the essential facts and would investigate the scandal if you had the sanction of August Hermann and T. J. Lynch.

"As the public has heard a great deal of late concerning speculators, ticket scandals, investigations and the expulsion of the New York Club from the National League, I wish to say to you that you need not wait one moment for the consent of Messrs. Hermann and Lynch in beginning an investigation, so far as the New York club is concerned.

"You have my consent and may have the full- co-operation of the employees of the New York club during the investigation.

"If what is charged in the article is true, they wish to know it. If it is found not true, then that fact should be made public.—Respectfully yours

"JOHN T. BRUSH,
"President, New York National League Baseball Club."

Mr. Brush is ill here at a hotel. He came to Chicago about a week ago to consult with a physician. In the article which was "brought" to Mr. Brush's attention, Ban Johnson was quoted as saying that he would be able to give to the National Commission the names of people who obtained 9,000 seats at a single haul.

CHICAGO BANNER BASEBALL CITY

Although no official figures have been given out, unofficial figures for the season of 1911 show that the followers of the big league games have increased in the past year in the same proportion that they have in former seasons.

Every summer more and more fans are made, and the old ones stick to the games and the crowds increase from season to season at a rate that gladdens the magnates and makes the ball players feel very secure of their future in the game. The past decade has seen the attendance figures for big leagues more than double. The future, however, will not show the same proportion of increase each year ,because the fans are now so numerous that it will be impossible to keep up the yearly growth, although the number of fans each season may be greater than in any previous season.

The club owners in the minor leagues have complained during the past summer that the attendance has not been as good as in former years, but in the two big leagues that has not been the case.

The tight race in the National League right up to the end of the summer might account for the increased crowds in the old league, but that argument will not hold good for the American League, where the victory of the Athletics was far too one-sided to bring out the banner assemblages. And the American League figures show just as large an increase as the National.

Chicago Banner Baseball City

Chicago was the banner city in the major leagues in 1910, and from unofficial data of 1911 it is still leading all the other cities of the two big leagues. Over 1,200,000 admissions were paid, according to the official figures in 1910 in Chicago, and it is figured that the number will be near 1,500,000 in the past summer.

The White Sox drew much better than they did in 1910 and the Cubs kept up their former record, but did not increase it ,for they had the high water mark in last year's figures.

New York was second last year in attendance and still holds the same position, but has increased because of the winning of the Giants.

The National League was in the lead in attendance in 1910 and will leads, but the figures of 3,692,290, which were attained last year, will be close to 4,000,000 for the season of 1911, because of the natural increase in the number of fans and because of the close race that the three leading teams have furnished. The American League in 1910 showed that 3,566,837 fans watched games, and this figure will be a quarter of a million more for this year if the opinions of the experts are correct. The grand total of attendance of the two big leaguers last year was 7,279,157, and the leaders of the two leagues believe that this figure will be near to the 8,000,000 for the past summer.

World's Series Shows Increase

The world's series is a good barometer by which to judge the gain in the major league enthusiasm for the game. The contest between the Giants and the Athletics outdrew all other series for the big title by many thousands, but much of the increase this year was on account of the fact that the games were played in New York, where the new Polo Grounds Stadium will accommodate much larger crowds than can be taken care of on any other field.

RUGBY

Montreal Herald: Where Toronto has the bulge on McGill, and every other team in Canada, for that matter, is at quarter. Pete Campbell is the best quarterback playing the game in Eastern Canada to-day, and the present generation of footballers can't recall his like. He gets the ball away fast and true, has the speed of a scared deer, can pick out a hole before it is made, tackles hard and takes lots of punishment, besides having an A1 set of football brains. He and Maynard are the Toronto team.

Toronto Telegram: The Argonauts have won four straight Rugby games in the Interprovincial schedule. They have beaten all three of their competitors and trounced Montreal twice. They have the hardest part of their series yet to play at Hamilton and Ottawa in the next two weeks. One victory will assure them of the honours, but it is a tough proposition to win at either centre of Rugby activity.

Still Argonauts have beaten them both here, and now that they have shown signs of development along the lines of real Rugby and have actually handed out football of the winning or inside kind, substituting this brand for the old two blind bucks and as blind a kick, they ought, if not to win both, at least to land one of the two.

And that is the Argos without Lawson, Gall or Foulds. When these three men behind the line, which in itself is the strongest and most aggressive in the union, it isn't hard to figure out the championship to the Oarsmen. Saturday they were on the loose ball like wolves and outclassed Montreal in tackling.

Figuring without any chance of contradiction Hugh Gall is the greatest punting half with foot and brains in the game; Lawson as the most wonderful plunging half in years, and Foulds, as manipulator of signals, and handler of the team, it looks like a good win at Hamilton next Saturday.

Hamilton's severe drilling at Ottawa Saturday, while scarcely an indication of what they will do at home, is sufficient to fill the Argonaut supporters with the wildest kind of hope in a victory already half earned in that rout and the double win by the Oarsmen Saturday and yesterday. With the former Varsity stars in the Argo lineup it looks like counting the beans.

Varsity, in their win at McGill Saturday are just about assured of the Intercollegiate again. Queen's has not developed as was expected, and Ottawa College is not likely to repeat their narrow margin of victory here November 11th, nor is McGill at all to be considered anything but the hardest kind of proposition at Ottawa next Saturday. In fact it looks like Varsity and McGill as winners next Saturday, with Ottawa backed to the wall here the following week to make it a tie with Varsity, with only a very outside chance of winning.

Hamilton Alerts are sailing through the Ontario Union at breakneck speed, and while they may be halted by T. A. A. C. here, are not at all likely to be backed off the boards. That will give Hamilton one championship team anyway.

And for the finals, Argonauts without the three Varsity ex-stars who will not play against their old team, do not seem to be wonderfully formidable against the students, especially as pretty nearly the whole present back division is out of commission. Green has given the Varsity men the punting strength until now so sadly lacking, and they have all the other qualifications for a great team. It looks like Varsity for the Dominion honours again, bar accident.

Origin Of Baseball

From the Pittsburg Dispatch

Baseball was an afterthought of the old roundball or town ball which was played by every country school boy from the time of the organization of the public school, and probably sooner at some of the private schools. It was certainly played in Western Pennsylvania 50 years ago. Philadelphia claims that baseball had its first organized club in the Olympia of that city ,which playsd town ball in 1873. New York claims the first organized baseball club in 1843 in the Washington club of that year. The professional game began in 1868.

Golf is of medieval birth and Scotland was its native heath. It was first played by men of the retinue of James I. who succeeded Queen Elizabeth on the throne of England as well as Scotland and, therefore, the first organized club was that which played at Blackheath in James' time. The honour of having been first in real organization was snatched from the Scots by the English. For 250 years, however, that was the only club which played south of the Tweed. In the early days the game was exceedingly democratic and the cobbler might be seen playing with the laird and the butler with his master. It is yet democratic on the other side of the North Atlantic, for Scotland is a democratic country, notwithstanding its historic and romantic fighting for thrones in the old days.

Croquet has been so nearly ousted by tennis that this outdoor "Presbyterian billiards," as someone nicknamed it when it first came into popularity, hardly need be considered. It may have been an offshoot of cricket, but no difference. The origin of tennis is in a fog and its exact bearings have not yet been taken. Some claim that the word comes from the old French "tenez," to seize or take, meaning the ball in this case. It is a very old game, however, as the tennis court is one of the antique institutions often mentioned in English history.

HOCKEY

The annual meeting of the Church Hockey League will be held in the Y.M.C.A. to-night. All clubs intending to play in the Church League this winter are urged to have representatives present at this meeting, as it is important that there should be a large attendance. The snow on the ground this morning is an unmistakable evidence that the hockey season is only a few short weeks away and it is necessary that the preliminary work of reorganising the League should be got under way at once.

THE DAM WAS DOOMED FROM THE BEGINNING

Special to The Examiner:

ALBANY, Nov 1.—The recent disaster at Austin, Pa., resulted from alleged failure to carry out the original plans for the construction of the dam, according to a statement given out by the State conservation commission. The statement is based on a preliminary report just received from Alexander R. McKim, State Inspector of Dams, who, with the consent of the Pennsylvania authorities, inspected the Austin dam on Oct. 11.

"Mr. McKim found that in two vital particulars, which heretofore have escaped public notice," says the statement, "portions of the dam as actually constructed differed so widely from the original plans that from the outset it was doomed to failure.

Was Dumbfounded

"In the first place he was dumbfounded to find that at least one portion of the dam which, drawings published showed to be 30 feet thick at the base, was only 20 feet thick. To make matters worse he could find no trace of the existence of a cut-off wall or 'key' which the drawings showed extended the entire length of the dam from bank to bank of the stream.

"This cut-off wall was an extension down into bedrock of the up-stream face of the dam. The designs showed that it was to be sunk four feet into the rock and be four feet thick in the direction of the flow of the river. The primary purpose of this cut-off wall was to prevent the impounded water from creeping under the dam and lifting it upwards, a vital point.

Simple Illustration

"In addition to this function, it was intended to prevent the sliding of the dam on the bedrock. A simple illustration of this latter purpose is that a box which lies on the floor may be easily slid along, but if a strip nailed to the bottom should be placed in a groove in the floor that obstruction would make sliding the box a much harder task.

"Only twice in its brief history was this dam filled with water and then only for short periods. The first time the water rose to the top of the dam was on January 21, 1910. Two days later the dam slid down stream about 18 inches and the water was drawn off ,as the newspapers stated at the time. The water never got so deep again until the rains of the last week of September, 1911, brought the water nearly to the crest of the dam again, and utter failure resulted. In view of the conditions noted above, no other result was possible."

COUDERSPORT, PA., Nov. 2.—The coroner's inquest into the cause of the Austin disaster was resumed here to-day.

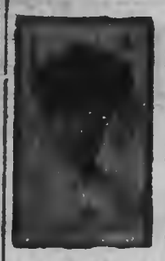
THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

"In all that concerns eating and drinking ,company, climate and ways of life, community of taste is to be sought for. It would be trying, for instance, to keep bed and board with an early riser or a vegetarian. In matters of art and intellect, I believ it is of no consequence.

"For there are differences which no habit nor affection can reconcile, and the Bohemian must not intermarry with the Pharisee."—Stevenson.

"I think we are well suited to each other because we are such exact opposites."



So I heard a woman say of herself and her fiance. In answer to my query as to how they were opposites, she further explained that he was light haired and she was dark, that he liked to read and she didn't, that she was fond of society and he was reserved and quiet, that he liked cold weather and she warm, and several other similar differences that I cannot recall.

As to the effect of the contrast between light and dark hair on their matrimonial happiness it would be difficult to predict, but as to the effect on the other differences cited, I should think the most simple-minded could be an accurate prophet.

That is, unless he were blinded by that most foolish and misunderstood of catchwords—"the attraction of opposites."

I think that the notion that the more two people differ from each other, the more natural it is that they should love each other and be happy together, because of this law of the attraction of opposites, is a popular fallacy that does actual harm.

Again and again I have heard people refer to differences in taste and attitude as likely to promote a happy match—"it's the attraction of opposites, you know.

If there is anything at all in "the attraction of opposites' 'it is, of course, in the attraction between opposites in temperament.

It may be that the phlegmatic and the high strung, the even tempered and the impatient, the lover of action and the conservative objection-raiser, the reserved and the chatterer, get along well together, although it has always seemed to me that people of similar temperaments are quite as likely to understand and bear with each other.

But that contrariety of tastes should ever be regarded as a desirable condition in the Siamese-twinship of marriage, would be unbelievable if it were not so.

Similar tastes make similar interests.

And every interest which married folks share is one more tie between them, one more bond to counteract the rending power of selfishness and individual interests and the natural tendency of all souls toward isolation.

Of course, you may point me out two people with widely diverging tastes who apparently have a happy married life.

But I can show you a blind man who is a leader in his community. And you will not think that he attained that position because of his blindness, will you? You will know that he has done what he has in spite of his handicap, not because of it.

I firmly believe that any two people with widely diverging tastes and interests are undertaking a mighty perilous voyage when they embark on the seas of matrimony together.

And I wish that the foolish catchword, the attraction of opposites," could somehow be stricken from the language for I believe that a misinterpretation of it has caused more young folks to be mistaken in regard to their fitness of each other than we would like to reckon.

Talk And Be Cheerful

(From the London Mirror.)

Why are persons who are much alone apt to get depressed and sad? Simply because they don't talk enough.

"The more you talk—in reason, of course—the more cheerful you will be," said a physician who had studied the subject. "You can see this in everyday life. The cheerful, hail-fellow-well-met man is the man who talks and goes on talking. Don't be misled by the idea that people talk because they are cheerful. They are cheerful because they talk.

"The reason is simple enough. The talking apparatus is ,of course, connected with the brain. When you talk, you stir up, by means of the connecting nerves, the blood vessels of the brain, which, consequently, demand more blood. Fresh blood is accordingy drawn in and the circulation stimulated and more blood is created.

"This necessarily causes fitness and cheerfulness. Of course, the cheerfulness created by talk reacts and makes you desire to talk more. But the cheerfulness is created by talk."

A Competent General Manager

Mr. A.W. Wheatley Will be in Charge of Canadian Locomotive Company

The Canadian Locomotive Company of Kingston has recently secured as General Manager, Mr. W. A. Wheatley, who is one of the foremost locomotive manufacturers in America, having, previously to coming to Canada, been in charge of the American Locomotive Company's plant at Dunkirk, N.Y., the second largest locomotive works on the continent.

The product of the Canadian Locomotive plant at Kingston is in good demand among Canadian Railways, and orders on hand practically ensure two years' continuous work on the basis of the present output of 75 locomotives per year materially increased in the near future. The First Mortgage Bonds now being issued to provide for extensions to the present plant seem to be a well secured industrial investment giving a return of 6 p.c.

Committed To Asylum

(Havelock Standard)

Mr. Thos. Steen of Lasswade was brought to town by her husband on Saturday and an information laid before Magistrate Joyce and Mathison, charging her with being insane and dangerous to be at large. Their Worships held Court on the case in the afternoon, and after a medical examination had been held, by Drs. Holdcroft and Kindred, the unfortunate lady was committed to the County Jail, until such time as the necessary papers could be forwarded ordering her removal to an asylum.

Mrs. Steen, according to her husband's statement, has been demented for the past month, and for fear that she would develop a dangerous mania, or perhaps inflict self destruction, he deemed it wise, and quite rightly too, to have her placed in an asylum.

Mrs. Steen is apparently well educated, and to the fact that insanity is said to have occurred before in her family, is doubtless due her present demented condition.

LOCOMOTOR ATAXIA

"My nerves were very bad, and I could not sleep at night, nor could I control my arms or legs," writes Mrs. Robert Bustard, Maxwell, N.B. "Dr. Chase's Nerve Food cured me of what I believe was the early stage of locomotor ataxia or paralysis. I cannot describe what I suffered, but now I am entirely cured."

A SPLENDID LINE

A prominent New York gentleman who has made a sojourn in Canada, at the Laurentian Club, Lac-La-Peche, P.Q., in a letter addressed to Grand Trunk headquarters, says:

"I have been over the new Transcontinental Line as far as Parent, five miles from the end of steel, and thoroughly enjoyed the opportunity of seeing this portion of your line. It is the same high standard of construction through a difficult country most of the time affording the expected comfort of travel even now. The whole territory is studded with fine lakes and rivers, and will surely open up like this at the Laurentian Club."

THE WEATHER

This morning the snow shovel had to be resurrected after a long season of disuse, as some three or four inches of the beautiful were on the ground. The temperature also had a wintry feeling, and the mercury was down to its lowest point this season, namely 20 degrees. This little flurry of winter will probably be over in a day or two, as it is too early for genuine winter yet. Last year our first touch of the real thing was on Nov. 28th, and the following day cutters and light sleighs were out.—W. P

BURLEIGH WANTS TO MANAGE ITSELF

Editor Examiner:

Dear Sir,—The township of Burleigh is to vote on a local option by-law at the January elections. For my part, I want, and I am sure the majority of us, want, to see local option carried; and it would have been carried at the last election, if the cottagers on the lakes had not beaten it. This does not seem to me to be fair. As a township, Burleigh has treated the cottagers on the lakes, whose places are in this township, in a fair and liberal manner. We have given a reasonable assessment and as far as we could, have done the right thing by them. Now, we should like to have them allow us to conduct our own affairs in our own way. We live in the township the year round, and if we wish to prevent the sale of liquor in the township the year round, it is not right or fair for those who live only a month or so on the lakes, to interfere to prevent us getting something that will affect us (beneficially we believe) the year round. If these temporary inhabitants of the lakes can't do without strong drink, let them bring in a supply with them.

Yours truly,
BURLEIGH TOWNSHIP.

Stops a Deep-Seated Cough in a Hurry

A Family Supply of Unequaled Cough Remedy for 50c—Money Refunded if it Fails.

Cough medicines, as a rule, contain a large proportion of plain syrup—a good ingredient, but one that anyone can make. A pint of granulated sugar, with ½ pint of warm water, stirred for 2 minutes, gives you as good syrup as money can buy.

A 50-cent bottle of Pinex, mixed in a 16-oz. bottle with home-made sugar syrup, gives you 16 ounces of really better cough syrup than you could buy ready-mixed for $2.50. There's a clear saving of $2.00. Full directions in package.

And money couldn't buy a quicker, better remedy. Takes hold at once, gives almost instant relief, and usually stops the most obstinate, deep-seated cough in 24 hours. It stimulates the appetite, is slightly laxative and has a pleasant taste—children take it willingly. Splendid for hoarseness, asthma, chest pains, and other throat troubles, and unequaled for prompt results in whooping cough.

Pinex is a special and highly concentrated compound of imported Norway White Pine extract, and is rich in guaiacol and other natural healing pine elements. Simply mix it as directed with sugar syrup or strained honey, and it is ready for use.

Used in more homes in the U. S. and Canada than any other cough remedy.

Pinex has often been imitated, but never successfully, for nothing else will produce the same results. The genuine is guaranteed to give absolute satisfaction or money refunded. Certificate of guarantee is wrapped in each package. Your druggist has Pinex or will get it for you. If not, send to The Pinex Co., Toronto, Ont.

McRae To Penitentiary

CORNWALL, ONT., Nov. 1.—Sentenced to spend the balance of his life in Kingston Penitentiary on the sentence of Mr. Justice Sutherland at the Assizes here last week, following a verdict of manslaughter for the slaying of William Shaw at Bridge End, exactly four months ago to-day, ex-Reeve Farquhar McRae, of Lancaster Township, boarded the 12.10 o'clock express this morning for Kingston.

He was accompanied by Robert Shearer, deputy-sheriff, and W. A. Ault, jailer. He was not manacled, and was permitted to shake hands with a few friends at the depot.

Mr. McRae is proving himself a man of iron nerve. Throughout his farewells with his relatives on Monday and Tuesday and under the trying ordeal of his departure this morning, he showed little outward emotion, although he must have suffered greatly.

Staunton McGillivrey, of Morrisburg, Va., was taken to Kingston with McRae, where he will spend three years for attempted assault.

A Tearful Appeal

NEW YORK, Nov. 1.—Former Judge John F. Dillon, now 80 years old, and long a commanding figure afong American jurists ,having been a member of the Supreme Court of Iowa, and on the bench of the United States Circuit Court, makes an almost tearful appeal that the thief who last Sunday night entered his country home in Far Hills, N.J., return the gold watch which, among other things, he took. No earthly treasure, Judge Dillon says, could have bought this watch.

His wife and daughter, Mrs. Oliver, sailed for Europe in July, 1898, in the French liner La Bourgogne, to spend the summer. The ship was lost at sea and about five hundred were lost, including Mrs. Dillon and her daughter.

When the news of the disaster came Judge Dillon was confined to his bed with a broken leg, but he started immediately for Halifax, where he chartered a steamer and began a search of the seas for the bodies of his wife and daughter. For days his vessel sailed over and about the spot where La Bourgogne went down, but the sea retained its dead.

The most precious memento of his wife was a watch which she had given him forty years ago on his fortieth birthday. It is inscribed: "To my husband, on his fortieth birthday."

This is the watch the thief got on Sunday night, and Judge Dillon hopes that even a burglar will understand why its owner values this watch more than it can ever be worth to any one else, and will return it. In addition, he offers a liberal reward for it.

There's Comfort In POSTUM

Many tea and coffee drinkers don't suspect that their nervousness, irritability, sleeplessness. etc.. is caused by caffeine, the drug in tea and coffee.

These little aches and ills are Nature's protests against abuse; and when one's personal comfort is interfered with, common sense would suggest a change.

It's a safe move and a wise one to quit tea and coffee and take on well-made

POSTUM

When boiled until dark and rich (directions on package) and served piping hot with cream and sugar, Postum is a delicious, satisfying food-drink.

It contains the pure, wholesome nutrition of wheat—vitalizing, nerve-building elements which the body and brain require.

HARD TO LEARN.
Takes Hard Experience to Teach People Some Truths.

Many people jeer at the idea that tea and coffee cause the aches and ails they suffer from and often such people will go on for years sticking steadfastly to tea and coffee and suffering month in and month out but maintaining "Tea and coffee don't hurt me."

Only an actual test will open their eyes to what they throw away when they cast aside the richness and power of health for a cup of tea or coffee now and then. A lady says:

"I did not learn the real truth until I made the change, but I can now positively state that the headaches I had for about seventeen years were caused by drinking coffee for when I changed and gave up coffee and used Postum in its place I experienced entire relief. I have not been troubled with headache since I began Postum.

"This, in brief, has been my experience on the coffee question. Among my friends I have seen many other wonderful instances of the power of this food-drink when used in place of the drug-drink coffee. Among my friends there are those who tell me of relief from kidney trouble, neuralgia and eczema by leaving off coffee and using Postum and I have even known it to ease rheumatic pains in limbs.

"I readily believe these statements for since I cut out coffee and used Postum I never seem to have an ache or pain and I would not dare go back to coffee again. Not only myself but my family use Postum exclusively and we know there is no hot beverage that can take its place.

"Nearly seven years steady use of Postum convinces me I know what I am talking about when I say it is a food as well as a drink and most valuable to build up the system." Name given by Canadian Postum Co., Windsor, Ont.

At the Grand Opera House, on Tuesday, Nov. 7th, there will be a dancing and music festival. Countess de Swirsky, the Russian who, according to Arthuro Toscinini, orchestra director of the Metropolitan Opera House, "has the most musical body in the world," will dance and play a classic programme. It was Mlle. de Swirsky who was the Premiere Danseuse of the Metropolitan and Boston Opera Companies. She comes to the Grand on Tuesday next with her own orchestra. De Swirsky is known as the greatest interpretive dancer of to-day. She is also regarded as a musician of high rank, and this art combined with her first one of suggestive interpretation of the master composers, makes her programme unique. Her whole body is said to be alive with music, as vibrant as a sounded string. Her programme consists of the brilliant, highly coloured Slavic dances of Dvorak, the tender Peer Gynt Suite and the classic dance, "Tanagra," and many others.

Further Extensions

The announcement is made by Senator Edwards that the management of the Canada Cement Company is preparing for further extensions to its system of plants throughout the country, and that considerable capital will be spent in the next six months or so in meeting the growing demand for this commodity, and is arranging to extend the company's business into foreign markets. The large mill at Port Colborne of the company is to be enlarged immediately to twice its present capacity, and then it will give employment to at least 500 men. In the West the work of erecting and improving mills is being rushed with all expediency, while at Winnipeg the big cement merger will probably operate one of the largest and most modern plants on the continent.

ligence, and if he does not, he is contributing, and it is for you to find out if deceased was negligent. What was he doing on that belt, or should he have informed his master not to start the machine, that he was going to work in that dangerous place?"

His Honour then read a list of questions, which he hoped would assist the jury in determining the decision. The jury then retired about 11.10.

Yesterday's Session.

Mr. Thompson was put in the box, and examined by the lawyer for the defence.

"From whom did you get any instruction that day?"

"From Mr. Wilson."

"Did you know when the generator was ready to start?"

"I thought I knew. I was waiting on other motors until about 9.30 and then came to the machine."

"How long is the test, usually?"

"At first two or three hours, and then after the preliminaries are gone through, it is tested for four or five hours. I had been all around the machine and all was clear, and when I went to the switch, I looked all around. I could see everywhere, except behind the generator, and I was under the impression that Dark was clear of danger when I turned on the current, as he was not in a dangerous position when I came away from the machine."

"How far away was Cartner?"

"About five feet. He was standing up."

(A model of the machine and connection was produced in court).

Thompson — "Cartner said don't start for a moment, I want to tighten a bolt."

"When was this?"

"A few moments before the accident. I was under the impression that Darke had gone away and I did not see him come back, and as soon as Cartner stood back from the machine I started it. When he stood back he gave me what I understood to be a nod to start."

"What is your duty before starting a machine?"

"I am supposed to see that there are no obstructions. I had looked twice before this."

"And when you turned it on?"

"I heard a shout and shut it off."

Mr O'Connell cross-examined the witness.

"Did you suggest that the machine might move?"

"Yes. Darke said he would tighten a bolt at the rear, that might make the machine more secure."

"Did he go to do it?"

"Yes".

"Did you see Cartner at that time?"

"Yes."

"Did you have any conversation with him about the bolt?"

"I don't remember."

"Did you see Cartner with Darke?"

"No."

"Did you see Darke working at the belt?"

"Yes."

"Did you see him leave?"

"Yes. He came to me and said he had tightened the bolts. Cartner came then and said 'wait a minute I want to tighten a bolt at the front. This was about ten minutes before the accident."

"What did you do?"

"When Cartner got up, I gave him a wave and he gave what I thought was a nod."

"You have a code of signals?"

"Yes."

"Do you have to learn them?"

"No; you just pick it up. It is handed down from one to another."

"Cartner says he had no knowledge of any code of signals."

"I cannot see how he hasn't."

"Where was Cartner when you started?"

"About 3 or 4 feet away."

"Did you start when you saw him standing?"

"Almost immediately."

The lawyer for the defence again questioned the witness.

"Did you know that Mr. Anson had passed the machinery?"

"Yes."

Judge to witness—"Did you see Mr. Jeffreys that evening?"

"Yes."

"Did you hold a conversation about the machine?"

"The only conversation was that I asked Mr. Cartner to remain with Darke."

The photographer of the machine was put in the box to give the date that the pictures of the machine were taken. He said it was on June 27th.

NOT INVOLVED

In connection with the assignment of the Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Company a reference to which appeared in last evening's Examiner, there seems to have been some mistaken idea that the steamers "Lintonia" and "Geneva" were involved in the assignment. Of course this impression is not in any way in accord with the facts of the case. "The Lintonia," which is the property of Mr. Charles Gray, of Lakefield, and the "Geneva," which is owned by Mr. Thompson, were simply chartered for the season by the Peterborough and Lake Simcoe Company and are not involved in any way.

Against Bachelor

BOSTON, OCT. 31.—The Woman's Homestead Association, through Mrs. Charlotte Smith, today, announced that it has aligned practically every Massachusetts woman's organization, with memberships of 100,000, against the election of the Republican candidate for Governor, Louis A. Frothingham, because he is a bachelor.

The resolution adopted by the women of Massachusetts, says in part:

"Be it resolved that no man should be elected Governor of Massachusetts no matter what his party affiliations are, who is a bachelor.

Bachelors shirk their duty to society, are failures, always have been, and always will be, because they are not good citizens."

FINGERS OF PUBLIC SPEAKERS

From the St. Paul Pioneer.

Every finger has a meaning of its own, always the same and always recognizable, even though not always noticed. The fist of the political demagogue and the curling little finger of milady at 5 o'clock tea are equally full of significance, according to a lecture given recently at the University of Chicago by Frederick Mason Blanchard, associate professor in the university.

"The use of the different fingers in gestures is of the greatest importance, he said. 'The voice of a speaker may be likened to the solo of a singer, and the gestures may be taken to represent the accompaniment. It is a well established psychological fact that the use of the index finger is for pointing out one thing in particular.

"The second finger is the finger of intellectual force. The use of this and the index finger give the significance of a forcible pointing to one particular thing.

"The third finger always bears the engagement and wedding rings. The third finger is the finger of affection and must always remain so. I can see the character of an uninstructed student by the way he holds his fingers. If he gestures naturally with the thumb and index finger together, I know that he is a forceful person. If he lets his thumbs fall within the palm of his hand I can see he is not insistent."

GREAT RETIRING SALE

Some of the NEW ARRIVALS

The first to inspect these latest goods will be almost certain to purchase. They were bought to bring the Robert Fair & Co., Limited, Fall and Winter stock up-to-date, and their value is abundantly evident.

Evening wear materials from Paris and London, Tweed Suitings, Black and Navy Broadcloths and Serges, Fancy Dress Silks, All-over Laces, Planen Laces, Flouncing Embroideries, Boys' Ribbed Stockings, Ladies' and Children's Plain and Ribbed Stockings. Keep in mind and make fullest use of the making up departments for Dressmaking and Millinery.

Some, as yet, Little Touched Lines

The rush has been greater in some sections than others, but a suggestion of lines that will appeal strongly when brought to mind might be timely. Don't overlook these:—

Ladies' Suits to sell as low as $7.00, Ladies' Shirt Waists, Ladies' Silk and Net Dress Waists, Ladies' Whitewear, Housefurnishings, Wilton Rugs, Axminster Rugs, Brussels Rugs, Tapestry Squares, Ingrain Carpets, New Pure Wool, White Blankets, Down Comforters, etc.

MILLINERY Velour and Beaver shapes, the very newest designs. Also splendid values
Extra Special in Ostrich Feathers and Willows.

This mammoth sale means many hundreds of dollars left in the pockets of the prudent buyers who grasp the opportunity, and that much less for the store, but the big $65,000 stock must be hustled off our shelves as quickly as possible, so there is no hesitation when the knife is applied to the old prices. Hundreds have profited largely, many hundreds more may do so if they wish to avail themselves of the chance while it lasts.

CAMPAIGN OPENED

Finance Minister White Opens Campaign in Leeds.

WANTS PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

Lansdowne, Nov. 3.—"On the Massey Hall platform last September I placed myself behind Mr. Borden and joined the ranks of the Liberal-Conservative party. I entered by the door. I did not climb up some other way. That door was opened to former Liberals by none other than your old chieftain, Sir John Macdonald, when he named his party the Liberal-Conservative party. He intended that Liberals should enter. Your honored leader to-day, Mr. Borden, formerly voted Liberal and came over to the Conservative party in 1891 on the great and cognate issue of commercial union."

So spoke Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, in his initial appeal to the electors of Leeds here last night. The hall was well filled. The new Minister was accompanied by Mr. Taylor, who resigned after twenty-nine years of continuous representation of the constituency, and was given a cordial reception. Mr. Taylor's address was very frank. He stated that Premier Borden found much difficulty following the election in securing a sufficient strong Cabinet from the members-elect. "So," he stated, "he took the strongest man in each of three Provincial Governments, Manitoba, Ontario, and New Brunswick. There was only Mr. White left without a seat," Mr. Taylor continued, "and there was a proposition made to me to resign this seat. At the first opportunity I will retire to the Senate."

Addresses were also delivered by Mr. John Webster, M.P. for Brockville, and Rev. W. Robbins.

The Minister of Finance arrived from Ottawa on the afternoon train and spent the afternoon with the former member, meeting his prospective constituents. At night he was escorted by band and torchlight procession to the Town Hall.

The two important features of the inaugural address of the new Minister of Finance were his declaration that no immediate changes in the Canadian tariff were contemplated, and a vigorous pronouncement in favor of a propaganda of public ownership. In this connection Mr. White stated that it was the definite intention of the new Government both to build and to operate the Hudson Bay Railway.

No direct reference was made to Conservative protests against his inclusion in the Cabinet, but Mr. White rapped the protesting Conservatives of Toronto and western Ontario over the knuckles on the words "at Ottawa" in his appreciative reference to the pay he had been received by the party. "In the great Conservative party at Ottawa I find myself truly in the home of my friends," was his significant way of putting it.

Leather Corner in Britain.

London, Nov. 3.—If present indications in the leather trade are maintained, Great Britain will shortly receive a sharp lesson on the subject of tariff reform. The Standard says agents of American boot and shoe manufacturers are secretly placing large orders in the principal hide and skin markets in England and Scotland and should their expectations be realized, a corner in leather will result which will send up the prices of footwear by leaps and bounds, thereby enabling the American manufacturers to pocket huge profits on boots and shoes made by American workpeople from British hides and re-imported to this country free of duty.

British workers meanwhile will be unemployed, because of the price which leather will have reached British manufacturers will be unable to compete with their rivals.

Returns Confirmed.

Edmonton, Nov. 3.—Latest returns confirm Conservative victories in all four seats. The majorities are: Calgary, Tweedie, 1,115; Gleichen, Riley, 336; Lethbridge, Stewart 179; Pincher Creek, Kemmis 135, with two polls to come.

NOT MUCH TO SAY

Hon. Mr. Borden Makes Few Forecasts at Banquet

FAVOURS TARIFF BOARD

Halifax, Nov. 3.—The banquet in honor of R. L. Borden in this city last night, given by the Conservatives of Halifax, and of the Province of Nova Scotia, was the biggest function of the kind ever seen here. There were three toasts, "The King," "Mr Borden" and "The Members of Mr Borden's Cabinet."

The Prime Minister was surrounded by members of his Cabinet and prominent members of the party in the Maritime Provinces, and enthusiasm ran high at all times.

Any expectation that Hon. Mr. Borden would outline, save in general terms, the policy of the new Government, will pursue, was rather disappointing. He took a definite attitude, however, in favor of a permanent tariff commission, and declared for encouragement to agriculture by means of improvements to roads and also for chilled meat facilities. He took pains to emphasize the need of improved transportation facilities to bind east and west together.

Mr. Borden's response to the toast in his honor was in part as follows:

"Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—I need not tell you that I am deeply moved by this splendid reception accorded to me in this city where I have spent the best years of my life and perhaps my happiest days, and which I have had the honor of representing for many years in the Parliament of Canada.

"The issue which confronted the people of Canada in the recent contest was of surpassing interest and importance to the whole Empire. Its importance was realized by the people of Canada and I do not allude on this occasion to express our appreciation of those Liberals who placed the interests of Canada above the ties of party allegiance and who fought with us in this campaign for the welfare of Canada and of the Empire.

"In some quarters, the claim has been made that the result of the election was due to some hostile or unfriendly spirit on the part of the Canadian people to the great neighboring republic. It is desirable that any such idea, if it exists, should be dissipated and dispelled.

After reviewing history of negotiations between Canada and the U. S. dating back to Canada's standing offer of reciprocity in 1879, and Canada's assertion on Sept. 21 last of the right to maintain her fiscal freedom, he said:

"I trust that the anniversary of one hundred years of peace will be commemorated in the two countries with a deep and solemn sense of national responsibility and that each will accomplish its destiny under the splendid inspiration of enduring friendship.

"Intelligent administration of public affairs must involve a wise conservation of our natural resources, as well as their development in the interest of the whole people. In a country like Canada, with an enormous area and scattered population, the problem of transportation is of prime and vital importance, and you may rest assured that the Liberal Conservative party will be always alive to the vital importance of that problem.

"The policy of the Liberal Conservative party as presented to the people in the recent contest is before you. Among some of its principal items are such encouragement of the great basic industry, agriculture, as will enable those who till the soil to receive the highest return for their product, to turn out their products in the highest form and at the same time preserve the fertility of the land.

"The regulation of our tariff on reasonable business principles is an important article of our policy that is to be carried out by the establishment of a permanent tariff commission, which will ascertain all necessary facts in connection with the conditions and cost of production, and which will advise as to the condition which ought to be drawn from the facts so ascertained. We propose also to extend that reform of the civil service which we initiated while in opposition, and which the late administration carried out in part upon our initiative. So far as trade relations are concerned, we believe that the true idea of reciprocity can be found within the vast dominions of this Empire, with its wonderful variety of natural and other products, which can be exchanged, to the mutual advantage of all."

Farmers' Bank Case.

Toronto, Nov. 3.—Representing over 500 shareholders of the Farmers' Bank, William Laidlaw, K.C., has filed defence against the claims of the liquidator to have their names placed on the list of contributories. The shareholders claim that their deposits in and loans to the bank should be set off against their liabilities.

The defence claims that the authorized capital stock was $1,000,000. It is claimed that $500,000 was to be subscribed and that $250,000 was to have been paid to the Minister of Finance, and that the capital stock was not bona fide subscriptions and that the $250,000 was not paid to the Minister of Finance.

Cleaned Out.

Mrs. Grouch—Oh, is there anything I haven't been through since I married you?

Grouch (calmly)—Nothing in the shape of a pocket, certainly.

PROMINENT RAILROAD MAN
STRONGLY ADVISES HIS FRIENDS TO TRY GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS
"I have been a Pullman Conductor on the C. P. R. and Michigan Central during the last three years. About four years ago, I was laid up with intense pains in the groin, a very sore back, and suffered most severely when I tried to urinate. I treated with my family physician for two months for gravel in the bladder but did not receive any benefit. About that time, I met another railroad man who had been similarly affected and who had been cured by taking Gin Pills, after having been given up by a prominent physician who treated him for Diabetes. He is now running on the road and is perfectly cured. He strongly advised me to try Gin Pills which I did,—with the result that the pains left me entirely.

TURK IS OPTIMISTIC.

Commander Reports That Italians Are Demoralized.

Constantinople, Nov. 3.—The commander of the Turkish forces at Tripoli telegraphs his Government under date of Oct. 30, as follows: "The Turks have occupied all the forts surrounding the town. The Italians are demoralized and do not dare to venture outside the zone of fortifications."

Italians Forced Back.

Tripoli, Nov. 3.—The Turks yesterday morning brought up a few guns to the south of El Mosri and opened fire. This was not effective, as most of the shells failed to explode. The Italian artillery soon silenced the guns and forced the enemy to retire.

About five o'clock Wednesday evening Turks appeared before the line of defences and forced the 82nd Italian infantry to fall back from their position. The cruiser Carlo Alberto soon located the Turkish artillery, and by a well directed and vigorous fire, silenced it.

Italian's Patriotic Fervor.

Rome, Nov. 3.—A despatch to The Giornal d'Italia from Tripoli describes the observance of All Souls' Day at the Italian military camp at Bumelina. The altar was surrounded by cannon and a forest of rifles, the bayonets of which flashed back the rays of the sun. Above all waved the tri-color. The military band played the "Ave Maria," by Verdi. After the chaplains had celebrated mass, each general addressed the soldiers, urging them to imitate the example of the officers and men who had won victory and honor for their country by shedding their blood.

The thousands of soldiers responded with cries of "Long live Italy."

Italian Fleet Leaves Tripoli.

Malta, Nov. 3.—It is reported that the whole Italian fleet has left Tripoli for Turkish waters.

The Italian Government has suppressed direct sailings between Tripoli and Malta, owing to the leakage of news to foregin papers. All the mails from Tripoli have now to run the gauntlet of censorship at Sicily.

Will Confiscate Cargoes.

Washington, Nov. 3.—Vessels whose cargoes are made up either in bulk or weight, of one-half contraband of war, will be confiscated by the Turkish Government, according to advices yesterday from Ambassador Rockhill at Constantinople. The Turkish Government defines as contraband of war all material which can be used without further preparation in promoting warfare.

Firemen Interfered With.

Toronto, Nov. 3.—Usually it is a clear right of way, with every help offered to the firemen when they go out on business, but yesterday they struck a snag when they responded to a call to the Adams Brothers Harness Co., at King and Frederick streets. Arrived at the scene they were told that the fire was under control and that they might just as well go home.

Admission was refused by the factory hands who declared that they could manage their own fire, but when a tongue of flame shot out of a top storey window a moment later, the firemen waited no longer upon ceremony, but broke in a door and went to work. The damage done was about $2,000. The fire was on the top floor.

Chief Thompson is indignant over the detention of his men on their way to their work and will press for an investigation.

"Father" Chiniquy's Widow Dead.

Worcester, Mass., Nov. 3.—Mrs. Euphemie Chiniquy, widow of Rev. Charles Chiniquy of Montreal, who attracted considerable attention many years ago by withdrawing from the Roman Catholic Church, of which he was a priest, and devoting the remainder of his life to an attack on that faith, died here yesterday at the home of her son-in-law, Rev. Samuel C. Delagneau. Mrs. Chiniquy was 77 years of age. She was a native of the province of Quebec.

MASSACRE CONFIRMED

Recapture of Hankow Was Accomplished by Unparalleled Outrages

PLANS ARE UPSET

Pekin, Nov. 3.—The massacre of natives at Hankow by Imperialist troops, intelligence of which has reached both the War Board and the German legation, may prove a serious hindrance to the peace negotiations which Yuan Shi Kai has been endeavoring to inaugurate with the rebel leaders. The population of Hankow is estimated ordinarily at 800,000, but it is believed that every non-combatant who was able to escape proceeded into the country prior to the conflict. The Hankow streets are very narrow and the houses are closely packed. There are many wealthy Chinese merchants and manufacturers in gold and silver.

The concessions are divided from the native city by streets 50 or 60 feet wide, and it will be difficult to protect the foreign houses from fire or even from attack, as the Imperialists have evidently got beyond the control of their officers. The foreign defenders include marines from twelve gunboats of eight or nine nations, and also volunteers from among the missionaries and business people.

The exodus from Pekin continues, the doors of many shops, as well as private houses, being closed in anticipation of a massacre.

The diplomatic body will meet today to reconsider the question of allowing the Chinese troops to enter Tien Tsin, a consul there having made serious objection.

An official despatch from Shih Kai Tan, Shansi Province, says that a regiment of Chansi troops, which had been despatched to assist the Imperialists, has mutinied. The mutineers killed their brigadier-general and then bombarded a Manchu city, massacreing a thousand Manchus, including the governor and his family. The governor's yamen was destroyed.

Gen. Yin Tchang, who until a few days ago was commander of the Imperial forces at Hankow, returned here yesterday.

It is understood that the National Assembly is showing determined opposition to the foreign loan, for which arrangements have already been made, arguing that such a loan is unnecessary, as many millions are hoarded in the Forbidden City.

Letters dated Oct. 29 and Oct. 30 from the Associated Press correspondent with the Imperialist army at Hankow, say that in the struggle for the possession of the city there was hand-to-hand fighting in the streets, the quarters being too close for shooting. The rebels, mostly raw recruits, not understanding the use of rifles, were driven back with much slaughter, their dead piling up on the quay. The casualties among the Imperialists for two days, Oct. 28 and 29, were 36 killed and 150 wounded. The rebels had about 700 killed or wounded.

It is learned that the most barbarous outrages were perpetrated on innocent persons in the villages. An officer of Yin Tchang's staff, explained that the outrages were committed by only 40 men of the Hupeh division.

Pedestrians to Blame?

Boston, Nov. 3.—Up to yesterday 1,357 accidents in which motor vehicles were concerned have been reported to the State Highway Commission in the last eleven months and in pursuance of its duty to investigate these cases the commission has found that where pedestrians were the victims the blame often rested upon them and not upon the drivers. In the last eleven months there have been nearly 100 deaths and about 1,100 injuries caused by motor car accidents. In the previous twelve months there were 77 deaths and 963 injuries, so that with one month not counted of the present fiscal year of the Highway Commission there has been an increase of about 20 per cent. in deaths and 15 per cent. in accidents.

In that same period, however, there has been an increase of approximately 25 per cent. in the number of motor vehicles in use in the state.

Distinguished Passengers.

Berlin, Nov. 3.—Count Zeppelin's dirigible balloon yesterday took up a distinguished party including Prince August William and the princess, Prince Eitel Frederick, Prince Oscar, Prince Joachim, sons of the Emperor; Prince Frederick Leopold of Prussia, Prince George of Greece; the Minister of the Interior and Vice-Chancellor Herr Delbrueck and the Prussian Minister of State, Paul Von Ereitenbach.

Taft Reviews Fleet For First Time Since Election.

New York, Nov. 3.—President Taft yesterday had his first real view of the United States navy. It had so happened since he entered the White House that the fleet, which was so greatly admired by his predecessor, Col. Roosevelt, had been on widely scattered duty for the greater part of the time.

From the bridge of the Presidential yacht Mayflower, Mr. Taft reviewed the gray armada of one hundred fighting vessels that for nearly a week had swung at anchor in the Hudson River awaiting his inspection.

As the little white Mayflower picked her way in and out among the giant craft of the battleship line, the guns of the fleet roared in a reverberating chorus of salute. Accepting these tributes as a matter of course, and disdaining to reply to any of them, the yacht, with the President's blue-crested flag at the main truck, sailed gracefully along the seven-mile column of fighting ships, turned at the end, and headed again down the river.

Following the review of the fleet, President Taft issued the following statement: "Those who saw the fighting fleet, which was assembled in New York harbor to-day, could not fail to be struck with its preparedness and with its high military efficiency, and must have been proud of its personnel.

"The equipment of the fleet is excellent, except as to the number of destroyers, and cruisers and colliers in proportion to the whole number. We had in the fleet yesterday 28 destroyers, or an average of four to each battleship. It is true that there has been a marked improvement in the type of colliers and fast cruisers in our navy, but it is also true that we have not a sufficient number.

"In addition to building great battleships, other nations are building enormous high-speed cruisers — 25 knots per hour—and it is believed that our navy should be similarly equipped. Unless a navy is maintained at the highest possible state of efficiency, it is a needless extravagance."

TELEGRAPHIC BRIEFS.

The London taxicab companies last night decided to close their garages and lock out the men until satisfactory arrangements are made.

About $35,000 of the money recently stolen from the Bank of Montreal at New Westminster, has been recovered by workman while mending a sidewalk.

The coal company at Fernie has posted notices that the mines are open, and asking men who want to return to work to report to the company.

The survey of the proposed six-foot waterway from Edmonton to Winnipeg is practically complete. The survey parties will be back in Ottawa shortly.

Eighteen inches of snow blanketed the northern Indiana and lower Michigan fruit belt yesterday, and great damage is reported, as the apple and pear harvest had not been completed.

Melvin McNair, aged 14; two cousins named Eddie Kirkness and Emma Sette, and Veronica Berthold, aged 8, were drowned near Winnipeg yesterday, when they went for a sleigh ride on thin ice.

CAMPAIGN OPENED

Finance Minister White Opens Campaign in Leeds.

WANTS PUBLIC OWNERSHIP

Lansdowne, Nov. 3.—"On the Massey Hall platform last September I placed myself behind Mr. Borden and joined the ranks of the Liberal-Conservative party. I entered by the door. I did not climb up some other way. That door was opened to former Liberals by none other than your old chieftain, Sir John Macdonald, when he named his party the Liberal-Conservative party. He intended that Liberals should enter. Your honored leader to-day, Mr. Borden, formerly voted Liberal and came over to the Conservative party in 1891 on the great and cognate issue of commercial union."

So spoke Hon. W. T. White, Minister of Finance, in his initial appeal to the electors of Leeds here last night. The hall was well filled. The new Minister was accompanied by Mr. Taylor, who resigned after twenty-nine years of continuous representation of the constituency, and was given a cordial reception. Mr. Taylor's address was very frank. He stated that Premier Borden found much difficulty following the election in securing a sufficient strong Cabinet from the members-elect. "So," he stated, "he took the strongest man in each of three Provincial Governments, Manitoba, Ontario, and New Brunswick. There was only Mr. White left without a seat," Mr. Taylor continued, "and there was a proposition made to me to resign this seat. At the first opportunity I will retire to the Senate."

Addresses were also delivered by Mr. John Webster, M.P. for Brockville, and Rev. W. Robbins.

The Minister of Finance arrived from Ottawa on the afternoon train and spent the afternoon with the former member, meeting his prospective constituents. At night he was escorted by band and torchlight procession to the Town Hall.

The two important features of the inaugural address of the new Minister of Finance were his declaration that no immediate changes in the Canadian tariff were contemplated, and a vigorous pronouncement in favor of a propaganda of public ownership. In this connection Mr. White stated that it was the definite intention of the new Government both to build and to operate the Hudson Bay Railway.

No direct reference was made to Conservative protests against his inclusion in the Cabinet, but Mr. White rapped the protesting Conservatives of Toronto and western Ontario over the knuckles on the words "at Ottawa" in his appreciative reference to the pay he had been received by the party. "In the great Conservative party at Ottawa I find myself truly in the home of my friends," was his significant way of putting it.

Leather Corner in Britain.

London, Nov. 3.—If present indications in the leather trade are maintained, Great Britain will shortly receive a sharp lesson on the subject of tariff reform. The Standard says agents of American boot and shoe manufacturers are secretly placing large orders in the principal hide and skin markets in England and Scotland and should their expectations be realized, a corner in leather will result which will send up the prices of footwear by leaps and bounds, thereby enabling the American manufacturers to pocket huge profits on boots and shoes made by American workpeople from British hides and re-imported to this country free of duty.

British workers meanwhile will be unemployed, because of the price which leather will have reached British manufacturers will be unable to compete with their rivals.

Returns Confirmed.

Edmonton, Nov. 3.—Latest returns confirm Conservative victories in all four seats. The majorities are: Calgary, Tweedie, 1,115; Gleichen, Riley, 336; Lethbridge, Stewart, 178; Pincher Creek, Kemmis 135, with two polls to come.

NOT MUCH TO SAY

Hon. Mr. Borden Makes Few Forecasts at Banquet

FAVOURS TARIFF BOARD

Halifax, Nov. 3.—The banquet in honor of R. L. Borden in this city last night, given by the Conservatives of Halifax, and of the Province of Nova Scotia, was the biggest function of the kind ever seen here. There were three toasts, "The King," "Mr Borden" and "The Members of Mr Borden's Cabinet."

The Prime Minister was surrounded by members of his Cabinet and prominent members of the party in the Maritime Provinces, and enthusiasm ran high at all times.

Any expectation that Hon. Mr. Borden would outline, save in general terms, the policy of the new Government, will pursue, was rather disappointing. He took a definite attitude, however, in favor of a permanent tariff commission, and declared for encouragement to agriculture by means of improvements to roads and also for chilled meat facilities. He took pains to emphasize the need of improved transportation facilities to bind east and west together.

Mr. Borden's response to the toast in his honor was in part as follows:

"Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen,—I need not tell you that I am deeply moved by this splendid reception accorded to me in this city where I have spent the best years of my life and perhaps my happiest days, and which I have had the honor of representing for many years in the Parliament of Canada.

"The issue which confronted the people of Canada in the recent contest was of surpassing interest and importance to the whole Empire. Its importance was realized by the people of Canada and it is not amiss on this occasion to express our appreciation of those Liberals who placed the interests of Canada above the ties of party allegiance and who fought with us in this campaign for the welfare of Canada and of the Empire.

"In some quarters, the claim has been made that the result of the election was due to some hostile or unfriendly spirit on the part of the Canadian people to the great neighboring republic. It is desirable that any such idea, if it exists, should be dissipated and dispelled.

After reviewing history of negotiations between Canada and the U. S. dating back to Canada's standing offer of reciprocity in 1879, and Canada's assertion on Sept. 21 last of the right to maintain her fiscal freedom, he said:

"I trust that the anniversary of one hundred years of peace will be commemorated in the two countries with a deep and solemn sense of national responsibility and that each will accomplish its destiny under the splendid inspiration of enduring friendship.

"Intelligent administration of public affairs must involve a wise conservation of our natural resources, as well as their development in the interest of the whole people. In a country like Canada, with an enormous area and scattered population, the problem of transportation is of prime and vital importance, and you may rest assured that the Liberal Conservative party will be always alive to the vital importance of that problem.

"The policy of the Liberal Conservative party as presented to the people in the recent contest is before you. Among some of its principal items are such encouragement of the great basic industry, agriculture, as will enable those who till the soil to receive the highest return for their product, to turn out their products in the highest form and at the same time preserve the fertility of the land.

"The regulation of our tariff on reasonable business principles is an important article of our policy that is to be carried out by the establishment of a permanent tariff commission, which will ascertain all necessary facts in connection with the conditions and cost of production, and which will advise as to the condition which ought to be drawn from the facts so ascertained. We propose also to extend that reform of the civil service which we initiated while in opposition, and which the late administration carried out in part upon our initiative. So far as trade relations are concerned, we believe that the true idea of reciprocity can be found within the vast dominions of this Empire, with its wonderful variety of natural and other products, which can be exchanged, to the mutual advantage of all."

Farmers' Bank Case.

Toronto, Nov. 3.—Representing over 500 shareholders of the Farmers' Bank, William Laidlaw, K.C., has filed defence against the claims of the liquidator to have their names placed on the list of contributories. The shareholders claim that their deposits in and loans to the bank should be set off against their liabilities.

The defence claims that the authorized capital stock was $1,000,000 It is claimed that $500,000 was to be subscribed and that $250,000 was to have been paid to the Minister of Finance, and that the capital stock was not bona fide subscriptions and that the $250,000 was not paid to the Minister of Finance.

PROMINENT RAILROAD MAN

STRONGLY ADVISES HIS FRIENDS TO TRY GIN PILLS FOR THE KIDNEYS

"I have been a Pullman Conductor on the C. P. R. and Michigan Central during the last three years. About four years ago, I was laid up with intense pains in the groin, a very sore back, and suffered most severely when I tried to urinate. I treated with my family physician for two months for gravel in the bladder but did not receive any benefit. About that time, I met another railroad man who had been similarly affected and who had been cured by taking Gin Pills, after having been given up by a prominent physician who treated him for Diabetes. He is now running on the road and is perfectly cured. He strongly advised me to try Gin Pills which I did,—with the result that the pains left me entirely.

TURK IS OPTIMISTIC.

Commander Reports That Italians Are Demoralized.

Constantipople, Nov. 3.—The commander of the Turkish forces at Tripoli telegraphs his Government under date of Oct. 30, as follows: "The Turks have occupied all the forts surrounding the town. The Italians are demoralized and do not dare to venture outside the zone of fortifications."

Italians Forced Back.

Tripoli, Nov. 3.—The Turks yesterday morning brought up a few guns to the south of El Mosri and opened fire. This was not effective, as most of the shells failed to explode. The Italian artillery soon silenced the guns and forced the enemy to retire.

About five o'clock Wednesday evening Turks appeared before the line of defences and forced the 82nd Italian infantry to fall back from their position. The cruiser Carlo Alberto soon located the Turkish artillery, and by a well directed and vigorous fire, silenced it.

Italian's Patriotic Fervor.

Rome, Nov. 3.—A despatch to The Giornal d'Italia from Tripoli describes the observance of All Souls' Day at the Italian military camp at Bumelina. The altar was surrounded by cannon and a forest of rifles, the bayonets of which flashed back the rays of the sun. Above all waved the tri-color. The military band played the "Ave Maria," by Verdi. After the chaplains had celebrated mass, each general addressed the soldiers, urging them to imitate the example of the officers and men who had won victory and honor for their country by shedding their blood.

The thousands of soldiers responded with cries of "Long live Italy."

Italian Fleet Leaves Tripoli.

Malta, Nov. 3.—It is reported that the whole Italian fleet has left Tripoli for Turkish waters.

The Italian Government has suppressed direct sailings between Tripoli and Malta, owing to the leakage of news to foregin papers. All the mails from Tripoli have now to run the gauntlet of censorship at Sicily.

Will Confiscate Cargoes.

Washington, Nov. 3.—Vessels whose cargoes are made up either in bulk or weight, of one-half contraband of war, will be confiscated by the Turkish Government, according to advices yesterday from Ambassador Bockhill at Constantinople. The Turkish Government defines as contraband of war all material which can be used without further preparation in promoting warfare.

Fireman Interfered With.

Toronto, Nov 3.—Usually it is a clear right of way, with every help offered to the firemen when they go out on business, but yesterday they struck a snag when they responded to a call to the Adams Brothers Harness Co., at King and Frederick streets. Arrived at the scene they were told that the fire was under control and that they might just as well go home.

Admission was refused by the factory hands who declared that they could manage their own fire, but when a tongue of flame shot out of a top storey window a moment later, the firemen waited no longer upon ceremony, but broke in a door and went to work. The damage done was about $9,000. The fire was on the top floor.

Chief Thompson is indignant over the detention of his men on their way to their work and will press for an investigation.

"Father" Chiniquy's Widow Dead.

Worcester, Mass., Nov. 3.—Mrs. Euphemie Chiniquy, widow of Rev. Charles Chiniquy of Montreal, who attracted considerable attention many years ago by withdrawing from the Roman Catholic Church, of which he was a priest, and devoting the remainder of his life to an attack on that faith, died here yesterday at the home of her son-in-law, Rev. Samuel C. Delagneau. Mrs. Chiniquy was 77 years of age. She was a native of the province of Quebec.

MASSACRE CONFIRMED

Recapture of Hankow Was Accomplished by Unparalleled Outrages

PLANS ARE UPSET

Pekin, Nov. 3.—The massacre of natives at Hankow by Imperialist troops, intelligence of which has reached both the War Board and the German legation, may prove a serious hindrance to the peace negotiations which Yuan Shi Kai has been endeavoring to inaugurate with the rebel leaders. The population of Hankow is estimated ordinarily at 500,000, but it is believed that every non-combatant who was able to escape proceeded into the country prior to the conflict. The Hankow streets are very narrow and the houses are closely packed. There are many wealthy Chinese merchants and manufacturers in gold and silver.

The concessions are divided from the native city by streets 50 or 60 feet wide, and it will be difficult to protect the foreign houses from fire or even from attack, as the Imperialists have evidently got beyond the control of their officers. The foreign defenders include marines from twelve gunboats of eight or nine nations, and also volunteers from among the missionaries and business people.

The exodus from Pekin continues, the doors of many shops, as well as private houses, being closed in anticipation of a massacre.

The diplomatic body will meet today to reconsider the question of allowing the Chinese troops to enter Tien Tsin, a consul there having made serious objection.

An official despatch from Shih Kai Tau, Shansi Province, says that a regiment of Chansi troops, which had been despatched to assist the Imperialists, has mutinied. The mutineers killed their brigadier-general and then bombarded a Manchu city, massacreing a thousand Manchus, including the governor and his family. The governor's yamen was destroyed.

Gen. Yin Tehang, who until a few days ago was commander of the Imperial forces at Hankow, returned here yesterday.

It is understood that the National Assembly is showing determined opposition to the foreign loan, for which arrangements have already been made, arguing that such a loan is unnecessary, as many millions are hoarded in the Forbidden City.

Letters dated Oct. 29 and Oct. 30 from the Associated Press correspondent with the Imperialist army at Hankow, say that in the struggle for the possession of the city there was hand-to-hand fighting in the streets, the quarters being too close for shooting. The rebels, mostly raw recruits, not understanding the use of rifles, were driven back with much slaughter, their dead piling up on the quay. The casualties among the Imperialists for two days, Oct. 28 and 29, were 36 killed and 150 wounded. The rebels had about 700 killed or wounded.

It is learned that the most barbarous outrages were perpetrated on innocent persons in the villages. An officer of Yin Tehang's staff, explained that the outrages were committed by only 40 men of the Hupeh division.

Pedestrians to Blame?

Boston, Nov. 3.—Up to yesterday 1,357 accidents in which motor vehicles were concerned have been reported to the State Highway Commission in the last eleven months and in pursuance of its duty to investigate these cases the commission has found that where pedestrians were the victims the blame often rested upon them and not upon the drivers. In the last eleven months there have been nearly 100 deaths and about 1,100 injuries caused by motor car accidents. In the previous twelve months there were 77 deaths and 963 injuries, so that with one month not counted of the present fiscal year of the Highway Commission there has been an increase of about 20 per cent. in deaths and 15 per cent. in accidents.

In that same period, however, there has been an increase of approximately 25 per cent. in the number of motor vehicles in use in the state.

Distinguished Passengers.

Berlin, Nov 3.—Count Zeppelin's dirigible balloon yesterday took up a distinguished party including Prince August William and the princess, Prince Eitel Frederick, Prince Oscar, Prince Joachim, sons of the Emperor; Prince Frederick Leopold of Prussia, Prince George of Greece; the Minister of the Interior and Vice-Chancellor Herr Delbrueck and the Prussian Minister of State, Paul Von Ereitenbach.

Taft Reviews Fleet For First Time Since Election.

New York, Nov. 3.—President Taft yesterday had his first real view of the United States navy. It had so happened since he entered the White House that the fleet, which was so greatly admired by his predecessor, Col. Roosevelt, had been on widely scattered duty for the greater part of the time.

From the bridge of the Presidential yacht Mayflower, Mr. Taft reviewed the gray armada of one hundred fighting vessels that for nearly a week had swung at anchor in the Hudson River awaiting his inspection.

As the little white Mayflower picked her way in and out among the giant craft of the battleship line, the guns of the fleet roared in a reverberating chorus of salute. Accepting these tributes as a matter of course, and disdaining to reply to any of them, the yacht, with the President's blue-created flag at the main truck, sailed gracefully along the seven-mile column of fighting ships, turned at the end, and headed again down the river.

Following the review of the fleet, President Taft issued the following statement: "Those who saw the fighting fleet, which was assembled in New York harbor to-day, could not fail to be struck with its preparedness and with its high military efficiency, and must have been proud of its personnel.

"The equipment of the fleet is excellent, except as to the number of destroyers, and cruisers and colliers in proportion to the whole number. We had in the fleet yesterday 29 destroyers, or an average of four to each battleship. It is true that there has been a marked improvement in the type of colliers and fast cruisers in our navy, but it is also true that we have not a sufficient number.

"In addition to building great battleships, other nations are building enormous high-speed cruisers — 26 knots per hour—and it is believed that our navy should be similarly equipped. Unless a navy is maintained at the highest possible state of efficiency, it is a needless extravagance."

INTERESTING EXPERIENCE OF A TORONTO LADY

I have seen OXO Cubes advertised a great deal and thought I would try them, so I bought a 25c. tin and found them so satisfactory that I am going to tell the women of this city how I used them.

MONDAY - night, we were going to the theatre, so I filled my brass kettle and alcohol lamp and left them in the den with the box of OXO Cubes. We were tired and cold when we returned from the play. But in a moment, the water was boiling, the OXO Cubes were dissolved, and we were sipping the most delicious "beef tea" I ever tasted. And how we did sleep that night!

TUESDAY morning, my small daughter would not take her milk. I was at my wit's end when I thought of the OXO Cubes. I brought out the box, let her open one of the cartons, and showed her how to stir in the OXO with the milk. She said it was "goody" and every morning now she wants her "brown milk."

WEDNESDAY There is a dear old lady next door who has been ill for a long time. I wanted to make something to tempt her appetite. So I dissolved an ounce of Gelatine and three OXO Cubes in a pint of boiling water—then added a wineglassful of sherry and poured into a mold, allowed it to cool and sent it to my poor friend. When I ran in to see her next morning, she actually cried as she tried to tell me how good it was.

THURSDAY Two of the children do not come from school at lunchtime. I do not care to give them meat sandwiches—yet want them to have something more sustaining than bread and sweets. OXO Cubes solved the problem. I now spread OXO Cubes on bread and know that the children have a nourishing and appetizing luncheon.

FRIDAY Just as we had finished dinner, who should walk in but my brother and his new wife! While I was warming the rest of the dinner, I had the kettle boiling, dropped in a few OXO Cubes and brought in two big plates of steaming OXO soup in a jiffy. After dinner, my new sister asked "how did you make that delicious soup?" When I told her it was OXO Cubes, she was so pleased to know that she could have soup like mine.

SATURDAY I came in from doing my Sunday shopping all fagged out—and I could feel myself coming down with a dreadful cold. I made a cup of OXO and felt so rested that I added two OXO Cubes to another cup of boiling water and drank that. When I awoke Sunday morning, I had not a sign of a cold. I am finding new uses for OXO Cubes every day.

SUNDAY We were tired of the everlasting eggs or chops for breakfast so I tried to see what I could do with OXO Cubes. I fried a small onion cut in slices, with a little apple, in butter until brown—then poured in a teacupful of stock made with two OXO Cubes and boiling water—and added a tablespoonful of curry powder, a little chutney and finally minced cold beef. I stirred it for fifteen minutes over the fire and served in a hot dish, garnished with boiled rice. Everybody was delighted with my OXO creation.

OXO Cubes are the greatest advance in food invention since men began to eat and women learnt to cook.

"The Gun Runner"

By ARTHUR STRINGER

He whipped about and followed the line of that terrified stare. Then he understood what it meant. He saw where the two lines of the narrow-gauge track came to an end: he saw where some half-dozen lengths of rails had been torn away, and tossed to one side. He saw the track, on which they rode, the track which he had come to regard as something fixed and stable, as something permanent as the earth itself, end in nothing.

His foot went down on the emergency brake, viciously, at the same moment that his outflung arm threw the speed lever off. He knew, even then, that it was all useless, that it was all too late. But he acted subconsciously, automatically. He knew what was coming, even before the wheel-flanges dropped from the rail-end and lunged and shook and pounded along the sleepers. He braced himself and held tight, as the girl was doing—praying, all the while, that the rushing thing of steel would not overturn.

But a forward wheel gave way, under the strain, and the car-floor suddenly dipped under them, dipped and bowed until the axle locked against a cross-tie with a jolt that sent the great hulk careening sideways, where it raised and rolled over in the yellow sand, ponderously, indignantly, like an ill-treated animal.

McKinnon caught the girl as she fell on him, with a sharp out-swinging motion. But he swung and tumbled her free of the car, away from the menace of the toppling cartridge boxes. Then he rolled over on his face ,and crawled to the girl's side, on all fours, with the grit of yellow sand between his teeth and the choking smart of the dust-cloud still in his gasping lungs.

CHAPTER XXXI.

THE LAST HOPE

McKinnon's fall seemed to shock him into new life. The very abruptness of his disaster brought with it a renewed appreciation of danger. His mind became alert again, with the peevish alertness of febrility, as though, like the long-taxed body, it were capable of coming into a sort of second wind.

He realized what had happened, for he was thinking clearly and quickly now. He could see the whole thing, and see it only too well. De Brigard's men had had the forethought to break the one line of communication between Guariqui and the coast. This end had been achieved easily enough, by the mere uprooting of a few lengths of track. He had ridden into that open trap, without thought. He had demanded too much of Destiny. Luck had at last gone against him, as it must in the end go against every man who insists on taking his chances.

They were alone there, he and the girl he was trying to save, under the hot mornin gsun of an open and unprotected country. They were stranded on a slope of yellow ballast sand, face to face with a guerilla army that would refuse them quarter, under the walls of a beleaguered city that would decline to admit them. Yes, he had asked too much of Fate. There was nothing left to him now, but to fight it out, fight it out to a finish.

The next clearly defined thought that came to him was that he was burning with thirst. Before everything else, he felt, he must have water. And there remained only one hope of water. That was the little stream two hundred yards behind them, the flashing little ribbon of blue over which De Brigard's men would be swarming at any moment.

There was no time to be lost. His first task was to make his way to that stream and back—to fight his way there and back ,if need be. He could not hold out, he knew, without water.

He dodged and peered and groped about the overturned car, in feverish search for anything that would hold water. That hurried search seemed a hopeless one, until his eyes fell on a battered gasoline can of ganvanized tin, stowed away under the seat-frame. He got the screwtop off its cover, in some way, and let its contents bubble out on the yellow sand as he swung about the car again. The moment he did so the sharp, complaining pinnnnng of a bullet sounded close over his head. It had come from the west, from Guariqui. Before he could dodge in under the far side of the car body it was repeated, again, and still again. One of Duran's men, he knew, was picking at him from a housetop.

He found the girl, as he dodged back into shelter, sitting against the floor of the overturned car. Her face was colourless, and her eyes unnaturally large.

"Is this the end?" she asked, as he caught up one of the carbines half smothered in sand at her feet.

"The end?" he cried. "No, it's not the end!"

"What can I do?" she asked.

"We've got to have water—and I'm going to get it! Keep close to that car until I get back!"

"But they'll cut you off; they'll ——"

He had not waited to hear her. He the hot morning sun of an open and undulating ground, bending low as he ran. She could easily follow his moving black shadow, in the glare of the open sunlight. She heard a scattering of rifle shots further eastward as he crossed a stretch of higher ground. Then she saw him drop to his knee. Her first thought was that he was wounded. But the next moment she beheld him bring his rifle into action, and then run forward, and repeat the movement, and again run forward. Then he ducked lower, and rose again, and suddenly dropped down into the bed of the creek, completely out of sight.

He remained there for what seemed an interminable length of time to her. The vicious snapping and popping of the distant guns crept ominously closer ,second by second. They would cut him off before he could even climb from the creek-bed.

Then, in the clear light, she saw his head emerge. She caught sight of him worming cautiously back, dodging and rounding into each land-depression. The gun shots began again, until they became a rhythm of hollow sound, like quick and impatient hammer-pounds on a plank. She saw that he was wet to the knees and breathing hard as he stumbled back to the car.

Then, as she saw the wet and dripping can, all her being was centred on the thought of her own thirst, of how her dry throat ached and throbbed for water. She scarcely noticed that the firing had ceased, that the line of skulking and scattered figures had fallen mysteriously away. She only knew that McKinnon had dropped that precious water can in front of her.

The next moment he was hauling and tearing at the overturned cart ridge boxes. At first, as she looked up and saw his hollow and exultant eyes, she thought he had lost his reason, that pain and fatigue and hunger had left him hopelessly mad. But as she watched his struggles she knew there was a method in them.

For he was dragging and hauling the heavy boxes into a line directly before the overturned car. Then, with a railway-spike and a musket-end, he pried the tops from those boxes which came most readily apart, and poured the dross and cartridges out in one heap. Then he flung the end of a broken car-step to the girl.

"Quick!" he commanded, kicking a box towards her. "Fill these with sand!"

She did as he ordered, scooping up the yellow sand with the fragment of flat iron, while he dragged more cartridge boxes from the car wreck, and built up a little three-sided wall about the spot where she dug. His movements, at times, took him beyond the bulwark of the overturned car, and each time he thus exposed himself the man from the Guariqui housetop sniped at him, calmly and viciously.

"This is our only chance," he hurriedly explained, as he ducked irritably back out of fire and tugged and hauled and lifted at his boxes.

"Our chance for what?" she asked, as she worked.

"For holding out—for keeping them back —for saving this ammunition for Guariqui!"

He was now taking the boxes as she filled them, and piling them one above the other on the outside of his roughly built wall, as an armour-belt protection for his serried cartridge cases. He was afraid of what a bullet at close range might do to those cartridges. And all the while, slowly and methodically, the Guariqui sharpshooter was picking at him, as he showed himself outside the shadow of the car-wreck.

"We can hold them off, I tell you!" McKinnon was exulting, as he left a narrow embrasure in his three-foot battlement, by pushing two of the boxes a few inches apart. "We've got a fort here! We're as safe as Guariqui is! They can't get in behind us, because Ulloa's men are waiting there, and they know it! They've got to come at us from the front! And we're safe behind this—it's as safe as a stone wall! And we've got ammunition—a ton of it, if we need it!"

He was hauling at more of the boxes, building his side walls now.

One of the Guariqui sharpshooter's bullets whined in over his head, within a foot of where he worked. He swung about and shook his fist at his unseen enemy, irritably, impotently.

"You fool!" he cried. "You fool! —wasting powder on the people who're tryin' to save you!"

"We can't save them!" said the woman, gray with dust, weak with hunger, sick with fear. But she worked on, mechanically, doggedly.

"We've got to!" exulted McKinnon, as he took the last box of sand from her. "We've got to hold out until the Princeton lands her men and gets them up into the hills here! It's simply a matter of time! We can hold out here as well as in Guariqui! We're safe here! And we've got water!"

"But no food!" she said.

"Wait!" he cried again. "The chocolate! And the milk tablets! It's enough! And here's brandy, see—half a cupful of brandy left!"

"But how long will that last?"

"It will last as long as we need it —until nightfall, anyway!" he declared ,as he crawled back to the car and dragged the remaining rifle out from under the fallen boxes.

"But if the Princeton's men are not here by night?" she asked.

He seemed to resent her note of hopelessness.

"They will be here by night! They've got to be here! They should be at Puerto Locombia by five this afternoon. They'll commandeer a Fruit Concern locomotive from the roundhouse there, and be up here by sunset—before sunset!"

She forced herself to believe him. She struggled to catch at some shadow of his hopefulness.

"Then what more must I do to help?" she asked, very quietly. He was peering out over the rolling and sun-steeped plain.

"Eat—we must eat before those devils start back at us!" he said, as he caught up the can of gasoline-tainted water and gulped at it, savagely, for the sun by this time was cruelly hot overhead. Then he dragged out his brandy flask, diluted its contents, and made the girl drink from it.

"If that fool back there'd only stop wasting powder!" he cried, as a bullet splattered against a car wheel behind them. "They won't understand who we are, back there, until they see De Brigard's men coming in closer and closer, or trying to rush us. They won't know we're friends until they see us holding that guerilla mob off!"

"It can't be long now," said the girl, blinking out across the sun-steeped plain ,where, in the distance, restless brown figures could be seen once more moving and dispersing and concealing themselves along the land-dips.

"Then we must eat, before they come," he answered, putting the broken and crumpled pieces of army chocolate out between them. The milk tablets he decided to save for a second meal. Then he loaded the rifles, and laid them out ready, and placed the three revolvers on a box-top, with his pocketful of cartridges close beside them.

And they sat there on the yellow sand of their little rifle pit, breakfasting on brandy and water and unsweetened chocolate, while they waited for the enemy to come up.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE LAST STAND.

Alicia was busy tying a strip of linen skirt into a cap for McKinnon's head, to protect him from the sun, when the firing began again.

It was not general, at first. It was more the spasmodic and desultory pizzicato of sound which foretells the readiness of the waiting orchestra. It began quietly, as a storm begins, yet there seemed little that was ominous about it. The listening girl wondered, as De Brigard's outposts worked their way closer and closer in towards the creek-bed, if she had not become half inured to the tumult of musketry.

McKinnon, watching at the embrasure, conceded them any territory that lay beyond the creek-brink. It was wasting time and powder, he knew, to attempt to hold them back from that little stream-botom. He only too poignantly realized the limitations of his short-barrelled rifles of "Belgian Damascus." He was not altogether unfamiliar with that particular make of arm. They were weapons which only too often left the detonation of thirty grains of powder a peril and converted bullet-trajectories into a thing of ever-changing wonder. But he had shown Alicia how to reload each of these rifles. He had also taught her the trick of dislodging a shell when it jammed —for many of the cartridges, after their sea-trip, were still damp and swollen.

But beyond the wavering line of that creek-bank, he determined, no man should advance unchallenged. Above all things, he knew, he had to keep his front clear.

"It's ten to one they won't come at us in force," he explained to the girl crouched at his knees in the rifle pit. "They won't throw themselves on us until they know what we carry. But we've got to stop that first rush!"

It was a minute or two before she spoke, for a flurry of bullets came whistling and whimpering and quavering close in over their heads. One or two, McKinnon noticed, chugged ominously against the face of his sand boxes. But most of them went

"Couldn't I get to Guariqui?" the girl was asking. "Couldn't I—with a white flag of some sort, to warn them?"

"Couldn't I—with a white flag of some sort, to warn them?"

"These devils 'd never let you get twenty feet away. And it would do no good!"

So Dreadful Was the Suffering From Itching Piles

After Twenty Years of Pile Torture Relief and Cure Came with

Dr. Chase's Ointment

You take no risk and you make no experiment when you use Dr. Chase's Ointment for piles. Many doctors still cling to the idea that nothing but an operation will effect a cure. But operations are expensive and dangerous and often fail in their results. Some have been cured by Dr. Chase's Ointment after operations had failed.

Dr. Chase's Ointment truly has a wonderful record as a cure. Here is a case which was reported recently:

Mr. John P. Marshall, 14 Barnes road, St. John's, Nfld., writes: "For upwards of twenty years I was troubled terribly with itching piles; at times so bad that I was obliged to lay up ,unable to attend to business.

"I tried many treatments without benefit, until II accidentally read of Dr. Chase's Ointment, and found at last a cure by using this ointment. I only used one box and part of a second one when I was completely cured, and have had no return of the piles. That was eighteen months ago, and, needless to say, I attribute this cure to Dr. Chase's Invaluable Ointment."

Many sufferers from piles have tried so many scores of treatments that they cannot believe that cure is possible. In order to convince the skeptical we are always willing to send a sample box free to anyone who encloses a two -cent stamp to pay postage.

VERDICT OF $1,000 IN CASE OF C. G. E. FOR DEATH OF HUGH DARKE

erintendent, was the next witness to take the stand.

"What experience have you had?"

"I have had about 34 years' experience."

"You don't look it."

"You know the machine referred to."

"Yes".

"Did you examine it?"

"Just its general outlay. I did not figure out about the clamps. I left it to my foreman."

"What was its condition?"

"Mechanical part ready to run."

"Are your foremen competent men?"

"Yes, as far as I know."

"Is the design and machinery up to date? It is charged that your design is not up to date."

"They are set up temporarily."

"After the test?"

"They are shipped out."

"After the belts are put on and before the power is turned on, is there anything to be done?"

"No. No person has any right to touch it."

"Then, when belts are put on, is it practical to put a guard on the inside of the belt?"

"No. It is not necessary. There is no occasion for any person to go in there."

"If there is any adjusting to be done, is the power turned off?"

"Yes, certainly."

"Are there any notices around the shop, ordering men to keep away from the machine?"

"Yes. I told the foreman to keep the men from using the doorway nearest the machine."

Mr. O'Connell crossexamined the witness.

"You rely on your foremen to see that all is right."

"Yes; and I did in this instance."

Mr. Nelson Munro, foreman of the Pattern Department, was called.

"Did you see this machine?" asked the lawyer for the defence.

"Yes."

The model of the machine was then produced.

"Is this an accurate model?"

"Yes."

"This represents the bolt as being higher than the belt. Was it?"

"I don't know."

The evidence was completed, and the counsel summed up the testimony in their addresses to the Jury.

In addressing the jury, Mr. Watson said that it was simply a matter of sentiment on one hand, and legal business on the other. He said that all the foremen admitted that the work that evening was done without authority from the officials. "There is sentiment, theory and conjecture, but the decision should be based wholly on the evidence," said Mr. Watson. "You cannot make the law suit one thing in one case, and another thing in another case. It is always the same. There is no question, but Mr. Darke was a faithful, honest, and good workman, but at the same time he was not independent. He was a helper and, therefore, subject to orders. The evidence shows that the workmen were through with the work and had no business working at bolts, or anything else, whatever. These men had no authority to do anything after the machine had been passed. They were not doing a wrong, but their zeal ran away with them. Therefore, we submit to the court that Mr. Darke was a pure volunteer on his own account, and not under instruction. It is very evident that it was negligence on Darke's part, putting himself in danger, and with the fatal results, but as it was purely voluntary work, without any orders from the officials ,or those in authority, I submit the Company is free from all liability in the matter.

Mr. O'Connell then addressed the Jury on behalf of the claimant. He asked them to overlook the extreme principles of law and to use common sense in the matter. He outlined the law under the Workmen's Compensation for Accident Act, and pointed out the relationship of the present accident to these measures. "It has been clearly brought out in the evidence," he said, "that if a guard had been placed on the belt, the accident would not have happened. Any company is bound to exercise care, and any company with a defective system of working and machinery testing apparatus is guilty of negligence. They were negligent in not having established a code of signals for these men. Thompson, and he alone, was in charge of the work on that machine on the 15th night of June, 1911. He alone had charge of those men, whom he had a right to protect. He was supervising the test. Was Thompson negligent? If he was negligent with this engine, he is liable. Was there any code of signals on this night, or any time? These men had been working all day, and it is no wonder if poor human nature became negligent. Exercise your own order of common sense, gentlemen. While this man was sitting there to watch the machine, he, the man in charge, said: "I think that machine will shift when the power is put on." Was it not his duty to see to it, even if it was not an order from the Company? Thompson was a representative of his employers. It is necessary for a man to exercise care, and you can realize the enormous responsibility that rested on this man, and as a consequence on the defendant, the Company itself. Again, gentlemen, Cartner came and said: "Don't start that machine, because we are tightening up the bolts. It should not have been necessary to say anything to that man, when men were in such a dangerous position. It was negligent on the part of Thompson not to have gone around that machine and seen that all was right before turning on the current. He did not go around that machine at the time he was going to start it. It was before that that he went around it. That makes the Company liable under the Act. Don't you think that if they had had a code of signals this accident would have been averted. Signals so doubtful, so ambiguous—the mechanical wagging or nodding of the head—caused an accident which bereaved a family. That is carrying on business under a defective system. My learned friend speaks of sentiment and sympathy, and so forth. Leave that all aside, and you have bare facts brought out distinctly in the evidence. The Company was negligent in not having the proper system of signals, not up-to-date modes of work—not guarding dangerous belts.

Yesterday's session ended here. His Honour reserved his charge to the Jury until 9 o'clock this morning.

GIFT TO JOURNALISM

Special to The Examiner.

NEW YORK, NOV. 2.—The gift of $1,000,000, which Joseph Pulitzer offered in 1903 for the institution of a school of journalism is now available for use.

"Mr. Pulitzer's death not only makes this money available," said a principal officer of Columbia, "but we are obligated to use it. We will start in right away."

The project was present in Mr. Pulitzer's mind up to the very time of his death. One of his principal subordinates on the World said that he had consulted with Mr. Pulitzer a short time before he started south about the school.

No one at Columbia was ready to specify when the school would be ready to receive students.

NOTHING LIKE IT FOR COLDS

Mrs. Holland Ferguson, Sheffield, N.B., writes: "Dr. Chase's Syrup of Linseed and Turpentine has cured my children and myself of severe colds. We are never without it in the house. There is nothing like it for colds and throat trouble, and it is so soothing and pleasant to take, my children would drink a whole bottle if they were permitted."

VITAL STATISTICS

The vital statistics for the month of October show an increase in the death rate over that of the same month last year of four. Following is the complete list of births, marriages and deaths for October, 1910 and 1911:

TOMMY'S REPLY

Tommy had not been at the Sunday school for a whole year. On that occasion he had been put into the class conducted by the minister's wife, and had so disgraced his elder brothers and sisters with his bad conduct that, on returning home, his mother said he would not be allowed to go again until he learned to behave better. A year had gone by since then, and the motheer, thinking her son had now got more sense, once more sent him off to the Sunday school. Again he was received patronizingly by the lady of the manse, who had long ago forgotten that there was such a person as Tommy in existence. "And what is your name, my little man?" she asked. With offended dignity Tommy replied, "Ye ken fine. Ye askit me the last time I was here."—Mrs. L.

NOT WANTED

Dennis O'Grady, who lived at the top of a very steep hill, was disturbed by a hawker selling fish one Sunday morning. He informed the man he did not buy fish on Sunday, as he thought it wrong. The hawker talked in vain, but at last gave it up and went down the hill. He just reached the bottom when Dennis called him. Thinking he was going to sell some fish, the hawker climbed the hill again, and reached the top exhausted. Great was his surprise when Dennis tapped him on the shoulder and said, "And Oi don't want any fish next Sunday, either."

MR. MARTIN HAILS SOCIETY'S REFORM

Critic of "the Idle Rich," in London, Discusses the Transition Period.

THOUGHT IS AROUSED

New York Man Talks of the Discussions of Serious Matters That Take Place of Frivolity.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

"THE most delicate, the most sensible of all pleasures, consists in promoting the pleasures of others."

Jean La Bruyere, from whom the quotation is taken, did not know Mr Frederick Townsend Martin, nor did La Bruyere directly refer to English society. But Mr. Frederick Townsend Martin is propagating the gospel of La Bruyere and English society is rapidly becoming converted and keen disciples.

It has been long known that the English take their pleasures sadly. A French authority told us that some time ago, but only recently we have realised that the "Idle Rich" are passing away and the indolent plutocrats are looking beyond the circumscribed limit which admits only of the joys of life. The transition period is at hand. The old order is giving place to the new, says Mr. Martin, who told us some time ago that English society was beginning to think seriously on mundane and social problems. His recent visit to Balmacaan, the Scottish residence of Mrs. Bradley Martin, has fully confirmed his convictions.

"At the dinner table and in the smoking room the conversations were directed to matters of serious moment—subjects that never entered into the conversation a few years ago," Mr. Martin said to your correspondent at the Berkeley Hotel, London. "From the 10th of August to the 10th of October the conversations were all serious."

All classes of society have been stopping at Balmacaan. The German Ambassador, Mrs. Cornwallis West, the Duchess of Roxburghe and Lady de Trafford have been of the house party at times, and they have all taken the keenest interest in social problems.

Stunned by Wars.

"Society has been so stunned by the horror of international and industrial wars and the possibilities of wars that they talk of nothing else," Mr. Martin went on. "Their one thought has been on what is going to happen next. This terrible unrest between nations and in the industrial world has made all classes think furiously.

"There is no room in society for the idle, frivolous person nowadays. In the great city of London the change has been tremendous. The King and Queen are the King and Queen of the people. They are getting hold of the people; their hearts beat in sympathy with their laboring subjects. They have no patience with any frivolity or extravagance—they are against it all. Their one desire is to improve and strengthen the great laboring element of the land."

On his visit to Scotland Mr. Martin spoke to many Highland audiences. In Inverness and at other places the hardy Scots hailed him with delight. He will return to the United States on November 11, and in the intervening time he hopes to have an opportunity of discussing social problems with Mr. Lloyd-George, particularly in relation to the Insurance bill.

The Earl of Chesterfield has promised to arrange a meeting with the British Chancellor, and Mr. Martin hopes to simplify the British Insurance bill and carry back the principles to America, where he will endeavor to introduce the idea of State-aided insurance. He hopes to speak in the great centres of America on the subject this winter and tell the laboring classes of the United States what a benefit such a scheme would be to them.

C

Mr. Martin's Hopes.

"Hitherto the rich people have had the insurance and the poor pawnshops when financial troubles faced them," said Mr. Martin, "and the bill I am going to propound is divided into three parts. The government gives one-third, the employer contributes one-third and the workman one-third. The workman will then feel that the government takes an interest in him generally and he will feel that he is a copartner with his employer, which will raise his self-respect and make him feel that he is losing none of his manhood. The employer can only reap benefit by it because he will foster enthusiasm in his workmen. I seek no reward. I want nothing but to see in the years that I have left that justice is given to the people who are struggling to earn their living by the sweat of their brow."

Mr. Martin added that the whole of the first edition of his book, "The Passing of the Idle Rich," had been sold out within a week of publication.

"And why?" he tersely asked a question of himself. "Because it is the cry of the people and a warning to all those who have wealth of the responsibilities that go with it. Love of gold makes for rottenness in social life. There can never be industrial peace until the laboring classes have had justice. The hand of friendship and a fellow feeling must go out all round. On the one side the capitalists have gold to offer, and on the other the worker has strength and health and you cannot blame him for holding out to sell it at the best figure."

Injustice.

Hercules—Atlas was upholding the world on his shoulders.

Atlas—I only objection," he peeved, "is that people keep mistaking me for a newly elected member of the Legislature."

King Likely to Acquire Famed Stafford House for Prince of Wales' Residence

STAFFORD HOUSE FROM THE GARDENS.

PRINCE EDWARD

Court Circles Hear Mansion Will Be Handed Over to British Monarch at Son's Majority.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

AN interesting bit of gossip current in court circles is to the effect that palatial Stafford House, the famous home of the Duke of Sutherland, is likely to be handed over to King George as a residence for the Prince of Wales on his coming of age.

In the absence of any authoritative statement on the subject, it may be pointed out that Stafford House is built on Crown land, being part of the stable yard of St. James' Palace and part of the Green Park. In another twenty-five years or so the lease will fall in, when an enormous premium for its renewal is sure to be demanded by the government, considering how vastly the value of the land has increased in London. Add to this prospective difficulty the fact that the Duke of Sutherland is believed to be willing to part with the residence to a really desirable tenant, and it will be seen that the acquisition of Stafford House by the Crown is an extremely likely event.

As to its suitability for the Prince there can be hardly two opinions. Originally Stafford House was intended as a royal residence. It was built for the second son of George III., the Duke of York, but he did not live to reside in it. On his death it was purchased by the then Duke of Sutherland for $330,000.

If the Prince goes to Stafford House he will possess the finest private residence in London. The great gallery is perhaps the most magnificent room in England, while the dining room is worthy of Versailles. Here and in the adjoining salons is a superb collection of masterpieces, including works by Raphael, Titian, Murillo, Rubens and Velasquez.

AUTUMN SEASON BEGINS.

With the beginning of November the autumn season in London may be said to have fairly begun, for here, notwithstanding the pheasants and partridges, the race meetings and the hunting preparations up and down the countryside, it is already quite bright and gay, fit prelude to the 1911 "Little Season," which, with its opera, dances and numerous weddings, bids fair to prove quite an agreeable one.

Country house parties, the well stocked coverts for raison d'etre, are still, of course, in full swing, and will continue so till the days grow shorter and only shooting remains for the country dwellers' beguilement. But one has only to dine or lunch at the Ritz or Carlton to find much entertainment going on already. Also, the road is "up" in Piccadilly, just where the Ritz and Berkeley converge. There could be no clearer sign that London is itself again.

True, the departure of the King and Queen for India will interfere with the season to some little extent, but it should be remembered that the Court is seldom in London at this time of year, and although it has been said that the coming Durbar in India will considerably diminish the success of the London winter season, this is reckoned scarcely possible by those who seem to know, as the number who are to attend the great ceremony is limited.

In many respects the period which London has now entered upon promises to be interesting, and quite a number of hostesses are giving, and have announced their intention of giving, a series of entertainments that should prove attractive to young people.

COMING OPERA SEASON.

London is also provided with two opera houses now, and those interested in grand opera are waiting with considerable curiosity, if not eagerness, to see what Mr. Oscar Hammerstein has in store for them, because he has promised many singers quite new to London, and all good, and has let it be pretty well known that it is not merely singers with well known names that he always tries to procure. He is always on the lookout for fresh talent and has much of that to inaugurate his first season at the London Opera House, and some "revelations" are expected. So no more should be heard of the old complaint that with the exception of the grand opera season in the height of the summer no one has ever had any opportunity of hearing operatic works.

Among those who continue to keep festival in the North are the Duke and Duchess of Roxburghe, who will have successions of shooting parties at Floors Castle up till the end of November. While several of their extensive moors are let to tenants, as usual, they have retained for their own use this season the five moors of Floors, Roxburghe Barony, Cessford, Marchcleuch and Sprouston Barony, so that their guests are enjoying excellent sport.

Admiral and Mrs. Beatty, who have given up their projected visit to Egypt, are now in London preparing for a visit to Paris en route to Italy, where they will spend several weeks. Mrs. Beatty is looking after the alterations in the grounds of their house, Hanover Lodge, and she is having a lawn tennis court made of some new and impermeable surface laid down for play in wet weather.

Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Cunard are entertaining at Andover a succession of shooting parties, and do not intend returning to Portman square until the beginning of winter.

QUEEN'S EXCELLENT HEALTH.

Queen Mary is looking very well since her return from the North, where the bracing air of the Highlands always benefits her health. Her only sorrow now is the thought of leaving her children at the time of her visit to India. Little Princess Mary, who is always her mother's right hand, is rarely out of her sight and is as busy as the Queen with plans for her education during the absence in India.

Princess Mary is undertaking some work in connection with the Needlework Guild, in which the Queen has always taken a very deep interest, and another important occupation just now is the arranging and sorting, necessary at a much earlier date than usual this year, of the Christmas presents, not only for personal friends, but also for their dependents and the poor, who every year count on some useful gift from the royal household.

In their stay in Scotland the Queen was engaged in this work and has brought back many purchases which she made when at Balmoral, including, in addition to many specimens of Scottish jewelry, lengths of tweeds and homespun from the Shetland Isles. These are being sorted out now and will be left in the charge of responsible persons for distribution when the proper time comes.

CANADA A MAGNET FOR THE NOBILITY

Many Scions of Britain's Aristocracy Moving to Life in the Dominion.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

CANADA seems to be creating a wonderful fascination for the British aristocracy in these days. Young Lord Somers, who is a kinsman of Lady Henry Somerset and Adeline Duchess of Bedford, has thrown up his commission in the First Life Guards and gone to Canada.

It seems to be becoming more and more rare for the "gilded youth" of England to stick to the army and make it a lifelong profession. There are so many counter attractions. Matrimony, that has made many young men throw up their commissions, and politics, too, seem to be great lures.

Among young members of Parliament who were officers are Lord Vivian Crichton-Stewart, of the Scots Guard; the Hon. Frederick Guest, First Life Guards; the Hon. John Lyttleton, Rifle Brigade, and, of course, there is the Home Secretary, Mr. Winston Churchill. Lord Cardross, Scots Guards, and the Hon. Galbraith Cole, the Tenth Hussars, fell to the call of Africa. Lord Dalmeny, the Grenadier Guards, was probably a victim of his love of change.

Other scions of noble houses who have left crack regiments are Lord Stafford, Second Dragoon Guards; Lord Douro, Grenadier Guards; Lord Anglesey, Royal Horse Guards; Lord Guernsey, Irish Guards; the Hon. Algernon Strutt, Third Hussars; Lord Montgomerie, Second Life Guards; the Hon. Wilfred Egerton, First Dragoons; Lord Malden, Seventh Hussars; Lord Lascelles, Grenadier Guards, and the Hon. Richard Preston, Royal Field Artillery.

GIVE AWAY DEVILS AND GET GLUTTONS

Why London's Zoological Garden "Has the Laugh on" the Copenhagen Keepers.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

The keepers at the Zoological Gardens are just now enjoying the greatest joke of their lives. The Zoological Society has added to its collection two fine specimens of the wolverine, or "glutton," as it is commonly known, which they got from Copenhagen in exchange for two Tasmanian devils.

As is always the case when there are any fresh arrivals at the "Zoo," crowds of curious sightseers flock to see the gluttons, but the smile and quiet chortle of the keeper as you ask him questions about the glutton are quite inexplicable till you know the reason.

The story runs that Copenhagen had more gluttons than it quite knew what to do with, and, discovering that Regent's Park had a big family of devils, but no gluttons, offered to exchange a couple of the latter for a pair of the former. London swapped willingly, and that is why the keepers at the Gardens are laughing. They find the glutton not so very voracious as its name implies. It is a dainty animal, and, while it eats an enormous lot in a day, it is not everything that it will eat.

If Copenhagen wanted to get rid of some of these immense eaters with a view to reducing its food bill, the "boot is on the other foot," for the Tasmanian devil is a perfect super-glutton. It is never done eating. It is never satisfied. There is nothing dainty about the devil. It will eat and eat anything at all that it is allowed to throw its lip over until a glorious death puts an end to its feasting.

So they think that London has got the best of the bargain. That, at any rate, is how the keepers look at it.

$133,740 ANNUALLY FROM $40 OUTLAY

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

To invest $40 in a bit of land and later on to get an annual income out of it of $133,740 may seem a pretty fair return for one's money, but that is what has happened in the case of the estate of East Quantockstead, in Somersetshire, though some of the "gilt" is taken off the "gingerbread" when it is noted that it has taken eight hundred and fifty years to reach that income.

The story has only just been revealed through the publication of the returns of land valuation for taxation purposes. It seems that the Domesday Book of William the Conqueror is the only parallel to the land valuation now being carried on in England, and it is this survey which has revealed the fact that this estate has remained in the hands of one family from the date of the Domesday Book until now.

East Quantockstead belongs to Mr. A. F. Luttrell, who is a lineal descendant of Ralph Paynell or Pagenal, who held it in the time of the Conqueror, and the entry in the Domesday Book, which is printed in the annual report of the Inland Revenue Commissioners, tells that it was worth only an equivalent of $40 in those days, whereas now it is assessed at $132,740, which is understood to be the value of the annual rentals and fees derived from the estate.

MRS. DREXEL TAKES ASQUITH HOME

Prime Minister, Therefore, It Is Argued, Expects Long to Remain in Power.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

MR. ASQUITH evidently expects the Liberal party to remain in office for a considerable time, because he has just let on a long lease to Mrs. Anthony Drexel his private residence at No. 20 Cavendish square, which he has no use for so long as he occupies the Prime Minister's residence at No. 10 Downing street.

The house in Cavendish square, which is remarkable for its fine mahogany staircase, with walls painted by Sir James Thornhill, the Georgian artist, frequently has been let to well known Americans. Mrs. Spender Clay occupied the house for some time before she settled in Hill street; Lady Cunard rented it for several seasons, and Mrs. Waldorf Astor was another of Mr. Asquith's tenants.

Mrs. Anthony Drexel is to make No. 20 Cavendish square her headquarters during the winter season. The health of her daughter, Lady Maidstone, although much improved, still causes some anxiety. Lady Maidstone was operated upon for appendicitis last month, and during the critical period of her illness Mrs. Drexel was in constant attendance upon her daughter. The operation was performed at Berkeley House, Witley, which Mrs. Drexel rented for the last summer and where Lord and Lady Maidstone and their baby son are now stopping.

Private theatricals seem likely to be a feature of the forthcoming season more than they have ever been before. At a large number of the houses of leading members of society, both in London and in the country, theatrical entertainments, in which the guests "fill the bill," have been organized. Bridge and other society hobbies are not ousted, but play acting appears to be the vogue at the moment.

HOW PRINCESS GOT HER IRISH NAME

Pretty Story of the Green Isle in the Life of Princess Patricia of Connaught.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

PRINCESS PATRICIA, who is spending a few weeks with her sister, the Crown Princess of Sweden, at Stockholm, before she joins her father and mother, the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, in Canada, got her name in a way which perhaps few know or remember.

Her father got his second name Patrick, because Queen Victoria, when in Ireland, a short time before he was born, was appealed to by an Irish woman to "call your next son Patrick and all Ireland will die for ye!"

So with the Princess Patricia. She was brought up in her early youth in Ireland, when she somehow acquired quite an "Irish look," while the soft complexion that you so often see in the Green Isle and the brightness of her eyes enhanced by their having been put in by what is known as "the inky finger," so notable in Irish beauties, has frequently been commented upon.

The Princess has received several offers of marriage, but they were from foreign princes, and so far she has shown no wish to leave her native country. Like her mother she is devoted to the "simple life." Her taste for painting is well known, and she has often shown specimens of her art at London and other exhibitions. For millinery she has quite a penchant, and besides trimming hats she can make very attractive wreaths for ball frocks. The daisy wreaths worn by the bridesmaids at the wedding of her sister Daisy, the Crown Princess of Sweden, at Windsor were put together by Princess Patsy's clever fingers.

PEERAGE ROMANCE IN SEAFIELD WILL

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE will of the late Catherine Countess of Seafield, the largest landowner in Scotland, and one of the greatest in the United Kingdom, has opened up an interesting chapter in a peerage romance.

The Countess' son was the eighth earl, and when he died, unmarried at the age of thirty-two, he left all he possessed to his mother. As the estate was not entailed, his successor to the title was deprived of all proprietary right in the estates and the annual revenue, which then amounted to over $400,000.

The ninth earl was the uncle of his predecessor, and he was succeeded in turn by his son Francis, who lived in humble circumstances in New Zealand, and whom the Countess was very anxious to bring to England to educate and bring up with a view of his becoming a fitting successor to the earldom and estate; but for some reason he would not leave the country of his adoption.

The present peer, who is the eleventh and who sits in the House of Lords a Baron Strathspey, was born in New Zealand, but is now resident in Ireland, and by the will of the late Countess the estates are to follow the title again, but, with a view to disencumbering the estates of the debt, which the late Countess has been striving to do ever since the death of her son, the property will be administered by a body of trustees, who will allow the present Earl an addition to the income which the late Countess afforded him and the right to occupy Cullen House, in Banffshire, and Castle Grant, which is in Morayshire.

The other Seafield mansion, Balmacaan, in Inverness-shire, with its extensive estate and grouse moors, has been leased by Mr. and Mrs. Bradley Martin for many years.

VIENNA WALTZ IS DYING, HE THINKS

Mr. George Edwardes, the London Manager, Sees the Wane of the Dreamy Affair.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

VIENNESE waltzes, the dreamy, earhaunting waltzes that were the making of so many musical comedies like "The Merry Widow," "The Dollar Princess" and later "The Chocolate Soldier," are on the wane. At least so says Mr. George Edwardes, who has just been celebrating the completion of his quarter of a century's management of the Gaiety Theatre.

Mr. Edwardes started with Vienna, and musical comedy presupposes Vienna as a cat presupposes a mouse, but though Vienna still stands where she did, there are limitations, it appears, to her powers of lyrical rapture, according to Mr. Edwardes.

"All of us," he says, "have enjoyed her work and honor the great men who have produced it. They have set the hemispheres humming her waltzes and kept our feet tattooing her refrains. But there is evidence that her supremacy is not to remain unchallenged, and her waltzes are on the wane. I see the reign of the Englishman again in sight.

"As in other affairs, these things run in cycles. Vienna has had her reign, and the English composer will be sovereign next. And this, remember, is merely a return to power. Mr. Sidney Jones, with 'The Geisha,' equalled in Vienna the success of Lehar with 'The Merry Widow' in London. 'The Quaker Girl,' at the Adelphi, has proved a huge success in London and New York, and America is in raptures over the music of Lionel Monckto.

"But it is just as difficult to transplant English successes in New York as it is to grow Viennese flowers in the Strand. 'Veronique' and 'The Duchess of Dantzic' were huge successes in London. They were dire failures in America. 'The Belle of New York' succeeded in Shaftesbury avenue, but I cannot recall a similar phenomenon. There is no certainty. There are no rules, and the theatre is the home of surprises."

MANY FOLLOW STEPS OF QUEEN OF ITALY

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

The report that Queen Elena of Italy has been taking a prominent part in organising the voluntary ambulance for Italy in the war with Turkey recalls how many well known women in England have taken up nursing as a profession.

Lady Hermione Blackwood, a sister of the present Lord Dufferin, who has inherited many of the talents of her father, the late Marquis, and of her grandmother, who was a society beauty in her day, leads a quiet life and devotes herself to hospital work. She is president of the Irish Nursing Association. Others interested in nursing and who have taken an active part in the work are Lady Maud Keith-Falconer, sister to Lord Kintore; Lady Catherine Stanhope, sister to Lord Stanhope; Lady Rosalind Northcote, daughter of Lord and Lady Iddesleigh, and the Hon. Muriel Fraser, younger sister of Lord Lovat.

Lady Griselda Champs, Lord Airlie's aunt, used to act as nurse before her marriage, and so did Mrs. Bowen Colthurst, formerly Miss Rosalind Butler, the youngest daughter of Lord and Lady Dunboyne.

GHOST OF DICKENS POSSIBLY SMILES

Centenary Ball, Memorial to Great Writer, To Be Huge Event Socially.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

SOMEWHERE in the Land of Shadows there is probably a particularly happy ghost chuckling good humoredly at the thought of his own hundredth birthday party. The ghost is doubtless that of Charles Dickens, delighted at the notion of twentieth century humors, dressing up and dancing on the lawn in honor of the great novelist's centenary.

The Dickens Centenary Ball, to be held in aid of the Dickens Centenary Memorial Fund, is to be the biggest social event of the coming winter. It certainly will rival, if it does not eclipse, the remarkable Shakespeare ball held in the coronation season.

Enthusiasts all over the country appear to be looking forward to the event, for Charles Dickens, still the best read of all British novelists, commands admirers in every city and every village in the land.

Mr. H. Sherwood Foster, who successfully piloted the Shakespeare ball to a brilliant social climax, and who is now helping the Dickens Memorial Committee in planning the Dickens ball, said that although no definite scheme of decorative effect had yet been outlined he had no doubt of the picturesque possibilities of the early Victorian spectacle.

"You must remember, too, that the pages of Dickens cover a wide range of time, and extend from the Directoire period, found in 'A Tale of Two Cities,' and the eighteenth century of 'Barnaby Rudge,' to a period within little more than forty years ago. Some of the old bucks will be able to wear the old clothes that they had in their young days."

An influential committee headed by Lord Alverstone and comprising Lord Tennyson, Sir Luke Fildes, R. A.; Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and other notabilities of literature and art is leading the Dickens Memorial scheme.

LETTERS OF PEPYS MADE OFFICIAL

Bundle of Old Manuscripts Is Now Published as a Parliamentary Paper.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

A BUNDLE of old letters revealing forgotten intrigues and diplomacy in the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries has been bound up and published as a Parliamentary paper. It is the Royal Historical Commission's report on the "Pepys Manuscripts" in Magdalen College, Cambridge. They were collected by John Evelyn, who lent them to his friend Samuel Pepys, who never returned them, but sent them to his library in three volumes, each unveraciously indorsed:—"The gift of my honored and learned friend John Evelyn."

As does almost every collection of Elizabethan state papers, these afford a glimpse of the captive Queen of Scots and her gaoler, "Bess of Hardwicke." Mary is seen writing from Sheffield on December 29, 1570, praying Leicester to support her petition to Elizabeth. She signs herself "Your right good frend, Mary R."

There are papers dealing with Elizabeth's famous progress to Kenilworth—how beer and bread, fodder and firework are to be assembled for her train, and an interesting specification for a fireworks display which Leicester arranged for Kenilworth at a cost of £300. The Elizabethans cannot have been very far behind Brock, the famous London pyrotechnist. Among the novelties planned were—

"Serpents of fire, birds to fly about in the air scattering fire, two dogs and cats which will fight to the fireworks, a fountain throwing wine, water and fire, three wheels of wonderful scented fire, and of different colors; a dragon as big as an axe, which will fly twice and thrice as high as the tower of St. Paul's, and at that height will turn away and suddenly will issue from its whole body dogs, cats and birds, which will scatter fire on all sides."

Her Baby Barked, Betrayed a Plot

Some Stories of the Ingenious Work of Women Who Smuggle Dogs from France.

[Special Despatch.]
London, Saturday.

THE days when the bold, bad smugglers ran their boatloads of rum, brandy and tobacco over from France into the secret coves and caves on the English coasts are long since gone, but the customs officers still have plenty to do, pitting their wits against smugglers as cunning as ever existed in the old days.

These smugglers are women, and the contraband upon which they exercise their wits most to evade the customs is dogs, though, of course, it is the quarantine law that causes all the trouble. The devices which they adopt are as ingenious as they are amazing, and the customs officers can tell some extraordinary stories of the ruses of women to smuggle their pets from France into England. By concealing them in pockets in their underclothing they often succeed in their intentions, except when the dogs yelp, and so betray their mistresses.

But popular—and often successful—as is the hidden pocket dodge, it is commonplace beside some of the methods of dog smuggling which have recently been attempted at Dover.

One curious case, which resulted in discovery, was of a woman, a nurse, and an "infant" in long clothes, who went on board the steamship at Calais. They immediately shut themselves in their cabin and were not again seen till Dover was reached when by the customs men on board, who were quite satisfied that they had no contraband with them. At Dover, however, when the party was coming ashore the "infant," whose head was completely muffled up in lace and ribbon, barked.

In another case travelling rug carried on the arm of Mady's male companion excited suspicion. He was stopped, the rug was examined and found to contain three little pockets in each of which was a valuable tiny dog.

A sailor on board one of the steamboats tells how he once happened to glance inside a cabin occupied by two women passengers to Dover just before the customs men entered it. One woman was giving a little dog a whiff of something from a bottle which smelt like chloroform, the other was busy making up a "parcel" of wraps. A cushion was thrown carelessly over the unconscious dog and the officers took no trouble to look under it. When the women left the boat they had the dog concealed in the "parcel" which had been "passed."

But these by no means exhaust the ways which women employ in smuggling their pets. They suspend them in bags from their necks under well buttoned up coats or furs, put them in big pockets or loose "overcoats," or carry them in their muffs, which is a trick frequently tried when muffs can be worn without exciting suspicion.

"We catch one a month," one customs officer explained, "but far more than one we do 'spot' twenty or thirty times."

THE MAN AND THE MAID

A Short Story.

It was the hour of sunset. The house was one of the most stately mansions in all the suburbs of Boston. The Maid stood at the window, her golden head leaning wearily against the casement; each separate hair, reflecting the glory of the western sky, became like a thread of spun gold. Her hands were lightly clasped while on her eyelids the tears glistened.

The Man sat at the piano. He was playing the first movement in the grand old "Moonlight Sonata." Playing it with a master hand; playing it as the master mind of Beethoven conceived it. Each note as it fell seemed to awake and set in throbbing vibrations an answering note in her heart.

As the last low minor chords were struck and passed to eternity a sob came from the lips of the girl.

"You do care; you do, dear,' softly spoke the Man.

"No," said the Maid, brokenly. "It was only the music."

"Oh, if I could only play my way into your heart! I would play—I would write something that——"

"No, no," said the Maid. "Do you think I can care for a man who, of all the great and wonderful things to be done on this earth, can only play the piano? Wait—I—I know you have money, but what did you ever do to obtain that money? All your people had riches and you, the only child in this generation, have it all. But did you ever do one day's work in all your life?"

"No—I—I—no."

"When you have done something worth while and can answer that question the way I should love to have you, then I——"

"Dearie, if I did that for you, would you—could you—care a little, dear?"

"I think I could."

"Then I am going away to-day and you will wait for me?"

"I will wait."

She gave him both hands, and he held them tightly in his own. His eyes were on her sweet face. "May I kiss you just once?" he whispered.

"Can you?" she whispered back. His lips almost touched hers, but suddenly he straightened himself, and dropping her left hand, held her right in a warm clasp. "Not until I have proved myself able to do something in the world. Good-bye, dear."

"Good-bye," came from the lips of the girl, and he was gone.

She waited there in the still twilightdarkness until she heard the front door close. Then she turned and went quickly to her room. There she went straight to her mirror, turned up the lights and peered long into her own eyes. "Helen Adams," said she, addressing the girl in the mirror, "we have been little fools, for we have sent away the man we love."

. . . . . .

Ten years passed. A lonely woman knelt in an old cathedral in Northern Italy. Her lips formed no prayer, but in her heart was one which had been there a decade. "Dear God, bring him back to me, rich or poor, gay or sad—I love him so."

Suddenly in all the silence the great organ sounded. There came the sad cry, the beautiful strains of the first movement of the "Moonlight Sonata." It fell on her ear as an answer from heaven, for who could play it in that wonderful way but the Man?

She softly rose, and as though guided by an unseen hand, found her way to the organ loft. There he sat. His face was thin. His hair was quite gray. His clothes more old. Still she knew him at once. The last low minor chords fell. He turned and saw her.

"You—" he said, dully. "You—here—I, oh, I can't let you see me this way."

"Dear," she cried, "dear, I love you."

He came to her and knelt at her feet.

"I am not fit, beloved, to touch the hem of your garment. I failed miserably."

"It is I who am not fit, dear, for I sent you away." She knelt beside him, slipping her hand into his.

"I have nothing to offer you now, not even an honest name."

"We have love, and that is enough," she whispered.

"Hush!" At that minute the bells above them were struck for the twilight Angelus. The peasants slowly filled the church, muttering their responses and chanting as at the matin bell. In the dimly lighted gallery the Man and Woman still knelt. In their hearts the responses were silently, reverently made, while in their souls the chant of happiness and peace which lasts through all eternity had just begun.—Boston Post.

RECIPES FOR HOUSEWIVES

When making sweet croquettes add a little sugar to the crumbs in which the croquettes are to be rolled.

Cold water is preferable to warm for scrubbing doors, because it does not sink into the wood and so dries quickly.

Holding tomatoes over the gas flame will cause skin to burst and come off easier than when scalded, and the tomato will be less mushy than when scalded.

Neglected brass may be polished with a paste of powdered bath brick and oil. Take two pieces of the brick and rub together. This makes a finer powder than if scraped with a knife.

Cut hams may be kept from molding if the cut end is wet with vinegar each time after cutting. Vinegar will also keep beef fresh for a time when you happen to be without ice temporarily.

THE EVENING CHIT-CHAT

By Ruth Cameron

Did it ever occur to you that there is such a thing as selfishness of obligation?

I think there is.

"Yes, I would have given anything to stay a week longer, but they wouldn't let me pay a cent for my board, and I didn't feel right to, without. I know they want to be kind, but it really cut my vacation in half."

The speaker was a hard-working little woman. She was persuaded to take a rare and much needed breathing spell this summer. One week of this vacation she spent with some friends who, although not much better off in worldly goods than she, manage to have a summer cottage.

The other week she spent at home because these friends would not let her contribute a little towards the expense of the cottage.

So what was undoubtedly meant kindly on the part of her friends, ended by working a great deprivation to her.

How often people do things like that from a mistaken sense of kindness.

And how often it makes other people uncomfortable or works deprivation to them as in this case.

I know a girl who is very skilful at doing little dinner and dance cards. Her friends often want to get her to do something of the sort for them, but although she always seems glad to do the work, she will never take any payment, and so they do not feel like asking her to help them out. The result is that they pay a professional a much larger price.

"Last summer," I heard a woman say just the other day, "I got a little neighbour of mine to take care of my cat while I was away. Of course I paid for its food, and when I came back I wanted to pay the little girl for the care, but her parents wouldn't let her take a cent. I felt terrible and of course this summer I couldn't ask her again. It would have been a great convenience to me and I know the little girl would be glad to do it for she loves cats, but what can you do? I think people are so foolish that way."

So do I.

There are many times when gracious acceptance of money for services rendered, even when the transaction is between friends, is the highest courtesy.

And I think those people who will not accept such payment are selfish of obligation.

They want to keep the other party eternally under obligation. And since, as everyone knows, being under too heavy obligation is uncomfortable, that is really a selfish state of mind.

Of course there are times when people offer to pay for things merely out of politeness or a sense of duty.

But I think such offers are easily discernible.

Far more often people want to pay for services rendered, in order that they may not feel under uncomfortable obligation, and in order that they may feel free to ask for these same services again some time.

Surely in such cases the kindest, most courteous, most unselfish way is to let them pay.

MAN BEGINS TO COPY WOMAN IN DRESS

LONDON, Nov. 1. — The well-dressed woman will soon have to copyright her clothes—or suffer plagiarism by man.

Already the latest models of women's fashions are being copied by the modern young man.

"There is just now a distinctly dressy spirit abroad among men," says Mr. Vincent, editor of the Tailor and Cutter, "and a feminine note has already crept into masculine clothes.

"At present it is confined to evening dress. In this men—not flashy young men, but quite the proper people—are showing a decided tendency toward dainty fabrics, bright colours, and novel buttons.

"Instead of the ordinary white waistcoats, waistcoats of silk or poplin and of such colours as pale pink, canary, dove and pale green are fashionable.

"The latest buttons on dress clothes are 'feminine' buttons. They are oval and raised from the cloth.

"In other ways, too, is this feminine tendency to be seen. The dress overcoat is very lavishly faced with silk; 'waists' are very pronounced in evening and frock coats, and edgings of braid are more worn than ever.

"An instance of man's adoption of feminine modes is the grey necktie, now so popular, which is copied from girls 'Quaker dresses. Men also turn up the ends of trousers to reveal their elegant socks, of which they seem quite as proud as woman is of her pretty shoes and stockings."

Despair and Despondency

No one but a woman can tell the story of the suffering, the despair, and the despondency endured by women who carry a daily burden of ill-health and pain because of disorders and derangements of the delicate and important organs that are distinctly feminine. The tortures so bravely endured completely upset the nerves if long continued.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is a positive cure for weakness and disease of the feminine organism.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

It allays inflammation, heals ulceration and soothes pain. It tones and builds up the nerves. It fits for wifehood and motherhood. Honest medicine dealers sell it, and have nothing to urge upon you as "just as good." It is non-secret, non-alcoholic and has a record of forty years of cures. Ask Your Neighbors. They probably know of some of its many cures.

If you want a book that tells all about women's diseases, and how to cure them at home, send 21 one-cent stamps to Dr. Pierce to pay cost of mailing only, and he will send you a free copy of his great thousand-page illustrated Common Sense Medical Adviser—revised, up-to date edition, in paper covers. In handsome cloth-binding, 50 stamps. Address Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N.Y.

THE COIN HANDKERCHIEF

A most attractive novelty, so invaluable that it seems hard to explain why it was never thought of before, is the little coin handkerchief, for carrying in safety the bits of silver for collection at church or for street car fare, at a time when one would prefer to dispense with the necessity of carrying a purse. The one first seen was a nine-inch square of fine line lawn, hem-stitched by hand and edged with a narrow baby Irish edge, crocheted on the fabric. Two baby Irish roses, wrought in No. 100 cotton, with a row or two of open work around each, to bring it to a diameter rather larger than that of a quarter dollar, were set back to back in one corner of the handkerchief, exactly together, but without the fabric being cut between them. One was firmly stitched on around the whole circumference, but the other was left open on one side, so that a coin could be slipped under the rose, and on the loose edge was worked a buttonhold loop, to fasten over a tiny lace wash button, and secure the contents of the wee pocket from slipping out. Any woman deft with the needle could evolve new applications of this idea with very little trouble. The medallions can be of any desired sort of lace, to match that chosen for the edge, or a plain hemstitched handkerchief could have embroidered initial medallions applied to form the pocket. The idea of the duplicate medallion is merely to cover the sewing of the pocket one, but it also adds materially to the firmness.—New York Tribune.

TO PRESERVE THE HEARING

Attention to the following rules would save much pain to many and keep at bay the deafness to which some are predisposed: Never neglect a pain in the ear. Bathe the surrounding parts with very hot water and tie a flannel bandage over the ear. If it is not better in a day or so, go to a doctor.

Never put cotton wool into the ears except by medical order; never put anything into the ear to ease pain on your own responsibility; never wet the hair at night, and if there is a tendency to deafness never do so at any time; never scratch the ears with anything but the finger tip, and if they itch intolerably bathe them with hot water.

Never put oil into the ears; never sit with the back to an open window, or rush from cold air into the warm, or vice versa, or sit with damp, cold feet, or go out in a high wind if disposed to deafness. If an insect gets into the ear, a few puffs of tobacco smoke blown into the canal will stupefy it, and then by gently pouring warm water into the ear it can be removed.

If a bead, pea, or seed of any kind gets into the ear, leave it absolutely alone until it is removed by a doctor.—Country Doctor.

MILLIONS OF FOLKS USE ONLY CASCARETS

They Never Have Headache, Biliousness, Sluggish Liver or Bowels or a Sick, Sour Stomach

No odds how bad your liver, stomach or bowels how much your head aches, how miserable and uncomfortable you are from constipation, indigestion, biliousness and sluggish intestines—you always get the desired results with Cascarets and quickly, too.

Don't yet your stomach, liver, and bowels make you miserable another moment; put an end to the headache, biliousness, dizziness, nervousness, sick, sour, gassy stomach, backache and all other distress; cleanse your inside organs of all the poison and effete matter, which is producing the misery.

Take a Cascaret now; don't wait until bedtime. In all the world there is no remedy like this. A 10-cent box means health, happiness and a clear head for months. No more days of gloom and distress if you will take a Cascaret now and then. All druggists sell Cascarets. Don't forget the children—their little insides need a good, gentle cleansing, too.

COOKIE TOWN

(From Children's Star Magazine)

I know a place called Cookie Town,
Where mother is the queen.
The people are a golden brown,
The funniest ever seen.

They're made of sugar, spice and dough,
And mother rolls and pats them—so;
Then cuts them into little men
I counted up to more 'n ten.

Into the oven quick they pop,
Then out again, all piping hot.
I stand upon a little stool
And watch them while they're getting cool.

A kiss will buy a cookie man,
A hug will buy another;
And then, as quickly as I can,
I run and share with brother.

TO RENOVATE BLANKETS

One of the first places to show wear in a blanket is along the edge, which will begin to split into a coarse fringe. Keeping blankets well bound with inch-wide ribbon will prevent this. Unless some accident happens to a blanket, patching is not resorted to until it is very old, then a piece from another blanket may be laid on large enough to cover the worn place and held in place by darning rather than seaming. All thin places can be fortified by darning with ravelings from an old blanket. When the blanket is worn past repair just double it and quilt it together here and there and lay it across the mattress under the sheet, and it will continue to be of service.

Rebel General To Meet Premier

PEKIN, CHINA, NOV. 2. — The Government's plans for bringing about peace moved forward rapidly to-day, with the throne and the National Assembly working together. The throne ordered Yuan Shi Kai, the new Premier, to return immediately to Pekin, and simultaneously the National Assembly in its official capacity telegraphed General Li Yuen Heng requesting him to suspend hostilities pending the result of the endeavour to settle the differences of all parties.

From a semi-official source it was learned that a subordinate of Yuan Shi Kai has already conferred with General Li Yuen Heng. The latter expressed pleasure at the recent developments in Pekin and agreed to meet Yuan Shi Kai for a discussion of the situation.

Prince Ching, the old Premier, who is the only high Manchu official left in the capital, has agreed to memorialize the throne with the following suggestions:

First, that all laws opposed to constitutional methods be annuled immediately; second, that the election of members of Parliament be undertaken without delay; third, that the Provincial assemblies throughout the Empire be granted co-ordinate authority with the Provincial Administrative officials; fourth, that in order to avert an open rupture with the Manchu royalty a plan be drawn up to provide for the support of the Manchu bannermen and pensioners, and that the "Banners"—the eight divisions of the Imperial Manchu Military, be disbanded; fifth, that the Manchu bannermen adopt Chinese surnames; and sixth, that a formal proclamation be issued announcing that military force will not be used against the revolutionaries.

TROUBLE OVER CONSTITUTION

The drafting of a constitution is likely to prove a matter of difficulty because of the difference of opinion regarding the type of Government to be adopted. The National Assembly is practically agreed upon a constitution based upon that of Great Britain, but the southern provinces, which must be conciliated, are still firm in their desire for a more republican form of union. This controversy is the main difficulty which Premier Yuan Shi Kai is expected to overcome.

Yuan Shi Kai arrived yesterday at Nieko, a town only a few miles from Hankow.

Assert Talesman In Case Insane

LOS ANGELES, CAL., NOV. 3rd.—In the hope of qualifying talesmen Lorenzo Romans, challenged by the State because it is alleged he is insane, the defence in McNamara case yesterday produced witnesses who declared the juror was not only perfectly sane, but one of the shrewdest real estate dealers in the city.

The defence hoped to get Judge Bordwell to set aside the State's challenge, thus compelling District Attorney Fredericks to waste a peremptory challenge. The defence argued that Roman's belief that the fund appropriated by the State for use in investigating the Times' explosion was a corruption fund, and his prejudice against William Mulholland, one of the State's expert witnesses, in no way disqualified him, as long as he entertained no opinion regarding the destruction of the Times building.

There are still three seats unfilled in the jury box.

The proceedings are dragging along slowly, but it is certain the box will be filled this week, when the exercising of peremptory challenges will be begun.

The State is now certain it will get possession of the Indianapolis evidence before the trial actually begins. District Attorney Fredericks considers much of it absolutely necessary to the success of his case, especially the bank books and canceled checks. They show what Fredericks alleges is an absolute connection between the McNamara brothers and McManigal, and all the explosions.

They May Get Money Back

TORONTO, NOV. 3rd.—"Sovereign Bank shareholders may not lose a dollar, except the use of their money since the suspension, when everything has been settled," said a banking authority to The Star. "Mind you, I do not say this as an inevitable certainty, but you may take it as a reasonable possibility."

The assets have been taken over by the International Assets, Limited, reorganized from the Sovereign Bank shareholders. When the other banks came forward and protected the Sovereign Bank depositors, one form of criticism hinted that the banks were consulting their own interests.

"Now," The Star was told, "the banks did deserve some thanks, whatever unkind critics may say. The Ontario Bank deposits totalled about $12,000,000, and the Sovereign Bank deposits reached $20,000,000. The Bank of Montreal stepped forward in the case of the Ontario Bank, and the other banks did the same thing when the Sovereign Bank needed help. In neither case were the depositors required to wait until the final settlement, as has been the case with the York Loan and will be the experience of the Farmers Bank depositors."

When the Sovereign Bank shareholders put up their double liability amounts, that money went into the International Assets, Limited, and was used in paying off part of the bank's liability. The banks took bonds for the rest, and agreed to wait for three years. No winding up order has been asked for, and no general double liability levy has been made.

"If the shareholders not in the holding company do not come in," The Star learned, "there is nothing to prevent a double-liability assessment from being made. If they join the others, however, they will share in whatever is realized from the bank's assets. It does not follow that the money locked up in the Chicago and Milwaukee Railway and the Alaska Central is money lost. The two roads are the bank's main assets, and the shareholders may get back, not only what they pay to the holding company, but their original share outlay."

The Sovereign Bank's action against directors has resulted in judgment in the bank's favour in the Court of Appeal. There is some talk of an appeal to the Privy Council, but, at the present stage, the bank is on top, and for a considerable amount.

MAY REVOLT

TOKIO, NOV. 2.—Revolutionary activity at Mukden is rumoured following reports intimating the danger of an uprising in other parts of Manchuria. Some fear is expressed over the situation. Should the Chinese rebels ally themselves with the Mohammedan element the movement might spread rapidly through the three eastern provinces.

Doubt is expressed here that Yuan Shi Kai will be able to perform the task undertaken. He has many inveterate enemies among the influential mandarins who could hardly become reconciled to a policy that assured Yuan a long tenure of office. It is also feared that the revolutionists will not be disposed to compromise in view of the weakness of the Manchu court now so clearly exposed.

Dynamited Arsenal

SHANGHAI, NOV. 2.—A wireless message from Hankow to-day says that the revolutionists dynamited the arsenal at Han-Yang to prevent its seizure by the Imperialists. This seems to indicate that the Imperialists are making headway against the rebels. It is rumoured that they recaptured Hankow and massacred Chinese.

There is some evidence of renewed activity on the part of the insurgents on the lower Yang-Tse-Kiang. Well-informed persons assert that the Imperial edicts granting a constitutional Government and other concessions have not reached the mass of rebels, being purposely withheld until their leaders are absolutely assured of the sincerity of the Manchu promises.

The Viceroy of Kiang-Su at Nanking shows determination to support the Government. The new troops have been disarmed and stationed outside the walls, where their encampment is covered with the guns of the old Manchu troops. Five hundred old troops have been sent to reinforce the soldiers occupying the forts at Ching Kiang.

The officials at Wu-Hu and Anking have also asked that reinforcements of soldiers be sent to these cities.

The cotton yarn guild adopted a resolution to-day authorizing the repudiation of forward contracts on the ground that the trade has been disordered by the revolution.

CAN'T BELIEVE IT

QUEBEC, QUE., NOV. 3rd.—Interviewed about the alleged stopping of the shoe combine inquiry, Mr. John Ritchie, one of the principal shoe manufacturers of Quebec, said: "I do not think that this inquiry has been stopped permanently. I think that it has been delayed to secure further information, but that it will be resumed soon. I cannot believe for a minute that the new Government has stopped the inquiry. You can be sure that the great majority of Quebec shoemen are eager for the continuation of the investigation, unless the United Shoe Machinery Co. strikes out from the contract the objectionable clause, that is, the clause imposing the exclusive use of their machines. This may occur sooner than is generally thought. Then there would not be any more cause for investigation."

Mayor Napoleon Drouin, who is the first mentioned in the list of petitioners who asked for an investigation, said: "I do not see why the Government should stop this inquiry. It is its duty to continue it until this scandalous combine is smashed."

Mr. E. Caron, manager of the Canadian General Shoe Machinery Co., who is the soul of the fight against the United Shoe Machines, states that the inquiry is not going to be stopped. He knows officially that the commission presided over by Justice Laurendeau will begin investigation within a month.

Says Taft Is Afraid

Special to The Examiner:

LINCOLN, NOV. 3rd.—Wm. J. Bryan demands criminal prosecution of the trusts, and calls on Taft to "start something." In his Commoner yesterday Bryan plumps the following letter at the President:

"Mr. President,—Why do you begin a suit of equity instead of criminal prosecution against the officials of the Steel Trust? In your Attorney-General's petition the defendants are charged with the violation of a criminal law. Why do you hesitate to ask for a conclusion and imprisonment? Is it because the anti-trust law is now worthless as a criminal statute, since the supreme court has, by judicial legislation, put the word "unreasonable" in it? Or is it because you are afraid to punish big criminals as severely as you do little criminals?

"You ask me to name a trust that cannot be punished under the present law. I name three: The Standard Oil Trust, the Tobacco Trust, and the Steel Trust, and I call you as a witness to prove that the law, as amended by your judges, is worthless as a criminal law. Will you admit it, or do you prefer to take the position that big criminals should not be sent to the penitentiary? Explain why you do not prosecute the Steel Trust officers under the criminal law.

(Signed) W. J. BRYAN."

DISASTROUS FIRE OBLITERATES BUSINESS SECTION OF BETHANY EARLY THIS MORNING

Eight Valuable Stores Fall a Prey to the Flames, Entailing a Loss of About $34,000---A Number of People Were Rendered Homeless---Fire Raged for Hours and Threatened to Consume Entire Town.

THE MOST DISASTROUS FIRE IN THE HISTORY OF THE TOWN

LIST OF LOSSES.

T. J. Jackson, butcher and grocer.
L. B. Sisson, barber shop.
Charles Reynolds, hardware and furniture.
Miss Atkins, milliner.
Mrs. Gallagher, frame residence.

FACTS.

Fire discovered in harness shop at 11.20.
Cause—Unknown.
Total estimated damage—$34,000.
Injured—One man rendered unconscious.

Thirty-four thousand dollars is the estimated damage caused by a fire, which wiped out fully one half of the hamlet of Bethany last night. The fire was first discovered in the harness making establishment of Alex. Monk, and in a very short space of time, the flames had spread rapidly both east and west, on the south side of what is known as King street. The entire fire equipment of the village, which consisted of two hand pumps and a couple of short lengths of hose, was brought into requisition, and with the splendid aid rendered by the employees of the Toronto Construction Company, much valuable property was saved from the devouring flames. A temporary tank, which is used to supply water to the construction engines, and which is fed by a hydraulic ram from a nearby creek was kept in operation throughout the night and was of very material assistance in checking the flames, through the medium of a hand engine.

Bucket brigades and salvage corps were formed and the workers heroically endeavoured to save as much of the contents of the doomed buildings as possible. They piled the goods out in the middle of the road and by strenuous efforts succeeded in saving many hundreds of dollars worth of furniture, etc. Hairbreadth escapes of the fire fighters were many and miraculous one man while attempting to extinguish the flames on the roof of a two-storey building, fell to the ground and was rendered unconscious. Fortunately, medical aid was near at hand and his injuries were attended to. He recovered about an hour later, very little the worse for his mishap.

About 12.30 the fire had assumed such alarming proportions that Mr. Preston, the member for East Durham and resident of the fire stricken burg called Peterborough and endeavoured to get into communication with the Mayor, with a view to securing help. In this he was unsuccessful as the Mayor was out of town. He next communicated with Fire Chief Howard ,and the latter volunteered to take an engine and hose wagon out, providing he secured a written order from the chairman of the Fire, Water and Light committee and that the municipal authorities of Bethany would guarantee the expenses of the trip. Both of these requisites being forthcoming the Chief made hasty preparations to go to the relief of the town. A C.P.R. engine, flat car and crew was soon got together, but before the apparatus was loaded it was ascertained that there was no means of unloading it at the other end. The trip was then abandoned as Chief Howard did not care to take any chances of injury to the apparatus. He, however, went himself via C. P. R. freight to the scene of the disaster, which is about fifteen miles west of here, but when he got there the fire was nearly under control. The Chief was enabled to render much valuable assistance. He returned via G.T.R. on the 8 o'clock train this morning.

All communication with the outside world was cut off by reason of the telephone exchange falling a prey to the flames. One of the instruments was dragged out of the burning building, but as some of the poles and the wires attached were burned, it was of no service.

The fire, which started in the centre of the block on the south side of the street, swept both ways, the invincible march of the flames licking up the small buildings in a short time, but spending a longer period in the devouring of the larger and more substantial brick structures, shooting its long tongues of flames skyward and throwing sparks and cinders in all directions. The country was illuminated for miles around, and the whole made a very spectacular scene.

The village's winter supply of coal, which was stored at the rear of the burning building, also fell a victim to the fire fiend, and at an early hour this morning was still burning fiercely, there being no means of extinguishing it.

Mr. Preston rendered invaluable service in the town's dire hour of need. He urged the volunteers to greater efforts in their endeavour to get the fire under control, following which, he and Dr. Brereton served coffee and sandwiches to the hungry workers. Appended below is the list of the burned structures and their total estimated value, together with the names of their tenants:

T. J. Jackson, butcher and grocer.

L. B. Sisson, barber and owner of the east block of buildings which were destroyed.

A. Monk, harness and shoemaker.

The large town hall, a substantial brick structure estimated to be worth $7,000.

Charles Reynolds, furniture and hardware.

Miss Atkins, milliner.

Mrs. Gallagher, owner of house at rear of burned stores.

Dr. T. G. Brereton, office and drug store and owner of the west block which was destroyed.

The damage to the buildings will run in the neighbourhood of $21,000, damage to stock $5,000 and about $1,000 damage to the furniture stock, which was removed from the buildings, added to this about $7,000 for the town hall property, which gives a total of about $34,000. These figures were secured from a local contractor, and therefore are approximately correct. About one-half is covered by insurance.

The progress of the flames was checked at Preston Bro.'s grain office.

A $870,000 FIRE SWEEPS LONDON BUSINESS SECTION

Six Stores Were Totally Destroyed and the Blaze Was the Most Disastrous That Has Visited the Western Ontario Centre in Fifty Years--Loss is well Covered by Insurance

LONDON, ONT., NOV. 3.—The most destructive fire that has visited London in fifty years, wiped out six stores in the west end of the London business district early this morning, causing a loss estimated at about half a million. The fire was discovered at 4 o'clock, raging through Chapman's big drygoods store, on Dundas street, near Talbot. The high winds fanned the flames to fury and in a few minutes the big Perdum hardware store, next door, was blazing. Shortly afterwards both buildings fell in and the fire spread rapidly to the large store of the Kingsmill drygoods. Mara's drygoods, Brewster's fancy goods, Roome-Corbett shoe store, and R. J. Young's drygoods. With the exception of Young's store, all were completely gutted. The fire was got under control at Young's, the building being only partially burned. The loss is practically covered by insurance.

Later reports estimate damage at three quarters of a million. Five hundred people have been thrown out of work, but re-building operations will be commenced at once. The people today are enthusiastic about the fire department, which undoubtedly saved the city from a much greater conflagration by skilful fire fighting.

LONDON, ONT., NOV. 3.—The official loss by fire is $870,000, insurance $635,000.

A SMALL FIRE

The Fire Department received a call to the establishment of J. J. Turner and Sons this morning. The fire was caused by an accumulation of gas in the heating furnace, which blew the door open, throwing sparks and cinders into the room. The blaze was easily extinguished, and the damage was slight.

VISITED POLICEMAN'S RESIDENCE

And as a Result Local Man Was Fined in Police Court this Morning—Picked a bad Place for an Early Call

TO-DAY'S POLICE COURT

To attempt to break into a Police Officer's residence at 3 o'clock in the morning, when the officer is away on duty, is not as easy as it looks. This was the lesson learned in the Police Court this morning, by George McMasters, when he was fined $5.00 for creating a disturbance while under the influence of liquor. A man named Yorkston was in company with McMasters last Wednesday night, when the incident took place, and as he was not so drunk, could give a clearer account of what took place. His story was as follows: "McMasters came to my house that night, and we were both a little drunk, but he was the worst. He asked me to go down town, and I did. We bought a couple of tickets for Norwood and intended to go there on the midnight, but as that train was late we decided to take a walk up street. When we got up a little ways, he said he was going to a house where he knew the people. He walked over to this house and began to wrap and try to get in. A woman put her head out of the top window and asked him what he wanted, and as he hammered and tried to get in at the window, I walked on a little way, as I thought it was a rather cool reception for a friend. I stood on the opposite side of the road and as he turned around, a man seemed to grab him, or talk to him. I could not exactly see what took place, but he came over to me in a hurry and said "let us get out of here, he knows me." I heard the woman still calling, "who is there?" We went away then, and at 5.30 a.m. I wanted him to go home, but he would not, so we took the first train for Norwood".

"I know Mr. Meagher," put in the accused, "and I had no intention of harm. A policeman's house is the last place a man would go with that intention."

The Chief then added a few more facts to the evidence, by stating that Mrs. Meagher and a little child were alone in the house, and were awakened about 3 o'clock in the morning by a loud noise at the door, and then a hammering at the window, and Mrs. Meagher was very badly frightened, and has been in a very nervous condition ever since. He also stated that the McMasters seemed to have something against the Police Officers, because they had arrested him on previous occasions for being drunk.

"$5.00, to be paid forthwith," said his Worship. "There is no excuse for a man getting drunk and committing such a nuisance."

McMasters is a blacklister, and will appear in the Police Court tomorrow morning again, on a charge of violating the blacklist laws.

Wm. Hetherington, another blacklister, will appear on Wednesday morning.

Bonds Are Attractive

Canadian Locomotive Company Bonds Meet With Favourable Reception

The First Mortgage Bonds of the Canadian Locomotive Company, which are now being offered in Canada, are meeting with a favourable reception. Undoubtedly, from the standpoint of security, earnings and income return, the bonds are attractive. The proceeds of the present bond issues will be used to double the present capacity of the Plant to keep pace with the ever increasing demand for locomotives. Orders now on the books of the Canadian Locomotive Company ensure a plethora of work for some time to come. There is every reason to believe that, under new conditions, the present rate of earnings will be increased considerably.

STRUCK BY CAR

A FAMOUS HOCKEYIST

TORONTO, NOV. 3.—Mr. D. Bruce Ridpath, a professional hockey player, living at 584 Yonge street, was seriously injured last night as a result of being run down by an automobile. At an early hour this morning he was still unconscious, suffering from an injury to the base of the skull and concussion of the brain, besides bruises about the face and arms. Notwithstanding the fact that his injuries are of a serious nature, some hope is held out for his recovery.

The accident occurred shortly before 8 o'clock on Yonge street, a short distance south of Alexander St. Ridpath had just alighted from a northbound Yonge street car, and stepped in front of an automobile driven by Mr. Colin A. Campbell, 62 Havelock street, going in a southerly direction. No sooner had Ridpath got clear of the car than he noticed the approach of the machine. According to the people in the car, he hesitated upon noticing the car, and then attempted to draw back towards the rails, but suddenly dived in front of the car.

Brakes Applied Promptly.

Mr. Campbell, who was driving the car, promptly applied the emergency brakes, but the auto had struck Ridpath before it was possible to bring it to a stand-still. Ridpath was struck by the hood of the machine, and thrown back towards the rails. He was rendered unconscious. When it was found that he was seriously injured he was placed in the automobile and taken to a drug store a short distance away. Doctors Walter McKeown and Walter P. Thompson, 31 Carlton street east, were summoned and after dressing his injuries ordered his immediate removal to St. Michael's Hospital.

Ridpath is probably one of the best known athletes in Canada. Apart from his skill as a professional hockey player he gained a great reputation as an expert exponent of the art of canoeing. As a result of his achievements in this particular line at the Dominion Day regatta in Toronto a few years ago he was engaged to give a demonstration of his skill in hippodromes in Europe and America.

Ridpath is an old Lakefield boy and is well known in Peterborough. He has a host of friends who will regret to learn of his mishap.

BILL MINER IN PORCUPINE?

Special to The Examiner:

COBALT, NOV. 3.— Charles Lellis, an old Nevada mining man, who knows Bill Miner, the famous desperado, who recently broke away from Georgian prison, declares positively that he sat opposite to Miner in a train from Toronto, but didn't get a chance to advise the police. Miner didn't get off here, so he must be in Porcupine somewhere.

Two Grand Trunk Freight Trains Collide Near the Lock Street Crossing This Morning Doing Considerable Damage

NO ONE INJURED

A collision between two G. T. R. freight trains occurred at the Lock street crossing early this morning.

The first was a light freighter, coming from Belleville. When nearing the crossing the engine pulled in at the siding, left he cars there, and proceeded to the station to obtain a fresh supply of water. After watering, the engine returned, and coupled on the cars, preparatory to resuming the journey. At this moment another Belleville freight train, also light, approached, and, as the first train pulled out of the siding, struck several of its centre cars. It is said that the cause of the accident was the non-changing of the green light for a red. The hindermost train at the time of the accident, was travelling at a speed of eight or ten miles an hour. One car (C.P.R. 79034) was knocked right off its axles and toppled over, while several others of the G.T.R. were also badly stove in. The colliding engine sustained a broken tender and other minor damages, and was taken to Lindsay. The track was slightly displaced in several places, but a replacement of some of the ties and the straightening of the switch rod was all that was necessary. The semaphore was also broken.

The engineers were Messrs. McClellan and O'Brien, respectively.

About 2.30 o'clock the auxiliary arrived (the accident happened at 2 o'clock) and commenced work on the wreck. The Belleville track was necessarily blocked for the space of some eight hours, but at about 10.30 this morning the track was cleared. Trainmaster McMillan supervised the work. Happily, no one was injured.

A GREAT DISCOVERY

Certain Ingredients That Really Promote Hair Growth When Properly Combined

Resorcin is one of the most effective germ destroyers ever discovered by science, and in connection with Beta Napthol, which is both germicidal and antiseptic, a combination is formed which destroys the germs which rob the hair of its natural nourishment, and also creates a clean, healthy condition of the scalp, which prevents the development of new germs.

Pilocarpin, although not a colouring matter or dye, is a well-known ingredient for restoring the hair to its natural colour, when the loss of hair has been caused by a disease of the scalp.

These ingredients in proper combination, with alcohol added as a stimulant and for its well-defined nourishing properties, perfect perhaps the most effective remedy that is known for scalp and hair troubles.

We have a remedy which is chiefly composed of these ingredients, in combination with other extremely invaluable medicinal agents. We guarantee it to positively cure dandruff and to grow hair, even though the scalp in spots is bare of hair. If there is any vitality left in the roots, it will positively cure baldness, or we will refund your money. If the scalp has a glazed, shiny appearance, it's an indication that baldness is permanent, but in other instances, we believe baldness is curable.

We want every one troubled with scalp disease or loss of hair to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. If it does not cure dandruff and grow hair to the satisfaction of the user, we will, without question or quibble, return every cent paid us for it. We print this guarantee on every bottle. It has effected a positive cure in 93 p.c. of cases where put to a practical test.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is entirely unlike, and we think, in every particular, better than anything else we know of for the purpose for which it is prescribed. We urge you to try this preparation at our entire risk. Certainly we know of no better guarantee to give you. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Peterborough only at our store,—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

CASE AGAINST CHICLE CO. DISMISSED BY HIS LORDSHIP

Chief Justice Stated That the Plaintiff Could Not Recover in This Action on Account of the Condition of the Law ---Company Promises Adequate Compensation to Miss Hillier, as Advised by His Lordship.

CONSIDERABLE EVIDENCE WAS HEARD YESTERDAY

The case of Miss Hillier vs. the Canadian Chicle Co., came to an abrupt conclusion yesterday afternoon, about 5.15, when His Lordship, Sir William Mulock declared the case dismissed without costs.

His Lordship asked that Mr. O'Connor, managing director of the defendant company, be brought before him, and made a statement to the following effect:

"The plaintiff cannot recover in this action on account of the condition of the law .This poor orphan girl has suffered irreparable injury by reason of her right hand passing through the rolls in your factory. Here she is on the verge of womanhood and is disfigured and maimed for life. It is your duty, Mr. O'Connor to make a substantial compensation to her. Under the circumstances, you owe it to yourself as a citizen of this place, and I am sure you wouldn't want anyone to think you hadn't done so, and for the sake of the good name of the Company in this community, I think you should do this. It might have been your own daughter, so I want you to do what you would do if she were your own child."

"Yes, my Lord," replied Mr. O'Connor; "I have been kind to the girl since the accident; I have paid her hospital bill and her wages up to the time of the commencement of this action, etc."

"That is nothing; you have done nothing that begins to touch on what I have in mind—I mean something far more substantial than anything of that kind. Now I hope, Mr. O'Connor, you will do what is right by this girl," concluded his Lordship, and Mr. O'Connor promised to carry out the instructions of His Lordship.

"Now, Mr. O'Connell, as counsel for the defendants, I hope you will use your best influence and endeavour to obtain a substantial compensation for this unfortunate girl. I not only expect you to do what is right, but I expect you to do handsomely for her."

Then, turning to the jury, his Lordship stated that, in view of the fact that the plaintiff could not recover at law, he would be under the necessity of discharging them, but he believed Mr. O'Connor and his counsel, Mr. O'Connell had in open court made such promises as would afford the plaintiff some adequate compensation for the loss she had sustained through the injury to her right hand.

The case was continued all afternoon, and a great deal of evidence was taken before the final result came.

Yesterday's Session.

Continuing the case yesterday afternoon, the plaintiff was questioned by His Honour, the Judge:

Did you understand that by taking that $4.50 while in the hospital, that you were settling any action for damages?"

"No, I did not."

To Mr. Bennett—

"How do you connect her work with the work she was engaged in that day?"

"She was under the direction of Mr. O'Connor, and he set her at that work that day."

Then addressing the witness: "Did Mr. Harvey give you instructions?"

"Not either."

Flora Evans' Statement.

Miss Flora Evans was next called, and questioned by Mr. Goodwill.

"Where were you employed last June?"

"In the gum factory."

"Your employment?"

"Help wrap the gum."

"Was Miss Hillier there?"

"Yes, I remember the day she was injured."

"What was plaintiff doing previous to the accident?"

"Packing gum."

"Do you know how she came to work on the machine?"

"Mr. Howard came up and asked her to come down."

"Was Mr. O'Connor in the building?"

"I don't think he was there that day."

"Who was making the gum?"

"Mr. Howard."

"Who usually does?"

"Some of the men; either Mr. O'Connor, or Mr. Howard."

"Do the girls?"

"No."

"Could you see the machine from where you were?"

"Yes. She was feeding it."

Cross Examined.

Mr. O'Connell cross-examined the witness.

"What were you doing that day?"

"Packing Spearmint."

"Did you see her feed the machine?"

"Yes, I looked down and saw her".

Miss Fitzpatrick's Evidence.

The next witness, Miss Fitzpatrick, was then called, and Mr. Goodwill questioned her.

"Did you ever work on the machine for rolling gum in the new factory?"

"Yes, under Mr. Howard's instructions. I only worked one day."

"Were there men present on the floor that day?"

"Mr. O'Connor."

"Who told you to go to the machine?"

"Mr. O'Connor."

"How did you handle the gum?"

"With gloves."

"Did anything happen?"

"Yes. One day my glove caught and went between the rollers. I was then instructed to go to my old job. I was called to come back to the work, and I refused to work at the machine."

"Did you go back?"

"No."

"Then what happened?"

SHANGHAI CAPTURED BY CHINESE REVOLUTIONARIES

Special to The Examiner:

PEKIN, NOV. 3.—Shanghai is the latest city to fall into the hands of the revolutionists without serious fighting and the news is very dispiriting to the coalition government, who see now that the work of conciliating the provinces which have declared themselves independent republic, has not begun yet. In foreign circles here it is thought now that the result of the revolution will be to form a half dozen independent nations of present Chinese empire.

95 PER CENT. OF DOUBLE LIABILITY CALL PAID

Special Wire to the Examiner.

TORONTO, NOV. 3.—Ninety-five per cent. of the double liability call on shareholders of the defunct Ontario bank has been paid up. This fact, ascertained to-day, is regarded in prominent financial circles, as a remarkable evidence of the honesty, courage and optimism of the Canadian investors. To-day a total of one million two hundred and thirty thousand has been gathered in this way, and it is probably the most remarkable clean-up in the history of banking liquidation. The bank's affairs are assuming such shape, too, that there may be a surplus when all is completed.

FOUR ARE KILLED

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK CITY, NOV. 3.—Julius Shapiro, his wife and three children, were killed jumping from a tenement window to escape a fire and two other children permanently crippled this morning. Shapiro was escaping down his children to policemen on a ladder, when his weight pulled him out and he fell, dashing his brains out on the pavement below. Other members of the family jumped with the above results.

DISASTROUS FIRE OBLITERATES BUSINESS SECTION OF BETHANY EARLY THIS MORNING

Eight Valuable Stores Fall a Prey to the Flames, Entailing a Loss of About $34,000---A Number of People Were Rendered Homeless---Fire Raged for Hours and Threatened to Consume Entire Town.

THE MOST DISASTROUS FIRE IN THE HISTORY OF THE TOWN

LIST OF LOSSES.

Alex. Monk, harness shop.
T. J. Jackson, butcher and grocer.
L. B. Sisson, barber shop.
Charles Reynolds, hardware and furniture.
Miss Aikins, milliner.
Mrs. Gallagher, frame residence.
Dr. T. G. Brereton, office and drug store.

FACTS.

Fire discovered in harness shop at 11.20.
Cause—Unknown.
Total estimated damage—$34,000.
Injured—One man rendered unconscious.
Place—Bethany, about 15 miles west of here.

Thirty-four thousand dollars is the estimated damage caused by a fire, which wiped out fully one half of the hamlet of Bethany last night. The fire was first discovered in the harness making establishment of Alex. Monk, and in a very short space of time, the flames had spread rapidly both east and west, on the south side of what is known as King street. The entire fire equipment of the village, which consisted of two hand pumps and a couple of short lengths of hose, was brought into requisition, and with the splendid aid rendered by the employees of the Toronto Construction Company, much valuable property was saved from the devouring flames. A temporary tank, which is used to supply water to the construction engines, and which is fed by a hydraulic ram from a nearby creek was kept in operation throughout the night and was of very material assistance in checking the flames, through the medium of a hand engine.

Bucket brigades and salvage corps were formed and the workers heroically endeavoured to save as much of the contents of the doomed buildings as possible. They piled the goods out in the middle of the road and by strenuous efforts succeeded in saving many hundreds of dollars worth of furniture, etc. Hairbreadth escapes of the fire fighters were many and miraculous ;one man while attempting to extinguish the flames on the roof of a two-storey building, fell to the ground and was rendered unconscious. Fortunately, medical aid was near at hand and his injuries were attended to. He recovered about an hour later, very little the worse for his mishap.

About 12.20 the fire had assumed such alarming proportions that Mr. Preston, the member for East Durham and resident of the fire stricken burg called Peterborough and endeavoured to get into communication with the Mayor, with a view to securing help. Charles Reynolds, furniture and hardware.

Miss Atkins, milliner.

Mrs. Gallagher, owner of house at rear of burned stores.

Dr. T. G. Brereton, office and drug store and owner of the west block which was destroyed.

The damage to the buildings will run in the neighbourhood of $21,000, damage to stock $5,000 and about $1,000 damage to the furniture stock, which was removed from the buildings, added to this about $7,000 for the town hall property, which gives a total of about $34,000. These figures were secured from a local contractor, and therefore are approximately correct. About one-half is covered by insurance.

Bonds Are Attractive

Canadian Locomotive Company Bonds Meet With Favourable Reception

The First Mortgage Bonds of the Canadian Locomotive Company, which are now being offered in Canada, are meeting with a favourable reception. Undoubtedly, from the standpoint of security, earnings and income return, the bonds are attractive. The proceeds of the present bond issues will be used to double the present capacity of the Plant to keep pace with the ever increasing demand for locomotives. Orders now on the books of the Canadian Locomotive Company ensure a plethora of work for some time to come. There is every reason to believe that, under new conditions, the present rate of earnings will be increased considerably.

STRUCK BY CAR

A FAMOUS HOCKEYIST

TORONTO, NOV. 3.—Mr. D. Bruce Ridpath, a professional hockey player, living at 584 Yonge street, was seriously injured last night as a result of being run down by an automobile. At an early hour this morning he was still unconscious, suffering from an injury to the base of the skull and concussion of the brain, besides bruises about the face and arms. Notwithstanding the fact that his injuries are of a serious nature, some hope is held out for his recovery.

The accident occurred shortly before 8 o'clock on Yonge street, a short distance south of Alexander St. Ridpath had just alighted from a northbound Yonge street car, and stepped in front of an automobile driven by Mr. Colin A. Campbell, 62 Havelock street, going in a southerly direction. No sooner had Ridpath got clear of the car than he noticed the approach of the machine. According to the people in the car, he hesitated upon noticing the car, and then attempted to draw back towards the rails, but suddenly dived in front of the car.

Brakes Applied Promptly.

Mr. Campbell, who was driving the car, promptly applied the emergency brakes, but the auto had struck Ridpath before it was possible to bring it to a standstill. Ridpath was struck by the hood of the machine, and thrown back towards the rails. He was rendered unconscious. When it was found that he was seriously injured he was placed in the automobile and taken to a drug store a short distance away. Doctors Walter McKeown and Walter P. Thompson, 31 Carlton street east, were summoned and after dressing his injuries ordered his immediate removal to St. Michael's Hospital.

Ridpath is probably one of the best known athletes in Canada. Apart from his skill as a professional hockey player he gained a great reputation as an expert exponent of the art of canoeing. As a result of his achievements in this particular line at the Dominion Day regatta in Toronto a few years ago he was engaged to give a demonstration of his skill in hippodromes in Europe and America.

Ridpath is an old Lakefield boy and is well known in Peterborough. He has a host of friends who will regret to learn of his mishap.

BILL MINER IN PORCUPINE?

Special to The Examiner:

COBALT, NOV. 3.— Charles Lellis, an old Nevada mining man, who knows Bill Miner, the famous desperadoe, who recently broke away from Georgian prison, declares positively that he sat opposite to Miner in a train from Toronto, but didn't get a chance to advise the police. Miner didn't get off here, so he must be in Porcupine somewhere.

MINERS MAKE DEMONSTRATION

Special to The Examiner:

FERNIE, B.C., NOV. 3.—A demonstration on the part of the miners took place here last night on the arrival of a train load of new men, and necessitated the reading of the Riot Act by the mayor of the city, after which all dispersed.

A MINOR WRECK

Two Grand Trunk Freight Trains Collide Near the Lock Street Crossing This Morning Doing Considerable Damage

NO ONE INJURED

A collision between two G. T. R. freight trains occurred at the Lock street crossing early this morning.

The first was a light freighter, coming from Belleville. When nearing the crossing the engine pulled in at the siding, left he cars there, and proceeded to the station to obtain a fresh supply of water. After watering, the engine returned, and coupled on the cars, preparatory to resuming the journey. At this moment another Belleville freight train, also light, approached, and, as the first train pulled out of the siding, struck several of its centre cars. It is said that the cause of the accident was the non-changing of the green light for a red. The hindermost train at the time of the accident, was travelling at a speed of eight or ten miles an hour. One car (C.P.R. 79034) was knocked right off its axles and toppled over, while several others of the G.T.R. were also badly stoved in. The colliding engine sustained a broken tender and other minor damages, and was taken to Lindsay. The track was slightly displaced in several places, but a replacement of some of the ties and the straightening of the switch rod was all that was necessary. The semaphore was also broken.

The engineers were Messrs. McClellan and O'Brien, respectively.

About 2.30 o'clock the auxiliary arrived (the accident happened at 2 o'clock) and commenced work on the wreck. The Belleville track was necessarily blocked for the space of some eight hours, but at about 10.30 this morning the track was cleared. Trainmaster McMillan supervised the work. Happily, no one was injured.

A GREAT DISCOVERY

Certain Ingredients That Really Promote Hair Growth When Properly Combined

Resorcin is one of the most effective germ destroyers ever discovered by science, and in connection with Beta Napthol, which is both germicidal and antiseptic, a combination is formed which destroys the germs which rob the hair of its natural nourishment, and also creates a clean, healthy condition of the scalp, which prevents the development of new germs.

Pilocarpin, although not a colouring matter or dye, is a well-known ingredient for restoring the hair to its natural colour, when the loss of hair has been caused by a disease of the scalp.

These ingredients in proper combination, with alcohol added as a stimulant and for its well-defined nourishing properties, perfect perhaps the most effective remedy that is known for scalp and hair troubles.

We have a remedy which is chiefly composed of these ingredients, in combination with other extremely invaluable medicinal agents. We guarantee it to positively cure dandruff and to grow hair, even though the scalp in spots is bare of hair. If there is any vitality left in the roots, it will positively cure baldness, or we will refund your money. If the scalp has a glazed, shiny appearance, it's an indication that baldness is permanent, but in other instances, we believe baldness is curable.

We want every one troubled with scalp disease or loss of hair to try Rexall "93" Hair Tonic. If it does not cure dandruff and grow hair to the satisfaction of the user, we will, without question or quibble, return every cent paid us for it. We print this guarantee on every bottle. It has effected a positive cure in 93 p.c. of cases where put to a practical test.

Rexall "93" Hair Tonic is entirely unlike, and we think, in every particular, better than anything else we know of for the purpose for which it is prescribed. We urge you to try this preparation at our entire risk. Certainly we know of no better guarantee to give you. Remember, you can obtain Rexall Remedies in Peterborough only at our store,—The Rexall Store, McDermid and Jury.

CASE AGAINST CHICLE CO. DISMISSED BY HIS LORDSHIP

Chief Justice Stated That the Plaintiff Could Not Recover in This Action on Account of the Condition of the Law ---Company Promises Adequate Compensation to Miss Hillier, as Advised by His Lordship.

CONSIDERABLE EVIDENCE WAS HEARD YESTERDAY

The case of Miss Hillier vs. the Canadian Chicle Co., came to an abrupt conclusion yesterday afternoon, about 5.15, when His Lordship, Sir William Mulock declared the case dismissed without costs.

His Lordship asked that Mr. O'Connor, managing director of the defendant company, be brought before him, and made a statement to the following effect:

"The plaintiff cannot recover in this action on account of the condition of the law .This poor orphan girl has suffered irreparable injury by reason of her right hand passing through the rolls in your factory. Here she is on the verge of womanhood and is disfigured and maimed for life. It is your duty, Mr. O'Connor to make a substantial compensation to her. Under the circumstances, you owe it to yourself as a citizen of this place, and I am sure you wouldn't want anyone to think you hadn't done so, and for the sake of the good name of the Company in this community, I think you should do this. It might have been your own daughter, so I want you to do what you would do if she were your own child."

"Yes, my Lord," replied Mr. O'Connor; "I have been kind to the girl since the accident; I have paid her hospital bill and her wages up to the time of the commencement of this action, etc."

"That is nothing; you have done nothing that begins to touch on what I have in mind—I mean something far more substantial than anything of that kind. Now I hope, Mr. O'Connor, you will do what is right by this girl," concluded his Lordship, and Mr. O'Connor promised to carry out the instructions of his Lordship.

"Now, Mr. O'Connell, as counsel for the defendants, I hope you will use your best influence and endeavour to obtain a substantial compensation for this unfortunate girl. I not only expect you to do what is right, but I expect you to do handsomely for her."

Then, turning to the jury, his Lordship stated that, in view of the fact that the plaintiff could not recover at law, he would be under the necessity of discharging them, but he believed Mr. O'Connor and his counsel. Mr. O'Connell had in open court made such promises as would afford the plaintiff some adequate compensation for the loss she had sustained through the injury to her right hand.

The case was continued all afternoon, and a great deal of evidence was taken before the final result came.

Yesterday's Session.

Continuing the case yesterday afternoon, the plaintiff was questioned by His Honour, the Judge:

Did you understand that by taking that $4.50 while in the hospital, that you were settling any action for damages?"

"No, I did not."

To Mr. Bennett.—

"How do you connect her work with the work she was engaged in that day?"

"She was under the direction of Mr. O'Connor, and he set her at that work that day."

Then addressing the witness: "Did Mr. Harvey give you instructions?"

"Not since."

Flora Evans' Statement.

Miss Flora Evans was next called, and questioned by Mr. Goodwill.

"Where were you employed last June?"

"In the gum factory."

"Your employment?"

"Help wrap the gum."

"Was Miss Hillier there?"

"Yes, I remember the day she was injured."

"What was plaintiff doing previous to the accident?"

"Packing gum."

"Do you know how she came to work on the machine?"

"Mr. Howard came up and asked her to come down."

"Was Mr. O'Connor in the building?"

"I don't think he was there that day."

"Who was making the gum?"

"Mr. Howard."

"Who usually does?"

"Some of the men; either Mr. O'Connor, or Mr. Howard."

"Do the girls?"

"No."

"Could you see the machine from where you were?"

"Yes. She was feeding it."

Cross Examined.

Mr. O'Connell cross-examined the witness.

"What were you doing that day?"

"Packing spearmint."

"Did you see her feed the machine?"

"Yes, I looked down and saw her".

Miss Fitzpatrick's Evidence.

The next witness, Miss Fitzpatrick, was then called, and Mr. Goodwill questioned her.

"Did you ever work on the machine for rolling gum in the new factory?"

"Yes, under Mr. Howard's instructions. I only worked one day."

"Were there men present on the floor that day?"

"Mr. O'Connor."

"Who told you to go to the machine?"

"Mr. O'Connor."

"How did you handle the gum?"

"With gloves."

"Did anything happen?"

"Yes. One day my glove caught and went between the rollers. I was then instructed to go to my old job. I was called to come back to the work, and I refused to work at the machine."

"Did you go back?"

"No."

"Then what happened?"

SHANGHAI CAPTURED BY CHINESE REVOLUTIONARIES

Special to The Examiner:

PEKIN, NOV. 3.—Shanghai is the latest city to fall into the hands of the revolutionists without serious fighting and the news is very dispiriting to the coalition government, who see now that the work of conciliating the provinces which have declared themselves independent republics, has not begun yet. In foreign circles here it is thought now that the result of the revolution will be to form a half dozen independent nations of present Chinese empire.

95 PER CENT. OF DOUBLE LIABILITY CALL PAID

Special Wire to the Examiner.

TORONTO, NOV. 3.—Ninety-five per cent. of the double liability call on shareholders of the defunct Ontario bank has been paid up. This fact, ascertained to-day, is regarded in prominent financial circles, as a remarkable evidence of the honesty, courage and optimism of the Canadian investors. To-day a total of one million two hundred and thirty thousand has been gathered in this way, and it is probably the most remarkable clean-up in the history of banking liquidation. The bank's offers are assuming such sh. pe, too, that there may be a surplus when all is completed.

FOUR ARE KILLED

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NEW YORK CITY, NOV. 3.—Julius Shapiro, his wife and three children, were killed jumping from a tenement window to escape a fire and two other children permanently crippled this morning. Shapiro was reaching down his children to policemen on a ladder, when his weight pulled him out and he fell, dashing his brains out on the pavement below. Other members of the family jumped with the above results.

THE BIG QUESTION.

Toronto Telegram (Conservative.)

Canada may rejoice to learn from Henri Bourassa's own lips that "the Nationalists are independent of the Borden Government."

But is the Borden Government independent of the Nationalists? Aye, there's the rub.

BETTER OF BEING WATCHED.

All Conservative journals do not fall down at the feet of their Fetish, Sir James Whitney, and worship him. The Hamilton Spectator, most uncompromisingly Conservative, says

"In the interests of good government in Ontario, the Spectator frankly expresses gratification at the results of the Liberal convention in Toronto yesterday. It does not matter much to the people of this province who gives it to them, or how they get it, and we believe, with Whitney in power and the fortunes of the Liberal party in such capable hands as those of Hon. Mackenzie King and Mr. Rowell, they will get more of it than would otherwise be the case.

Such inferential criticism shows that the Spectator believes that Sir James Whitney will be better of a good deal of watching.

WHAT MIGHT HAVE BEEN.

The figures of the voting in Saskatchewan last month show that no fewer than 98,035 ballots were cast, as compared with 59,868 in the election three years ago. The majority for reciprocity is 19,531. Of the ten constituencies in Saskatchewan, Laurier and his policy of larger markets, was endorsed in nine, and by an average majority of 2063. Had Saskatchewan been accorded its rightful representation of fifteen, which the census shows it is entitled to, the enormous majorities indicated above are sufficient warrant for the statement that its representation in Parliament would be 14 Liberals to one Conservative. In Alberta, reciprocity was endorsed in six out of seven constituencies, the Liberal majorities being an average of 1711, to which "Billy" Buchanan, formerly of Peterborough, contributed 1517. If Alberta had had its full representation under a census adjustment, the result would have been, no doubt, 11, instead of 6, Liberals, to one Conservative in Alberta.

CAUSE AND EFFECT.

The Conservative press complains that the Examiner "rubs it in" on the Borden surrender to the Nationalists. They treat it as a light matter that the anti-British, traitorous Nationalist element is recognised as paramount in influencing a dictation of policy in a supposedly loyal Canadian government. Is it a small matter? Was it a small matter in the general elections? Was not the Conservative campaign not largely, if not wholly, conducted, upon issues that were supremely hostile to all that the Nationalist movement represents? Was it not the boast of the victors that Mr. Borden had gained power independently of the French Nationalists? Are not Conservatives in Ontario especially protesting against Mr. Borden's object surrender to the Bourassa forces? Do they not now recognize, as the Toronto Telegram, Conservative, points out, that Mr. Borden has shown himself to be dependent upon the Nationalists? It is no wonder that the machine politicians of the Conservative party dislike hearing about the most flagrant, most pernicious "French domination" of a cabinet and through the cabinet of a province and country, that has ever obtained in Canada. When Mr. Borden ceases to surrender to the Nationalists, ceases to be made a tool of by the disloyal elements in his following, then there will be time to cease reminding him of his monstrous inconsistency and flat disloyalty to the principles upon which he gained his Ontario support. The legitimate and just criticism of Mr. Borden's surrender to disloyal Nationalist sentiment comes within the consideration of cause and effect. Remove the cause and the effect will cease.

MAKE THE MORAL CLAIM A LEGAL RIGHT.

His Lordship, Sir William Mulock, in dismissing the action brought at the assizes this week, by Grace Hillier against the Canadian Chicle Company, for compensation for injuries sustained while performing her work, in the service of the company, made remarks that very strongly emphasize the necessity of improvement of the Workmen's Compensation Act, in the interests of employees of manufacturing concerns. In his remarks, the judge said in effect, as reported in another place in this issue, that, while the plaintiff, Miss Hillier, could not recover damages, according to the law — under which the action was brought, the Workmen's Compensation Act — she still had a moral right to compensation, and he urged the defendants and their counsel to make the substantial compensation the law denied for the disabling and disfiguring injuries received in the employ of the company. This is a broad hint; from one of the ablest jurists, on the bench, that so far as the Workingmen's Compensation Act goes, law and justice are by no mean synonymous terms. He declared in effect, and as if in so many words, that the moral right the young lady had to compensate, was not a legal right—"the plaintiff cannot recover in this action on account of the condition of the law"—therefore it is plain that the law should be so amended that, under its provisions, the moral right of maimed and injured employees of industrial establishments, should be made a legal right. This can easily be done, if our Provincial government and Provincial Legislature can be brought to see the necessity of changing the law, in these premises, in such a way that injuries suffered by employees, should be compensated without expensive process of law, which the average workman cannot afford, if not by some even simpler method. Throughout Canada, every day, hundreds of accidents are happening in factories; some of minor character, such as the loss of a finger, but of major character to the sufferer, or others infinitely more serious, such as the removal of the bread winner of a family by a violent death. Many of these never come to light, because of the feeling of the sufferers that, securing compensation by course of law is in the present state of the latter, always uncertain, but certainly always expensive; for if a verdict is gained, an appeal is sure to follow, with repeated appeals, till the litigant is exhausted in purse and must succumb and lose his cause, not from lack of justice of it, but from sheer financial inability to carry on the fight for his rights, thus giving the victory to the longest purse, independently of consideration of justice or the claims of humanity.

YOUNG AND CLEAN.

This is the tribute of the Toronto World (Conservative) to the new Liberal Ontario leader, Mr. N. W. Rowell:

"He (Mr. Rowell) is young, and clean ,and brave, and able, and eloquent. He has a reputation for keenness and shrewdness which he will have full scope in the political field to justify. If he can manage to interpret the young Liberalism of Ontario to itself he will come closer to the heart-beat of the province than those are able to do who warn their followers of the danger of life and action. Mr. Rowell hardly needs to be reminded that a great fight can be made for God and the people, and that no one will ever expect to derive inspiration from the slogan, "For God and the corporations!" "

The World is a little daft on the subject of "corporations," but it has no reason to associate a liberal leader, or Liberalism; with corporations. Liberalism has as much use for corporations as corporations have for Liberalism. In the recent dominion elections corporation influence smote Liberalism hip and thigh, and no doubt the World is cursing the Toronto and other Conservatives that consider Mr. Borden's surrender to the doctrine of the corporations, as shown in his selection of a finance minister. The World has no warrant to curse corporations in the daytime and make bed fellows of them at night.

MR. CROTHER'S OPPORTUNITY.

(London Advertiser.)

"Our local contemporary exclaims that Hon. Thomas Crothers' speech to his fellow citizens of St. Thomas "would be hard to match ... simple masterfulness." It goes on to refer to him as "this statesman," already. The rather sloberring article closes with a prophecy that under Mr. Crothers the department of labour "will be active in the assurance to them (the toilers) of the full measure of their rights, and it will do more." This last assertion "would be hard to match in simple" soft-sawder. Labouring men do not want more than their rights, and Mr. Crothers himself will not feel comfortable under such heavy attentions. He will be almost alarmed to learn that he is expected to exaggerate the duties of his high office as a sort of caricature Minister of Labour. If the Free Press calls him a "statesman" now before he has done anything for labour either in or out of office, what will it call him when he has done too much?

It is to be hoped, however, setting Free Press absurdities aside, that Mr Crothers will be able to realize his professed ideals, doing his best at any rate to advance the interests of industry and to moderate the conflict between capital and labour. If he does that, he will have the support of the Liberal party, which was responsible for the creation of a labour portfolio, that he will be a credit to Western Ontario.

Hitherto, a section of the Conservative press has had nothing but ridicule, cheap sneering and contumely for the Government's efforts in the new department and for Mr. King. There has been no occasion of strife which this conscientious and highly competent minister endeavoured to moderate, but he was assailed with all manner of abuse, accused of fussy officiousness and heaped with puerile insults .Every possible obstacle was put in his way. It is to be hoped that no Liberal will take this attitude towards Mr. Crothers, but that he will be upheld with both hands in any well-meant and well-considered measure that he may adopt."

This is good advice, and will probably be followed; for Liberalism, and the Liberal press, have a real and sincere interest in labour. All the beneficial legislation that has been placed on the statute books in the interests of the working people, has been put there by Liberal legislators. While all our existing labour legislation may not be perfect, it was at least enacted in the desire to be of benefit. If in application, experience has developed the need of improvement, it should be improved. This applies especially to the Workmen's Compensation Act. The trial of actions in the courts has shown its weak points and emphasized the necessity of so amending the act as to make it really serviceable to the workingman whose life and limb are in constant danger in hazardous employment in large industrial establishments. Working men, when their minds have not been poisoned by mischievous and designing politicians, have always recognized the Liberal party as the friend of labour, and judging from Sir James Whitney's off and abrupt, if not hostile, attitude to labour, in the next Legislature, if anything is done in the interests of working men, it will have to be done, or urged by Liberals.

EDITORIAL NOTES.

Another Conservative paper who is into line with Mr. Monk's anti-naval policy. The Halifax Herald says "Canada has plenty of money for really useful purposes, but Canada has no money to throw away on a navy."

When Hon. A. G. MacKay resigned the leadership of the Liberal party he was the object of a very touching sympathy on the part of some Conservative journals that tried to persuade him that he had a grievance. That was all right so long as he was out of politics. Now that he is a candidate in North Grey, they will have to take a sharp curve. He must be slang-whanged now.

GIVE THE POORER BOY AND GIRL THE RIGHT CHANCE

(Brantford Expositor)

The province of Ontario spends $1.36 on every public and separate school pupil; $4.66 on every high school and collegiate institute pupil; $1.13 on every model and normal student, and $128.00 on every university student.

In the matter of technical education the province, under a non-progressive and inactive Whitney government, stands where it did when the Whitney Government came into power, despite the fact that nearly every state in the Union has taken steps to establish a real system whereby the mechanic's son is to have his earning power greatly advanced during that transitory period when a youth leaves offpublic school and faces the problem of going to work, however ill-fitted he may be, or continuing some sort of a training which will increase his capacity to earn a good livelihood.

By force of circumstances, the great majority of mechanics' sons decide to go to work. The mechanic who is able to send his sons into the professions is well favoured, so much so that he is an exception. As a rule, the boy looks for something at which he can turn a hand or he becomes an idler.

The present educational system of the province of Ontario is productive of boy labourers and boy idlers, the latter being a small but nevertheless a certain percentage of the product of our schools. The great majority, however find employment at a time when two yeras of technical training would give them a status far above that of the common day labourer.

The boast was made at the recent Conservative convention in this city that the Whitney government had done wonders for Toronto University. However plausible the work of building up a centre of provincial learning may be, a better boast would have been that the Whitney government had done something to gather in the boys who jump from the public schools into the stern battle of industrial life, with a training and equipment which might well be improved, and could be, by a proper system of technical education.

The boast was made at the same convention that the Whitny government has instituted night classes for technical instruction. No boast should be made of such a make-shift which requires a heroic struggle of grinding work and dull confinement in a shop for ten hours a day, and attendance at night classes when one's day's work is over. Such an educational propaganda falls far short of providing the mental and physical development upon which great nations are built.

At the Conservative convention it was also stated that the Whitney government was awaiting the result of the Dominion Technical Education Commission, before launching out into the establishment of a technical educational system. Despite the fact that education is primarily a provincial matter, and whatever efforts the Dominion Government may make will be additional to the provincial, the Whitney government seeks protection for its inactivity by delegating a matter of its own jurisdiction to some other authority. Despite the fact that Sir James Whitney and Hon. Dr. Pyne made a special trip to Germany to inquire into technical education, and despite the fact that Inspector James L. Hughes of Toronto was sent into the United States to continue the same inquiry, the inactivity continues, and the boast is made that Ontario spends $128 annually on every University student and only provides night classes for the very ambitious sons of mechanics who desire to improve their industrial earning power by technical education.

Technical education was launched by a progressive Liberal government. By a non-progressive Conservative government it remains where it was seven years ago. Brantford, and Peterborough, as well) is vitally concerned in this monumental display of inactivity. These cities pay their share of the big sums spent annually on normal school and university education. They have a large percentage of youth of school age not able to take advantage of the above, but ready to become skilled artisans in the forward march of science, if given a chance to secure advanced technical instruction.

By all means, without excuses and without make-shift, let them have a chance!

FOR HOUSEHOLD ACCIDENTS

Zam-Buk Is So Very Useful

Read How Beneficial It Proved In This Case.

Mrs. H. Sawyer of Keene, Ont., writes: "My husband is engaged on a farm, and one day, while chopping wood, the top of the axe broke and fell upon his foot, cutting a nasty gash. The wound was so bad that we first thought we should have to get a doctor, but we finally decided to dress the cut with Zam-Buk.

"Well, the Zam-Buk treatment proved a great success. It not only eased the pain, but it prevented any inflammation and right from first applying Zam-Buk, the cut began to heal. It is now completely healed, and my husband says he will never be without a box of Zam-Buk in the house, for we are sure it saved us a great deal of expense."

Over and over again Zam-Buk has been proved to be the worker's best remedy. Os soon as applied to a cut, a burn, a scald, or any skin injury, it relieves the pain and it sets up healing. It also prevents blood-poisoning or inflammation. It is a sure cure, too, for eczema, piles, ulcers, old wounds, bad leg, ringworm, scalp sores, festering, runing sores, eruptions, cold sores, chapped hands, etc. Its absolute purity, also, makes it the ideal balm for babies.

Zam-Buk Soap should be used along with the balm for washing all sore places. This soap will be found excellent for baby's bath, even where the balm is not being used.

All druggists and stores sell Zam-Buk at 50c. box, and Zam-Buk Soap at 25c. tablet, or post free from Zam-Buk Co., Toronto, upon receipt of price. Refuse harmful substitutes.

CASE AGAINST CHICLE CO

The lawyer for the defence objected and Mr. O'Connell proceeded:

"Did you leave before the accident happened?"

"Yes."

"Why?"

"I was dismissed because I would not go back to the machine."

"Do you know whether you were cutting gum that day or not?"

"I don't know."

"What were you doing?"

"Breaking gum."

"Did you ever work on a machine before?"

"I never worked on a machine at all."

Jean Sherwood.

The next witness was examined by Mr. Bennett.

"Did you work on the machine?"

"Yes, once."

"Who worked with you?"

"Mr. Frank O'Connor."

"Did you wear gloves like those?"

"Yes. The fingers were a little longer."

"Was Miss Fitpatrick there when you were there?"

"A short while."

Mr. O'Connell asked the witness only a few questions.

Dr. Greer was put in the witness-box.

"How long have you been practising?" asked Mr. Bennett.

"About thirty years."

"How did you find the injured hand?"

"The little finger was severed at the second joint. The second was disabled.

The hand is disabled permanently for manual labour. She is handicapped for writing. The fingers are disabled."

"The usefulness of the hand is entirely gone?"

"Almost."

Dr. Young was called.

"How long have you been practising?" asked Mr. Bennett.

"About eighteen years."

"You examined the hand?"

"Yes. The little finger and the next one is off at the second joint, and the next one is contracted."

"Could the hand be remedied?"

"Yes, but it would not be advisable to operate."

"Do you agree with Dr. Greer as to the condition?"

"Yes."

"Can she write?"

"I think she could write with her finger and thumb."

Mr. O'Connell then addressed His Lordship.

Mr. Bennett made a short address on behalf of the plaintiff. He said it should be a matter for the jury to see whether Mr. O'Connor was supervising the work that day.

"He was in charge of the girls, and there is no question that the machine was a dangerous one."

At this juncture His Lordship dismissed the case without costs.

ANNUAL MEETING

Horticultural Society Has Had a Good Year—Mr. Peter Campbell Was Elected President For the Year

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Horticultural Society was held last night in the Council Chamber. Plans and suggestions were offered for the advancement of the work of the society for the year 1912.

Mr. Frank Wise furnished the surprise of the evening when he tendered his resignation as secretary of the society to the Board. He pleaded lack o ftime to attend to the work in a manner hat he would like, as the cause of his action. His resignation will take effect on January first, and in the meantime an attempt will be

Mr. Peter Campbell, in reviewing the good work done by the society during the past year, expressed the hope that the society would see it way clear to expend a little money in the construction of a cement coping alongside of the park walks. This would have a tendency to circumvent the actions of pedestrians, who persist in making a footpath adjacent to the walk. The membership had increased considerably during the past year, and the finances were in good shape, concluded Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Frank Wise, secretary of the Peterborough Horticultural Society presented the park report. It read as follows:

Receipts for Park Purposes

Balance in Bank	$ 4.72
By County Council	200.00
By City Council	600.00
Total	$804.72

Expenditure on Parks

For Wages	$394.98
Rent of Tool House for two years	10.00
Plants and Flowers	15.00
Bulbs	24.38
Repairs to Water System	16.08
Concrete Walk	100.00
Tools, Paint, Light, &c.	39.00
Secretary's Salary	50.00
Balance in Bank	125.27
Total	$804.72

Several improvements were intended to be made in Victoria Park this year, but owing to the difficulty in getting men to do the work, it has had to lie over until another year.

The Treasurer's statement for the year ending 31st October showed the total receipts to be $446.02. The expenditure amounted to $388.39, with a balance on hand of $58.30, showing a cash total of $446.32. These reports were adopted.

Mr. Wise gave a brief summary of the work of the society during the past year. The list of options given in the spring had been responsible for a large increase in membership. Through insadvertence he had left a detailed account of the work of the society for the past year at home, and therefore had to give a brief synopsis from memory. One hundred and eight new members had been secured, while 18 of the old members had dropped out. The total membership was 294. If that number were kept together a good society could be sustained and a larger grant be secured from the Government. Mr. Jordan here interposed with the suggestion that the society adopt the usual method of securing new members, viz., the distribution of options.

Mr. Riddell made a suggestion regarding street improvement, which will be taken up at a future meeting.

Prior to the election of officers, Mr. T. A. S. Hay suggested that the ladies be represented on the list of officers. This was accordingly acted upon, as the following list will show:

President, Mr. Peter Campbell; first vice-president, Mr. Harry Beal; second vice-president, Mrs. Hazan Ritchie; secretary-treasurer, left over; directors—Hon. J. R. Stratton, F. Edgar, J. Riddell, D. W. Dumble, Dr. Burnham, J. English, S. Jordan, T. B. Cowan, T. A. S. Hay, Mrs. Walsh, Mrs. W. H. Hill, Mrs. Coulhard, Miss Shirley Denison, J. C. Wainwright, Walter Stocker, and R. M. Glover; auditors, Messrs. Beal and Hay.

Mr. Hay referred to the wretched condition of Central Park, which was caused by the grading of the grounds which were too low in places. At present people tramp all over the park, each man having a trail of his own. There are no signs or any steps taken to prevent this. He advocated propefly constructed walks, with boulevards 24 feet wide on either side ,the latter being for the purpose of planting shrubs, flowers, etc.

Mr. Wise suggested that a meeting be held in January, a suggestion which met with unanimous approval.

Those present were: Messrs. Campbell, Hay, Beal, English, Riddell, Jordan, Wise, and Dr. Burnham.

GUARD THEIR HEALTH!

Children Who Grow Very Fast Need Careful Watching.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills would make her healthy and happy.

Next to infancy, the years between ten or twelve and eighteen are the most critical in life, especially for the boys and girls who grow too fast. Rapid growth and the physical changes that are taking place render them particularly liable to weakness and disorders of the digestive system, kidneys or lungs that very frequently, when allowed to run on, condemn them to a lifetime of suffering.

It is most important that at this period of life those organs which carry off the body's waste and impurities—the bowels, the kidneys and the skin—should be kept active and vigorous.

Nothing will do this more effectively than that good old-fashioned remedy, Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills. It acts directly on each of these organs, enabling them to do their work properly, and thus keeps the whole system pure and healthy.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are still made from precisely the same formula as when our grandparents used them, for nothing better has ever been devised

THE FORD CAR SCORES MORE TRIUMPHS

Great Record at the Automobile Races in Toronto on Thanksgiving Day

Mr. J. J. Duffus has received the following letter from the manager of the Ford Motor Company of Canada:

Dear Sir,—We beg to give you an account of the automobile races held at Exhibition Park on Thanksgiving afternoon.

The first race was a 5-mile race for 20 H.P. cars, 1st, Ford; 2nd, Flanders; 3rd, Flanders. Time, 6 minutes and 14 seconds.

Second event—One mile for track record—Ford, 1 minute, 13 2-6 seconds.

Third event—one mile, for track record, Ohio car, time 1 minute, 19 4-6 seconds.

Fourth event—one mile for track record—Warren car, time 1 minute, 16 3-5 seconds.

Fifth event—ten mile race for 30 H.P. cars—1st, Warren; 2nd, Ohio; 3, Abbott-Detroit, time, 12 minutes, 56 1-5 seconds. In this race the Ford was leading at the end of the third mile by over a quarter of a lap when our car dropped out, owing to dirt getting in the carburetor.

Sixth event—ten mile free-for-all—1st, Ford; 2nd, Flanders; 3rd, Warren; 4th, Ohio, 5th, Flanders. Time, 12 minutes, 37 2-5 seconds.

You can see by the Free-for-all that our time was some 19 seconds under the winner of the first ten-mile race, and had it not been for the carburetor trouble we would certainly have won this race very easily.

The Dunlop Trophy race, which was to have been for 25 miles, was not run on account of darkness, but this will come off this following Saturday, and no doubt the Ford car will make a fair showing in the 25-mile race.

We trust the foregoing information will be of value to you. The Ford car was certainly the appreciated car of the afternoon, everyone being very much surprised at the speed made.

We might say we now hold the one mile track record on the half-mile track at the Exhibition, beating Barney Oldfield's time by 1 1-2 seconds.

Yours very truly,
The Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited.
F. F. FOX.

CHOIR WAS ENTERTAINED

The choir of St. James' Methodist church were most pleasantly entertained last night at the residence of Mrs. H. C. Winch, Crescent street. The evening was enjoyably spent in music and games and was voted a most agreeable success. A sumptuous repast was served by Mrs. Winch, assisted by Miss Poole, Miss Carveth and Miss Whitfield. Mrs. Winch's hospitality was greatly appreciated by the members of the choir and was the means of bringing them together on a most enjoyable occasion, which will not soon be forgotten by them.

ENJOYABLE SMOKER

No. 3 company of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers, held a most enjoyable smoker last evening in the company's quarters at the armouries. A programme was rendered, after which refreshments were served and the usual smoker's pleasures indulged in. The company intends holding a smoker on a larger scale in the near future.

Mr. Hall's East City Committee Rooms, Swanston's House, corner of Driscoll Terrace and Hunter Streets, will be open each evening until election day, commencing Monday evening, November 6th. All friends and supporters are invited to attend.

ENJOYED JOURNEY

Before leaving Canada, Mr. Hamar Greenwood, Member of Parliament, British House of Commons, wrote to the Grand Trunk Railway System, in connection with his trip over their lines in Canada, and in which he says: "We especially enjoyed the journey from Edmonton to Winnipeg, which we made on your System in the best equipped train I ever saw in my life. You have fixed a very high standard, if this train is the standard up to which you are working."

Certain That Richeson Will Be Set Free

Special to The Examiner:

BOSTON, MASS., Nov. 3.—"Clarence Richeson will be freed," said Attorney John L. Lee, of Lynchburg, Va., yesterday, following a conference with the clergyman in his cell in the Charles Street Jail.

"I have both heard his story and examined the evidence for myself," he continued. "I am confident he is innocent, and I can promise a surprise when the facts come out. This will be at the trial. It would be improper to reveal them now."

One thing, however, is known positively—the defence will maintain that Avis Linnell's death was accidental. The theory is that she had been told a small quantity of cyanide of potassium would benefit her, and that she swallowed it intentionally, knowing it to be poison, but unfortunately took too much.

Richeson is having much to do with planning his own defence. He is well versed in law, understands court procedure ,and is proving of much aid to his counsel in preparing his case.

Says The Girl Bought Poison

BOSTON, MASS., Nov. 3.—More firmly convinced than ever that Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson is innocent of the charge of murdering Avis Linnell ,in view of new evidence produced in the past twelve hours, counsel for the accused Baptist minister yesterday went into conference to outline details of the fight they will make to save him from the electric chair.

John L. Lee, a noted criminal lawyer of the South, who refused to defend Henry Clay Beattie; Attorney Philip R. Dunbar ,of Boston, who has had charge of the case up to this time; and Representative Robert Orr Harris of Massachusetts, met in Judge Dunbar's office shortly after nine o'clock. They said they would place the case entirely in Lee's hands.

It was to present him with every scrap of evidence favouring Richeson that the conference was called.

The new evidence favourable to Richeson, which is said to have been discovered, is that of Eugene Levit and his wife, of Cambridge, who have told the defence counsel that a girl answering the description of Avis Linnell purchased cyanide at their drug store a few days before Miss Linnell was found dying.

It was informally declared that the evidence of the Levits will be pitted against that of Druggist Wm. Hahn, on whom the prosecution will rely to prove that Richeson purchased cyanide on the Tuesday before he murder.

Shortly after the defence lawyers went into conference yesterday, District Attorney Pelletier and Judge Lee decided to have Richeson go before Judge Sanderson on Monday morning for arraignment. At that time he will plead "not guilty" to the formal indictment.

HAD THE RIGHT KIND

A young preacher went fishing for trout, accompanied by a couple of girls from his parish. A farmer who was also out fishing called to the young clergyman:

"Ketchin' many trout?"

"I'm a fisher of men," said the young preacher with dignity.

"Well," the farmer smiled, and then looking at the girls, said: "I see you've got the right kind of bait with you!"

WHERE THE CAT WAS

"What are the passengers looking out of the window for?" asked a nervous lady passenger on the train as the conducer came through.

"We ran over a cat, madam," said the conductor.

"Was the cat on the track?" she next asked.

"Oh, no, ma'am," assured the conductor. "The locomotive chased her up an alley!"

HIS REPLY

Travelling from Inverness to London, my only companion in the third-class carriage was an elderly Highlander. He sat in his corner with his plaid wrapped round him, and an expression of supreme content on his countenance, only stirring occasionally for the purpose of taking a swig at his flask of mountain dew. Not a word was passed for some two hours, and then, tiring of the monotony, I ventured to suggest: "This is a very fatiguing journey." "Ay, and so it ought to be," was the reply. "Twa poon's, twa shillin's and saxpence."

ANNUAL MEETING

Horticultural Society Has Had a Good Year—Mr. Peter Campbell Was Elected President For the Year

FINANCIAL STATEMENT

The annual meeting of the Peterborough Horticultural Society was held last night in the Council Chamber. Plans and suggestions were offered for the advancement of the work of the society for the year 1912.

Mr. Frank Wise furnished the surprise of the evening when he tendered his resignation as secretary of the society to the Board. He pleaded lack o ftime to attend to the work in a manner hat he would like, as the cause of his action. His resignation will take effect on January first, and in the meantime an attempt will be

Mr. Peter Campbell, in reviewing the good work done by the society during the past year, expressed the hope that the society would see it way clear to expend a little money in the construction of a cement coping alongside of the park walks. This would have a tendency to circumvent the actions of pedestrians, who persist in making a footpath adjacent to the walk. The membership had increased considerably during the past year, and the finances were in good shape, concluded Mr. Campbell.

Mr. Frank Wise, secretary of the Peterborough Horticultural Society presented the park report. It read as follows:

Receipts for Park Purposes

Balance in Bank	$ 4.72
By County Council.	200.00
By City Council.	600.00
Total	$804.72

Expenditure on Parks

For Wages	$324.99
Rent of Tool House for two years	10.00
Plants and Flowers.	115.00
Bulbs	24.36
Repairs to Water System.	16.08
Concrete Walk	100.00
Tools, Paint, Light, &c.	39.00
Secretary's Salary	50.00
Balance in Bank	125.27
Total	$804.72

Several improvements were intended to be made in Victoria Park this year, but owing to the difficulty in getting men to do the work, it has had to lie over until another year.

The Treasurer's statement for the year ending 31st October showed the total receipts to be $446.62. The expenditure amounted to $388.20, with a balance on hand of $58.30, showing a cash total of $446.22. These reports were adopted.

Mr. Wise gave a brief summary of the work of the society during the past year. The list of options given in the spring had been responsible for a large increase in membership. Through inadvertence he had left a detailed account of the work of the society for the past year at home, and therefore had to give a brief synopsis from memory. One hundred and eight new members had been secured, while 18 of the old members had dropped out. The total membership was 234. If that number were kept together a good society could be sustained and a larger grant be secured from the Government. Mr. Jordan here interposed with the suggestion that the society adopt the usual method of securing new members, viz., the distribution of options.

Mr. Riddell made a suggestion regarding street improvement, which will be taken up at a future meeting.

Prior to the election of officers, Mr. T. A. S. Hay suggested that the ladies be represented on the list of officers. This was accordingly acted upon, as the following list will show:

President, Mr. Peter Campbell; first vice-president, Mr. Harry Beal; second vice-president, Mrs. Hazan Ritchie; secretary-treasurer, left over; directors—Hon. J. R. Stratton, J. Edgar, J. Riddell, D. W. Dumble, Dr. Burnham, J. English, S. Jordan, T. B. Cowan, T. A. S. Hay, Mrs. Walsh, Mrs. W. H. Hill, Mrs. Coulhard, Miss Shirley Denison, J. C. Wainwright, Walter Stocker, and R. M. Glover; auditors, Messrs. Beal and Hay.

Mr. Hay referred to the wretched condition of Central Park, which was caused by the grading of the grounds which were too low in places. At present people tramp all over the park, each man having a trail of his own. There are no signs or any steps taken to prevent this. He advocated propetly constructed walks, with boulevards 24 feet wide on either side ,the latter being for the purpose of planting shrubs, flowers, etc.

Mr. Hay produced a sketch showing a plan in outline.

Mr. Wise suggested that a meeting be held in January, a suggestion which met with unanimous approval.

Those present were: Messrs. Campbell, Hay, Beal, English, Riddell, Jordan, Wise, and Dr. Burnham.

GUARD THEIR HEALTH!

Children Who Grow Very Fast Need Careful Watching.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills would make her healthy and happy.

Next to infancy, the years between ten or twelve and eighteen are the most critical in life, especially for the boys and girls who grow too fast. Rapid growth and the physical changes that are taking place render them particularly liable to weakness and disorders of the digestive system, kidneys or lungs that very frequently, when allowed to run on, condemn them to a lifetime of suffering.

It is most important that at this period of life those organs which carry off the body's waste and impurities—the bowels, the kidneys and the skin—should be kept active and vigorous.

Nothing will do this more effectively than that good old-fashioned remedy, Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills. It acts directly on each of these organs, enabling them to do their work properly, and thus keeps the whole system pure and healthy.

Dr. Morse's Indian Root Pills are still made from precisely the same formula as when our grandparents used them, for nothing better has ever been devised

THE FORD CAR SCORES MORE TRIUMPHS

Great Record at the Automobile Races in Toronto on Thanksgiving Day

Mr. J. J. Duffus has received the following letter from the manager of the Ford Motor Company of Canada:

Dear Sir,—We beg to give you an account of the automobile races held at Exhibition Park on Thanksgiving afternoon.

The first race was a 5-mile race for 30 H.P. cars, 1st, Ford; 2nd, Flanders; 3rd, Flanders. Time, 6 minutes and 14 seconds.

Second event—One mile for track record—Ford, 1 minute, 13 2-6 seconds.

Third event—one mile, for track record, Ohio car, time 1 minute, 19 4-6 seconds.

Fourth event—one mile for track record—Warren car, time 1 minute, 16 3-5 seconds.

Fifth event—ten mile race for 30 H.P. cars—1st, Warren; 2nd, Ohio; 3, Abbott-Detroit, time, 12 minutes, 56 1-5 seconds. In this race the Ford was leading at the end of the third mile by over a quarter of a lap when our car dropped out, owing to dirt getting in the carburetor.

Sixth event—ten mile free-for-all—1st, Ford; 2nd, Flanders; 3rd, Warren; 4th, Ohio; 5 h, Flanders. Time, 12 minutes, 37 2-5 seconds.

You can see by the Free-for-all that our time was some 19 seconds under the winner of the first ten-mile race, and had it not been for the carburetor trouble we would certainly have won this race very easily.

The Dunlop Trophy race, which was to have been for 25 miles, was not run on account of darkness, but this will come off this following Saturday, and no doubt the Ford car will make a fair showing in the 25-mile race.

We trust the foregoing information will be of value to you. The Ford car was certainly the appreciated car of the afternoon, everyone being very much surprised at the speed made.

We might say we now hold the one mile track record on the half-mile track at the Exhibition, beating Barney Oldfield's time by 1 1-2 seconds.

Yours very truly,
The Ford Motor Company of Canada, Limited.

CHOIR WAS ENTERTAINED

The choir of St. James' Methodist church were most pleasantly entertained last night at the residence of Mrs. H. C. Winch, Crescent street. The evening was enjoyably spent in music and games and was voted a most agreeable success. A sumptuous repast was served by Mrs. Winch, assisted by Miss Poole, Miss Carveth and Miss Whitfield. Mrs. Winch's hospitality was greatly appreciated by the members of the choir and was the means of bringing them together on a most enjoyable occasion, which will not soon be forgotten by them.

ENJOYABLE SMOKER

No. 3 company of the 57th Regiment, Peterborough Rangers, held a most enjoyable smoker last evening in the company's quarters at the armouries. A programme was rendered, after which refreshments were served and the usual smoker's pleasures indulged in. The company intends holding a smoker on a larger scale in the near future.

Mr. Hall's East City Committee Rooms, Swanston's House, corner of Driscoll Terrace and Hunter Streets, will be open each evening until election day, commencing Monday evening, November 6th. All friends and supporters are invited to attend.

ENJOYED JOURNEY

Before leaving Canada, Mr. Hamar Greenwood, Member of Parliament, British House of Commons, wrote to the Grand Trunk Railway System, in connection with his trip over their lines in Canada, and in which he says: "We especially enjoyed the journey from Edmonton to Winnipeg, which we made on your System in the best equipped train I ever saw in my life. You have fixed a very high standard, if this train is the standard up to which you are working."

Certain That Richeson Will Be Set Free

Special to The Examiner:

BOSTON, MASS., Nov. 3.—"Clarence Richeson will be freed," said Attorney John L. Lee, of Lynchburg, Va., yesterday, following a conference with the clergyman in his cell in the Charles Street Jail.

"I have both heard his story and examined the evidence for myself," he continued. "I am confident he is innocent, and I can promise a surprise when the facts come out. This will be at the trial. It would be improper to reveal them now."

One thing, however, is known positively—the defence will maintain that Avis Linnell's death was accidental. The theory is that she had been told a small quantity of cyanide of potassium would benefit her, and that she swallowed it intentionally, knowing it to be poison, but unfortunately took too much.

Richeson is having much to do with planning his own defence. He is well versed in law, understands court procedure ,and is proving of much aid to his counsel in preparing his case.

Says The Girl Bought Poison

BOSTON, MASS., Nov. 3.—More firmly convinced than ever that Rev. Clarence V. T. Richeson is innocent of the charge of murdering Avis Linnell ,in view of new evidence produced in the past twelve hours, counsel for the accused Baptist minister yesterday went into conference to outline details of the fight they will make to save him from the electric chair.

John L. Lee, a noted criminal lawyer of the South, who refused to defend Henry Clay Beattie; Attorney Philip R. Dunbar ,of Boston, who has had charge of the case up to this time; and Representative Robert Orr Harris of Massachusetts, met in Judge Dunbar's office shortly after nine o'clock. They said they would place the case entirely in Lee's hands.

It was to present him with every scrap of evidence favouring Richeson that the conference was called.

The new evidence favourable to Richeson, which is said to have been discovered, is that of Eugene Levit and his wife, of Cambridge, who have told the defence counsel that a girl answering the description of Avis Linnell purchased cyanide at their drug store a few days before Miss Linnell was found dying.

It was informally declared that the evidence of the Levits will be pitted against that of Druggist Wm. Hahn, on whom the prosecution will rely to prove that Richeson purchased cyanide on the Tuesday before he murder.

Shortly after the defence lawyers went into conference yesterday, District Attorney Pelletier and Judge Lee decided to have Richeson go before Judge Sanderson on Monday morning for arraignment. At that time he will plead "not guilty" to the formal indictment.

HAD THE RIGHT KIND

A young preacher went fishing for trout, accompanied by a couple of girls from his parish. A farmer who was also out fishing called to the young clergyman:

"Ketchin' many trout?"

"I'm a fisher of men," said the young preacher with dignity.

"Well," the farmer smiled, and then looking at the girls, said: "I see you've got the right kind of bait with you!"

WHERE THE CAT WAS

"What are the passengers looking out of the window for?" asked a nervous lady passenger on the train as the conducor came through.

"We ran over a cat, madam," said the conductor.

"Was the cat on the track?" she next asked.

"Oh, no, ma'am," assured the conductor. "The locomotive chased her up an alley!"

HIS REPLY

Travelling from Inverness to London, my only companion in the third-class carriage was an elderly Highlander. He sat in his corner with his plaid wrapped round him, and an expression of supreme content on his countenance, only stirring occasionally for the purpose of taking a swig at his flask of mountain dew. Not a word was passed for some two hours, and then, tiring of the monotony, I ventured to suggest: "This is a very fatiguing journey." "Ay, and so it ought to be," was the reply. "Twa poon's, twa shillin's and saxpence."

SURE OF RECIPROCITY BOUUGHT MUCH BARLEY

ST. CATHARINES, ONT., Nov. 3.—George C. Ginther a member of the Buffalo Board of Park Commissioners, who is here for a few days, stopping at the Welland, confessed yesterday that he was bitten in a peculiar manner by the failure of reciprocity to pass in Canada.

Mr. Ginther, among other large interests, is engaged in the brewing business. Believing reciprocity was bound to be approved by the Canadian electors, Mr. Ginther before the elections sent a man into Canada to buy up all the barley he could get. There is a duty of thirty cents a bushel on barley.

The man bought up many thousands of bushels, and now Mr. Ginther finds himself in the unhappy position of having to foot the big bill for duty.

"I suppose it's all in the game," he said, laughingly. "I cannot for the life of me understand why you folks turned down the pact."

He added that the United States maltsters were holding the brewers up over there for $1.32 to $1.36 for malt, an outrageous price, he considers.

"The Gospel of The Hereafter" by Rev. Paterson-Smyth, on sale at Trebilcock Bros., price $1.00.

FIRST ANNIVERSARY

The first anniversary of the new Knox church will be observed on Sunday, December 10th, and Peterborough will be interested in learning that the Rev. Dr. Bartley of St. Paul's church, Montreal and one of the best known clergymen in Canada, will be here to preach special anniversary sermons. Rev. Dr. Bartley is a speaker of magnetic eloquence and power and was chaplain to Queen Victoria, visiting England each year to preach before Her Majesty. His visit here will be looked forward to by the citizens generally.

The Case Of Mrs. Darke vs. C.G.E.

In connection with the action of Mrs. Darke against the C.G.E. Co., Mr. L. M. Hayes, of the firm of Hall, Hayes and Hall, informed the Examiner this morning that Mrs. Darke has not recovered any damages from the company as yet. At the conclusion of the evidence and after the address of the counsel, the Chief Justice addressed the jury, and gave them for consideration a number of questions, about 17 in all. After the jury had returned with the answers to the questions given them by the court, the Chief Justice announced that he would hear argument on the answers of the jury on Tuesday next at Osgoode Hall, Toronto, when he would also hear argument on, the Company's motion that the plaintiff's action be dismissed with costs and a non-suit be entered.

The Jury was asked among other questions, in the event of the plaintiff being entitled to damages, to fix the amount of such damages, and the Jury fixed the amount at $1800. It was at this stage of the trial that the Examiner went to press yesterday and the final result had not been reached, so that the report was somewhat misleading.

A PRESENTATION

Miss Annie McCann, who has been a most popular member of the choir of St. Joseph's church, Douro, and who is to be married next week, was honoured by the members of the choir last night when she was presented with a dozen silver knives and forks and a suitable address. The presentation was made by Miss Mary Mahoney, while the address was read by Miss Mamie Allen, the organist of the church. Miss McCann made an appropriate speech in reply, thanking the members of the choir for their kind words and gift.

Cannel Coal For Grates

FOR THE CONCEITED MAN

No Amount of Genius Ever has been Able to Carry Egotism Very Far.

From the Outlook.

Men detest egotists because they are absorbed in themselves, and that particular form of selfishness is not only offensive, but ridiculous; it takes a great deal of genius to carry egotism, and no amount of genius can carry it very far. Unless he has gifts of mind, the conceited man is more or less of a bore, and the contrast between what he is and what he believes he is, forms a standing challenge to tell him the truth about himself.

Great ability often goes with egotism, but conceit is as a rule, the besetting sin of the man whose abilities are below the level of his ambitions. Such a man may have good intentions and capacity adequate for good work, but he is rarely taken seriously, and everybody is tempted to puncture his pretensions. Egotism is a fundamental fault of character; conceit is often the superficial weakness of those who lack self-knowledge.

FIREMEN BADLY INJURED

Special Wire to The Examiner.

NORTH BAY, NOV. 3.— Firemen Scoffield and Billington were severely hurt this morning when going to a fire. Their apparatus struck a telephone pole, throwing them heavily to the pavement. Schofield may die.

CAN SECURE POSSESSION

Mr. Frank White, flour and feed merchant, who appeared as a plaintiff in a police court case yesterday morning, against V. Viener, who, it is alleged, sold a carload of hay to Mr. White, under false representation, when seen by an Examiner reporter this morning, was undecided as to whether he would take further action. The charge against Viener was dismissed. Mr. White says that he can secure possession of the hay, which is at present standing on the track at the G. T. R. station, by securing a bill of lading. The hay is very wet and could only be disposed of by selling at a sacrifice to a stockman who would feed it to cattle.

MOSLEY ESTATE

This park lot on Communication Road nearly opposite Thomas Edgar's residence consisting of 10 acres, is advertised for sale by Public Auction at the Munro House Peterborough at 2 p. m. on Monday November 13th. 1911. There are on the premises a snug brick house, good outbuildings, large hennery, also a small fruit orchard. This will make an ideal residence property or market garden. It is being sold by the Administrator. Apply to. Dumble & Johnston

A SCARCE COMMODITY

A scowload of potatoes arrived in the city this morning from the Rice Lake district, and are finding a ready market here. The outlook for the lowering of the present high price for potatoes, is hopeless, according to reports received from the farmers of Smith, Otonabee, and surrounding townships, who report a scarcity in this year's crop. Several carloads have been shipped in from Nova Scotia, and other points during the past few weeks.

VETERANS' MEETING

A meeting of the Veterans of 1866 was held in the Armouries last evening. Almost the whole of the city veterans were present and great enthusiasm prevailed. The chief subject for consideration was that an application be made to the Government for similar considerations as were shown to the veterans of South Africa.

HAVE ARRIVED

The carload of horses which were being shipped from the Pincher Creek district, Alberta, by Mr. Robert Leary, of this city, have arrived, and are attracting considerable attention. They are being housed at the Exhibition Grounds.

EVERYBODY'S FRIEND

The old family doctor, of whom so few are now seen in this age of "specialists" was the valued friend and adviser of his patients. They depended on him to keep them in health, and cheer them with his counsel. He taught them the wisdom of preventing illness by watching closely after the health of the family.

Mrs. S .H DuBois writes from her home at Hempstead, L. I.: "Vinol is an old friend of our family. We have used it for years whenever any of us need a tonic on account of being in a rundown state of health, and it always gives perfect satisfaction. We have used nine bottles this winter."

There are thousands of families who could and do say the same thing. Vinol, our delicious cod liver and iron preparation without oil, has proved its value by bringing back rugged health and strength to vast numbers of weak, rundown men, women and children. That is why we sell so much and guarantee it to give satisfaction. If it disappoints you, you can have your money back at once.

ATTRACTIVE NEW CARD

Mr. F. C. Cubitt, the local bookseller, has just published a new series of picture postcards of Peterborough and vicinity that will undoubtedly attract attention, not only on account of the variety of the subjects chosen, but also for one splendid photography and the artistic nature of the cards themselves. They are printed with a pebbled border and on a glossy paper and should be in demand. The views are thoroughly representative of Peterborough as they compromise a wide variety.

LINDSAY'S NEW INDUSTRIAL COMMISSIONER APPOINTED

Will Be Paid $100 Per Week and Will Pay His Own Expenses—His Plan of Operation—Other Interesting Features.

Mr. Wm. McCombe was appointed Industrial Commissioner for the Town of Lindsay last evening at a meeting of the subscribers to the Industrial campaign fund, held in the Council Chamber. The proposed basis of agreement stipulates that he be engaged for one year, and at the expiration of three months his services will be dispensed with if not satisfactory. After that a month's notice must be given before he can be dismissed. His salary will be $100 a week, he to pay all his expenses.

Mr. McCombe Speaks.

Mr. I. E. Weldon presided and called upon Mr. McCombe, who stated that the interest he had taken in the movement grew out of the work he had done in connection with the Sylvester Co. It was a hard struggle to get it in shape, but he had succeeded. During this period he had been impressed by the fact that Lindsay was not getting what it was entitled to. He had talked the matter over with prominent citizens of the town who had the interests of the town at heart and had endeavoured to get their views into concrete form. He finally worked out a scheme which was in line with modern practises in leading towns and cities. An industrial fund had been subscribed and the question was which was the wisest way to administer the fund in order to bring the greatest good to Lindsay. The concensus of opinion seemed to be that the appointment of an Industrial Commissioner was the most modern method.

Plan of Operation.

A plan for the operation of the Industrial Commission of the Town of Lindsay, was read by Mr. McCombe and approved of by the meeting:

A voluntary organisation, made up of the Corporation of the town, when it is enabled to do so by legislation, power interests, and such citizens as join the movement and contribute to the expenses thereof. From and out of this number there will be elected a governing commission or council of five, and they and the other subscribers shall employ and appoint an Industrial Commissioner or agent, who shall be under the immediate direction of the Council of five, and responsible to the entire citizenship of the Municipality generally, and the subscribers to the fund particularly.

General public meetings for the purpose of discussion shall be held from time to time, at which meetings the Commissioner of Industries and the governing council shall report the work accomplished and the plan for future work. Such metings shall be called by the Council and at any time upon the written request of the Council of five.

The Governing Council of five shall meet with the Commissioner at least once a month and oftener, if necessary, for the purpose of receiving his reports and conducting the business of the Industrial movement, or considering any other questions that may be properly within their province looking to the betterment of the town.

The Industrial Commissioner shall be under the direction and control of Industrial Council of five and shall in all matters receive their sanction and direction before proceeding therein.

No liability for money shall be incurred without the direct order therein of the Industrial Council of five.

All funds from whatsoever source, shall be deposited in the name of the "Industrial Movement Fund of Lindsay" in a bank approved by the Industrial Council of five and shall be drawn only on the cheque of Chairman of the Council countersigned by the Treasurer of the council of five, who shall be elected by themselves, from their number.

All printed matter issued under the name of the Industrial Movement of Lindsay or in its behalf shall receive the approval by a majority of the Industrial Council of five.

The Industrial Council of five shall appoint either one of their number or the Industrial Commissioner as Secretary of their body, and accurate minutes shall be kept, showing all transactions of the Industrial Council of five, and all such minutes shall be recorded, showing approval of the payments of money, contracts, literature, printed matter issued or other matters within the province of the committee of five looking to the Industrial betterment of Lindsay, and these minutes shall be at all reasonable times subject to the inspection of any citizen of the Town of Lindsay, and shall be from time to time read before the public meeting of citizens, and published in the public press, as a part of the proceedings of such meeting.

All propositions received or reviewed by the Industrial Commissioner shall be submitted to the Industrial Commissioner of five, and upon their approval submitted to the general citizens for action before being proceeded with.

The foregoing being the general rules of conduct of the Industrial Committee of five in the Town of Lindsay and the Industrial Commissioner of the Town of Lindsay, and are in lieu of by-law until such time as the Industrial movement takes the form of an incorporate body.

Industrial Council.

An industrial Council of five of the Industrial Movement of Lindsay was next appointed by ballot as follows: Messrs. J. D. Flavelle (Chairman), J. Carew, Jas. Boxall, Newton Smale, John O'Reilly.

The committee met after the election and selected Mr. McCombe as Industrial Commissioner. A Secretary was not appointed, but it was the feeling of the committee that such an official should not be a member of the Industrial Council. An agreement is to be drawn up by the town solicitor.—Lindsay Post.

THE IDEAL BREAKFAST BEVERAGE

Cocoa has always been a favourite breakfast drink, but the extent to which it is displacing tea and coffee in popular favour is exciting much comment.

Certainly there is every reason why it should. One can hardly imagine a more desirable beverage on which to start the day—so easily and quickly is it made, so delicious and appetizing is its flavour, so nourishing and invigorating its effect.

Every member of the family can get great benefit from drinking Frys' Cocoa. It contains every requisite for bodily nourishment.

XMAS GREETING CARDS

Samples of the most beautiful and appropriate Xmas Greeting Cards shown in the city may be seen at the Examiner Office—larger selection than in former years. Order early—drop in and see samples. Those requiring cards to mail to the Old Country should order at once so that they may be supplied in time.

POST CARD COLUMN

Editor Post Card Column.

Dear Sir,—Why not buy the Post Office for a city hall, and put the Post Office in a more convenient place? Another good site would be to fill up the Lake and put the city hall there—the water is not deep.

OBITUARY

MRS JAMES McEWEN.

After a painful illness, extending over a period of many months, Mary Rome, the wife of Mr. James B. McEwen, of 137 Benson avenue, passed away at seven o'clock this morning at the age of sixty-eight.

The deceased was born in Scotland, and eventually emigrated to the United States, living in Chicago for a considerable period. For the past twenty-seven years she has been a resident of Peterborough county. Mrs. McEwen was in creed a Presbyterian, and a devout member of St. Paul's church. She was possessed of a kindly and sympathetic nature, which caused her to be beloved of all those who were fortunate enough to be able to claim her acquaintance. The relatives have the sympathy of a large circle of friends.

The deceased lady is survived by three sons, Edward of Smith, Roy of Prince Albert, and W. Albert of Peterborough, and one daughter, Mrs. Fred Scott of Smith. One sister also mourns her loss in the person of Mrs. Robt. Shedden, of Elgin, Ill.

The funeral will leave the family residence, 137 Benson avenue, on Monday, at 2 o'clock, for interment in the Little Lake cemetery. Rev. Robt. Pogue will officiate.

PETITION FOR LOCAL OPTION REPEAL MADE AT OMEMEE

Special to The Examiner.

OMEMEE, NOV. 2.—The regular meeting of the Village Council was held last evening, Nov. 1st. After general business was transacted a petition for local option repeal was presented by Mr. John Weir, who was acting for Mr. Henry Beatty, owner of the Commercial House. The Council was addressed by the following representatives of the Temperance side: Rev. R. Burns, Rev. D. H. Currie, Mr. S. C. Ivory, Dr. Thompson. These speakers showed that local option was for the best interests of the village and community.—commercially, morally, and otherwise. The speakers, while not dictating to the Council, hoped that they would not submit a repeal by-law to the vote of the electorate.

Upon motion of A. Scott, and seconded by James. Bushnell, it was decided not to grant the request of the petitioners, believing that the continuance of Local Option is to the best interests of the municipality.

THE POULTRY ASSOCIATION HAS ENTHUSIASTIC MEETING

The regular monthly meeting of the Peterborough Poultry Association was held in their hall, Simcoe street, and was very largely attended. The directors are putting forth every effort to make this year's show the best in the history of the association and are meeting with splendid results at the hands of their many patrons. A fine list of specials and cups have already been subscribed that will appear in the prize list, which will be printed within a few days.

Wyandottes brought out some good birds, which were judged by Mr. Harry T. Lush: 1st, cock, a black bird, to W. R. Grose; 1st, hen, a white bird, to A. Everson; 2nd, hen, a black bird, to W. R. Grose; 1st, cockerel, a white bird, to A. Everson; 1, pullet, black, to Grose; 2nd, pullet, white, to Everson.

Successful "At Home" Held By Mark Street Ladies' Aid

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Mark Street Methodist Church held a most successful and enjoyable at home last evening, which was largely attended, and which was pronounced one of the most delightful functions of its kind held this season. The programme was varied and interesting, and the hearty manner in which each number was applauded indicated in no uncertain manner the pleasure of the audience. Mrs. A. A. Fowler, the president of the Ladies' Aid, assisted Mrs. (Rev.) Cragg in receiving the visitors. A very successful sale of candies was conducted, the table being presided over by Mrs. R. J. Weir and Mrs. Payne, in the afternoon, and by Mrs. J. Wood and Mrs. McDonald, in the evening. The following contributed to the programme: Miss Spilsbury, Miss Graham, Mrs G. Anderson, Miss May Dickson, Miss Bryce, Miss Stark, Miss Marion Cheverill, Lorne McIntyre and Harry Smith.

BUSY MEETING OF PUBLIC LIBRARY BOARD HELD

A meeting of the Public Library Board was held last evening in the Board Room of the library.

The following members were present: Messrs. E. H. D. Hall, chairman, T. F. Matthews, D. Walker, H. Ritchie, J. Corkery, A. Mowat and D. Spence.

The minutes of the meeting held on October 5, were read and confirmed.

A letter was read from Mrs. W. R. Morris, 1st Vice-President of the Women's Art Association of Canada, requesting the use of a room in the basement of the library for purposes of the association—and also for the use of the assembly hall for an art exhibit, during November.

Moved by Mr. Matthews, seconded by Mr. Mowat, that the request of the Women's Art Association for the use of a room for art purposes, be granted and that the room in the basement at the southwest corner be available for that purpose, for one year free of rent, and that the association be granted the use of the lecture room for exhibition purposes for one week this month, the association to pay for lighting, heating and services of janitor the sum of eight dollars.—Carried

A request from the Women's Art Association to have the picture moulding in the lecture room lowered was received and referred to the chairman of the Property Committee.

A letter was read from W. R. Nursey, Inspector of Public Libraries, advising that a certificate of standing as a Librarian, in accordance with the result of the examination held at the close of the summer school for librarians, was forwarded to Mr Dela Foose, and congratulated him on the result of his work.—Received.

A letter was read from Thos. Mulvey, under Secretary of State, informing the Board that a copy of Stuart Reid's Life of Lord Durham had been forwarded to the library.—Received.

The Librarian reported that he had in due course acknowledged the receipt of the work.

Mr. Walker, chairman, read the report of the Library Committee, recommending a list of periodicals to be purchased for 1912, which, on motion of Mr. Walker, seconded by Mr. Ritchie, was adopted.

In the absence of Mayor Morrow, chairman of the Finance Committee, Mr. Corkery read the report of the committee, recommending the payment of the following accounts:

Peterborough Hardware Co.	$7.90
Higgins Hardware Co.	1.25
Otonabee Power Co.	13.80
Kinzan Hardware Co.	.70
McClelland & Goodchild	53.33
Cassell & Co.	46.65
John Ellam	11.10
Albert Britnell Co.	59.65
Trebilcock Bros	10.00
J. Matheson	2.50

Moved by Mr. Corkery, seconded by Mr. Mowat, that the report as read be adopted.—Carried

A letter from the Library Bureau, quoting price for book truck was read and referred to Mr. Matthews, chairman of Property Committee.

Moved by Mr. Ritchie, seconded by Mr. Matthews, that the thanks of the Board be tendered the donor of the picture 'The Madonna and Child,' which is very much appreciated by the Board and admired by those frequenting the library.—Carried.

IN THE WORLD OF SPORT

EXCURSIONS FOR THE BIG RUGBY GAME SATURDAY

(Toronto Star.)

Now that the Big Four siuation is getting critical Mr. Ardent Fan and Mrs. Fan are getting restless. They want to excurt to see the foreign games of the home team.

Saturday Argonauts are arranging an excursion to Hamilton for the Tiger game, and if it is properly handled will take 2,000 to 3,000 people up. If Hugh Gall and Billy Foulds join the Argo squad to-night and back up Smirlie Lawson, then there will be 5,000 on that excursion, for there is nothing Toronto people like better than pulling Tiger teeth in Tigerloo. With Lawson, Murphy, Gall, Foulds, and Blinkley, Mallett or Smith behind that line Argos would just about come home with samples of Tiger hide. At anyrate, if they were on the line-up, Toronto would move up and bet real money on them just the same as they did when Varsity turned the trick last fall.

Saturday Ottawa Rough Riders will take an excursion from Ottawa to Montreal for what Ottawa considers the crucial fame of the Big Four. Ottawa figures tha if they can trim Montreal at Montreal they can take care of Argonauts at home the following Saturday. They figure that Tigers will also beat the oarsmen at Hamilton this Saturday ,and so let them in, a three-cornered tie.

Strangely enough up around here Ottawas are not hardly even considered, though it must be admitted their chances are as good as Tigers for figuring in the finals, seeing that both have to meet the same teams both away from home and at home.

Up in Ottawa, too, they are so sure Ottawa will get within striking distance of Varsity in the intercollegiate series that they are figuring on the largest football excursion ever pulled out of Ottawa for the game here. November 11th. They figure on bringing up a crowd of 700 or 800 on a chartered special train. Ottawa College plays McGill Saturday, and they already count it as won.

Truly the season is livening up!

ALL-STAR BALL TEAM TO TOUR THE WORLD

Plans for a world tour for the Chicago American League team and a team of all-stars made up from players of the two big leagues have been started by President Charles A. Comiskey, of the White Sox, and Jimmy McAleer, the new head of the Boston Red Sox and recent manager of the Washington Senators. The trip will be started one year from now, as soon as the 1912 season closes, and the tour will take in all the countries of the world, and will be even more complete than the famous tour that Adrian C. Anson and his followers made two decades ago.

Jimmy McAleer already has signified his willingness to take charge of the all-star team, while the "Old Roman" himself will be at the head of the Sox team. This has been one of the ambitions of Comiskey's life. He has talked of taking his team on foreign exhibitions before, but he has never announced his intention as decisively as he has this time.

The great interest in baseball that is being shown in our national game in other countries at the present time makes such a trip feasible at the present time, and it would do the game a lot of good ,according to the figuring of the Southside magnate. The trip would not be undertaken as a moneymaking proposition, but if the expenses of the tour can be paid from the receipts, it will be as much as would be expected.

Two years ago Comiskey announced that it was one of his pet schemes to take his ball team around the world, but so many things have come up in that time to take up his time that he has not been able to carry out his plan.

The building of the big plant at Comiskey Park has taken up most of his attention in the last two years, but now that he has the new plant complete and his team started on the up grade toward a pennant his mind turns to the trip again, and it will be carried out this time if nothing happens to mar his plan in the meantime.

In order to start such an extensive trip it is necessary to make plans far enough in advance so that all of the players that go along will have time to shape their affairs to be away for the six months between the two base ball seasons. The start will be made before the last of October, 1912, and the return will be planned for April 1913. The players that go on the trip will not need to put in any time in training for the season of 1913, for they will not be out of condition all winter.

Not more than twenty-five men will be taken along on the two teams. This will give a change of pitchers and a change of catchers, but the change catcher will have to be able to play in the outfield when he is not behind the bat.

FIRST MEETING OF THE CHURCH HOCKEY LEAGUE

The first meeting of the Church Hockey League was held in the Y.M.C.A. rooms last night, for the purpose of its re-organization. There were representatives of several of the churches present and various matters were discussed. Realising that the churches individually might have some difficulty in organising a good team, it was the general consensus of opinion that the League should be interdenominational and it was also felt that the financial maintenance of the teams would thus be lightened. Although some time was spent in the consideration of various questions, nothing definite was decided upon and the meeting was adjourned until Wednesday next, when it is anticipated that a larger representation will be present. The election of officers will take place at the next meeting and a suggestion of a concert under the auspices of the League will probably be made. As no active part was taken in hockey circles last season, the committee desire that all those interested should attend that meeting in order to assist in placing the league on a sound basis and thus assure a successful season.

Will Delay Canadian Finals

TORONTO, Nov. 3.—Everybody in Toronto, irrespective of club affiliations, is pulling hard for Argonauts to win at Hamilton to-morrow, and thereby cinch the Interprovincial championship so that the Canadian finals can be played in seasonable time.

Yesterday's wintry weather froze up followers of the game, but when they got thawed out against the radiators they doped it out that should a three-cornered tie develop in the Interprovincial by reason of the failure of Argos to win either at Hamilton or Ottawa it would be along towards Christmas, or December 9 to be exact, before the Canadian championship final could be played.

Hence this long, combined, and healthy pull for the Argonauts.

The local collegians want the Oars men to win for the sake of terminating the championship season at a reasonable date, and there are many patrons of the sport who think it is about time something should break for Argonauts after several years of football adversity. The Oarsmen themselves are mighty confident of victory, and will go up under the mountain prepared to take the hide off the Tigers and tack it to dry on the Rosedale clubhouse door.

Belt For 133 Pound Champion

TORONTO, Nov. 3.—Tom Flanagan has put up a silver belt emblematic of the lightweight boxing championship of Canada, and proposes to give it to Billy Allen, late of Ottawa, but now of Syracuse, to defend in his bout here against Paddy Drouillard, of Windsor, at Agnes Street Theatre next Thursday night at the National Club show.

Flanagan's move is an admirable one and will do much to clean up a complex situation, but why he should give it to Allen any more than to Drouillard or any other boxer at the weight is something fans cannot see.

If any boxer should get it to defend that boxer should be Frank Carroll, of Toronto, who has fought more lightweight battles than any boxer now in active service in Canada.

The best plan would be to put the belt up as a prize for the Drouillard-Allen bout and if the boys did not decide it by a knockout themselves or a decision were not awarded on a foul let Flanagan retain the belt until the next bout here at the weight, the first decisive winner to get it and hold it.

Its defence should always take place in Canada and the holder should be required to defend it under certain conditions at the bidding of the trustees. The weight should be either 133 pounds ringside or 133 pounds at three o'clock, and the bouts either 10 or 15 rounds.

Ball Items Of Interest

NEW YORK, NOV. 2.—Baseball men here predict the re-election of Thomas J. Lynch to the presidency of the National League next month without serious opposition. Garry Herrmann, who is one of Lynch's strongest supporters, says that the campaign "will not prove exciting."

BAN JOHNSON'S REPLY

CHICAGO, NOV. 2.—President B. B. Johnson, of the American League, before his departure last night for the Comiskey hunting camp, near Mercer, Wis., addressed a letter to John T. Brush, president of the New York Giants. The missive was a reply to the letter Brush sent to Johnson on Monday inviting the latter to produce all his evidence against the New York club, and offering the co-operation of the club in tracing the facts in the reported ticket scalping scandal in the worlds series just closed. Mr. Johnson declined to make public the contents of his letter.

A PROSPECTIVE TRADE

CHICAGO, NOV. 2.—Charles W. Murphy, president of the Chicago Nationals, went to Cincinnati last night on "personal business." When asked if it were true he was going there to make a deal with Garry Herrmann, president of the Cincinnati team, whereby one of the Cub stars would become manager of the Reds, he said:

"I am not going to see Herrmann at all, although I'll be around if he wants to see me. There is nothing in the report that I am going to trade Tinker, and I can hardly see how we could make any deal to turn Tinker over to the Reds. Mr. Herrmann spoke to me once last summer about the possibility of procuring Johnny Evers to manage his team, and I told him at the time that we could let him have Evers if a deal could be made whereby the Chicago club would not be weakened."

SALARY LIMIT RAISED

SYRACUSE, N.Y., NOV. 2.—By a unanimous vote the salary limit was raised from $3,000 to $3,500 at the annual fall meeting of the New York State Baseball League held here last night.

All clubs save Albany were represented. President Winchester of the Senators wiring his proxies. The 1911 pennant was officially awarded to Wilkesbarre, with a record of 82 games won and 61 lost.

The salary of a playing manager was increased from $150 to $200 per month. No optional agreement players will be allowed in the league during 1912.

ORIOLES GET BERLIN PLAYERS

The Baltimore Club has secured Pitcher "Lefty" Smith and Shortstop "Shorty" Cameron, who were in the Canadian League last season. Cameron played short for the Berlin team, pennant winners in the Canadian League, and not only hit over .300, but was judged by many of the newspaper writers to be the best infielder in the circuit. Lefty Smith pitched for Brantford and was named as the first pitcher on the All-Star team picked after the season ended. Scout Steinman of the Baltimore Club, on whose advice the Birds drafted Catcher Dunn from the Berlin Club, was also impressed with Cameron and Smith.

THE CUBAN INVASION

PHILADELPHIA, NOV. 2.—Headed by Hans Lobert, nine of the Phillies left yesterday for a barnstorming trip to Cuba. In the party were Magee, Schultz, Knabe, Luderus, Walsh, Cotter, Killifer, Chalmers and Stack. Walsh will take Mike Doolan's place at shortstop. The outfield will be made up of Magee, Mike Mitchell, of the Reds, and Schultz, when he is not pitching. Stack will be the substitute outfielder. President Fogel has sanctioned the trip, but wants it to be understood that the team does not represent the Philadelphia Baseball Club. Twelve games are scheduled.

MIKE O'NEILL MANAGER

UTICA, NOV. 2.—Michael J. O'Neill has signed a contract to manage the Utica New York State League team next season, succeeding Charles C. Carr, the old Toronto player, who goes to Kansas City. O'Neill played left field for Utica last season, and the year before managed the Elmira team. Formerly he pitched for the St. Louis Nationals.

ABOUT FOOTBALL

When you refer to football players as "pigskin chasers," or state that Smithy can "boot the pigskin," you display considerable ignorance, according to the man who manufactures the spheroids used on many of the big and little gridirons.

For the football is not made of pigskin at all, at all. In fact, no part of that lowly but luscious bird enters into its construction.

Football covers are made from the material that goes to make your best shoes—calfskin. And only the very best grade of skin is used for good balls. Cheap balls, such as kids buy at the corner store, are made of sheepskin. The bladder, which is the ball, is rubber.

A visit to the factory where the greatest number of footballs is turned out elicits more interesting information. For instance, a shop sage says that the reason the ball is called "pigskin," is that in the old days, a pig bladder was used to give buoyancy to the ball. The bladder has been discarded and rubber substituted.

The regulation Rugby ball weighs from 13¾ to 14 ounces. The "soccer" ball from 13 to 15 ounces.

Skins for football covers are carefully inspected and are sent to the factory after special treatment. The slightest flaw in a hide means rejection.

In the cutting room, skill is required, to prevent waste. Cutting is done with machinery. The cutter divides the hide into as many oval sections as possible and sends the pieces to girls who take up the next stage, which consists of carefully lining the leather with cotton twill. This is the only work entrusted to girls. It is slow and must be done perfectly.

The linings are stitched together on one machine and the covers on another. From the last machine the covers come, wrong side out, and the better grades are reversed by hand. The cheaper are turned right side out by machinery.

Turning a football cover by hand requires great strength. Some men do nothing else, and as a result become exceptionally strong of hand, wrist and arm.

The rubber bladder is inserted and when inflated the oval begins to look like the finished product now seen on many fields. But the ball is not ready for delivery. It is stamped on a hot press and "worked" until its outer surface is smooth and ready for the kick-off.

Although the game has changed greatly the ball remains about the same as the old Rugby. Some of the best balls are made from hides imported from Britain ,but the skin of the domestic calf is considered good enough for the majority.

Mack's Prospects Are Very Bright

PHILADELPHIA, NOV. 1.—Connie Mack should reach his players on the Athletic Base Ball zenith in 1912, with the present club. But then he will have to strengthen several spots on the team in order to keep the big title in Philadelphia.

The departure of Harry Davis for Cleveland, where he will nudge the Napland nine on to victory, puts Jack McInnes on the first bag for the Champions. It will be only a year before the little fellow will challenge Hal Chase, of the Highlanders, for the starship of the opening bag.

Eddie Collins, Jack Barry and Frank Baker will get better for the next four years. Davis played wonderful ball in the World's Series, but it is doubtful if, with another year added to his life, he could go through a season as successfully, while little "Stuffy" will age nicely and ought to be second to Hal Chase at the close of next season.

Bris Lord, that popular Upland, Pa., athlete, played the best ball of his life in the American League and twice in the World's Series he started the slugging sprees that routed the Giants. Lord may get even a shade finer next year. His fielding and his base running always has been excellent, but this season he pasted that old pill on the nose until the pitchers began to regard him as one of the four most dangerous men on the team of Connie Mack.

Reuben Oldring has reached the top of his skill. But he will not see the shadow of time for several years, for the Reuben hits .300, is a flash out in centre, and on the bags he is close to Eddie Collins as a man who combines the swiftest of foot with that of his brain.

Dan Murphy has been like a diamond to Connie Mack. He is not so fast as a Cobb, a Speaker or a Collins, but he is steady and the most consistent hitter on the Mack team against all sorts of pitchers. Pussiders and right-handers, spit-ball artists and slow curve performers all are the same to Daniel. He had a great year at the bat and his fielding was good. It may be that he will slow down next year, but there are no signs of Murphy's passage into the slower set in his work this season.

Ira Thomas is at his best. He is the brain of the catching department and will go only for several seasons after he has started to slow up, because of his real rich brain. Thomas is a thinker, a plotter, and he seldom misses a trick.

Johnny Lapp is still an infant in years, and Connie Mack says that he will make one of the star catchers of the league in another year.

Ben Egan, the Crabtown catcher, will join the Mack team this year. Connie Mack says he will be a star in a season. To Thomas will go the task of polishing up Egan for his career in the big league.

Eddie Plank and Chief Bender are young in years, and the service they have seen in the big league has but toned them up. They are better pitchers to-day than they were the day that Mack signed them, or at any time since they have been with the Champions. Christy Mathewson claims that in the pair Connie Mack has the best left-hander and the best right-hander in the American League.

Cy Morgan is not a youngster, but Cy has more left in him than he has ever shown. He has learned, gradually, to use the stuff he possesses, and he may have the best year of his life next season. He could be the split ball king of the country if he could tame a few of those wild pitchers. Towards the close of the American League season it looked as though he has discovered the delivery that eliminated a wild heave every now and then.

Jack Coombs was the "Iron-man" again for the Champions, but he made one mistake. One that came as a result of having a great heart as well as an arm of steel. He worked four games during that torrid spell last July and this slowed him up for a month. Some of the experts thought that Coombs would not recover, but he came back and in an eleven inning game against Christy Mathewson, he slew the "Big Six" for the first time it has ever been done in a world's series.

That sensational feat of Coombs in beating Matty on the Polo Grounds was the turning point in the series for the champions. Coombs will be lost again next year, unless his recent injury impedes him. Dr. J. B. Carnett says he will be able to go at his full physical limit in a month, if needed.

Harry Krause, the blue-eyed Californian, is the gamble. It looked at the end of the American League race as if Krause was coming back beautifully. He started by pitching four, then seven and finally nine innings of great ball. He had all his old slants and he mixed them up like John Shibe did the scalpers. If he is good, Mack need not worry at all.

Dave Danforth may prove to be the "ace in the hole." Here is a kid who jumped into the league without a curve ball. That seems almost impossible, but then the little Texan reported he threw a fast one; a slow one, and one that had little on it except it was a cross between speed and a drag.

Eddie Plank took the little finger in hand and taught him to toss a drop. Then he walked into the box after three days' teaching and struck out Ty Cobb on three pitched balls, all of them drops. He learned to toss an outshoot and to-day there is nothing that the Mack string, principally Plank, has not shown Danforth. Harry Martin seems to come along, slowly to be sure, but Connie Mack keeps him and that means that he must have something in the way of ability.

Carl Brown has worked hard in the Connecticut League; he pitched a half a hundred games and Connie Mack did not get a chance to try him out. He turned him into the pasture and told him to take a good winter's rest.

Amos Strunk, the outfielder, will fight desperately to displace one of the regulars, and Claude Derrick, the "Georgia Boy," will be ready to become a cog of the infield if there is an accident to one of the regulars. Both of these men would win berths on any ball club in America, bar the Mackmen, the best ball team on earth.

FOOTBALL

A football match has been arranged between the married men and single men, to take place on Saturday at the Park Street grounds. Kick-off at 3 o'clock, p.m.

Messrs. Pagett and Howarth have charge of the benedicts, and have the team in strict training, so they will put up a fair show. There is plenty of material to pick from, and an interesting game is assured.

A collection will be taken, the proceeds of which will be added to the amount collected at the recent International match, when, it will be remembered, England emerged triumphantly, after a very even game.

"Scotty" Gribb and "Dick" Evans are on the injured list, but will play if fit. Phil. Braun and Jack Donnell have charge of the Bachelors. Neither of the teams will work overtime this week.

BASEBALL BREVITIES

Andy McConnell played the game of his life during the Cub-White Sox series in Chicago. He will be with Toronto next season.

Wintering in Chicago did not agree with Johnny Evers, and the star second sacker will return to his home in Troy, N.Y.

Manager Joe McGinnity thinks he has found a star in Tony Walsh, the first baseman turned over to Newark by the Chicago Cubs.

By deserting the Giants "Bugs" Raymond lost a lovely bunch of money. His salary and share of world's series money would have been some bundle.

Chicago and Pittsburg were the only teams in the National League, and Detroit and Washington the only teams in the American League to play the full schedule of 154 games.

Nick Cornish of Savannah, Ga., has been elected president of the South Atlantic League, and Augusta and Charleston have been dropped from the organization, reducing the circuit to six clubs.

DELAYED SHIPMENTS ARRIVING

After long delay, caused by the dock strikes in Liverpool, England, a large part of the balance of our big Fall order of the newest seasonable goods, has just arrived. Everything has at once been put into stock and marked down to Retiring Sale Price for immediate disposal. This adds very decidedly to the advantageous opportunity offered to Peterborough and Community by the

GREAT RETIRING SALE

Some of the NEW ARRIVALS

The first to inspect these latest goods will be almost certain to purchase. They were bought to bring the Robert Fair & Co., Limited, Fall and Winter stock up-to-date, and their value is abundantly evident.

Evening wear materials from Paris and London, Tweed Suitings, Black and Navy Broadcloths and Serges, Fancy Dress Silks, All-over Laces, Pianen Laces, Flouncing Embroideries, Boys' Ribbed Stockings, Ladies' and Children's Plain and Ribbed Stockings. Keep in mind and make fullest use of the making up departments for Dressmaking and Millinery.

Some, as yet, Little Touched Lines

The rush has been greater in some sections than others, but a suggestion of lines that will appeal strongly when brought to mind might be timely. Don't overlook these:—

Ladies' Suits to sell as low as $7.00, Ladies' Shirt Waists, Ladies' Silk and Net Dress Waists, Ladies' Whitewear, Housefurnishings, Wilton Rugs, Axminster Rugs, Brussels Rugs, Tapestry Squares, Ingrain Carpets, New Pure Wool, White Blankets, Down Comforters, etc.

MILLINERY Velour and Beaver shapes, the very newest designs. Also splendid values Extra Special in Ostrich Feathers and Willows.

This mammoth sale means many hundreds of dollars left in the pockets of the prudent buyers who grasp the opportunity, and that much less for the store, but the big $65,000 stock must be hustled off our shelves as quickly as possible, so there is no hesitation when the knife is applied to the old prices. Hundreds have profited largely, many hundreds more may do so if they wish to avail themselves of the chance while it lasts.

It is not in society—even Christian society—that the soul grows most vigorously. In one single quiet hour of prayer it will often make more progress than in days of company with others. It is in the desert that the dew falls freshest and the air is purest.

Music and Languages Taught.—Prof. D. Schlochow, late of Toronto and London, is prepared to take pupils in German, French and Music. For full particulars, apply at his Studio, The Music Building, Charlotte street. J. M. Green Music Co., Ltd., Greene Phone 595.

While vast continents are shrouded in almost utter darkness, and hundreds of millions suffer the horrors of heathenism and of Islam, the burdens of proof rests on you to show that the circumstances in which God has placed you were meant by Him to keep you out of the foreign field.

The more a man thinks about himself—if he thinks clearly—the more humble he will become. Conceit is a sign of confused perception, and entire inability to see the true proportions of things. "Know thyself" is really a gate to the first beatitude. "Blessed are the poor in spirit."

New Music Studio.—At the James M. Greene Music Co., Limited, 185 and 187 Charlotte street, 'Phone 595 Herbert C. Treneer, A. T. C. M., Organist and Choir Master of St. Andrew's Church, will receive pupils for piano and theory. Pupils prepared for College or Conservatory examinations, if desired. A thorough and technical training guaranteed with special attention to interpretation. For terms, etc., apply to address mentioned above.

Patronize Home Industry.—There is no need of sending to Toronto, or elsewhere, for showcases, or store-fixtures of any kind. Patronize the Peterborough Showcase Co., a well-equipped factory, for turning out large contracts, as well as small ones. The material and workmanship are of the best. Prices are right, and terms to suit all people. Any one intending to equip their stores with showcases, wallcases, etc., for the coming Christmas trade should send in their order as soon as possible, before the rush begins and not leave everything to the last two weeks. — W. Yager; Factory, 709 Water street. Telephone 1153.

KIT'S COLUMN

I enter a plea for woman's humanity. "The Dangerous Age," a Danish book which appears to be unduly exciting literary Europe, goes a fair way to upset woman's claim to be a mere human being. It proposes to reveal a feminine secret which women—in a sort of freemasonry—have all along kept inviolate among themselves. As a woman I protest that no such "secret" has ever been revealed to me, but when I uncover it between the pages of this book one recognizes it as that ancient enemy of the sex, Hysteria. A loud-voiced, self-proclaiming "secret," surely!

The preface is written by the great French critic, Marcel Prevost, that "interpreter" of the heart of the Frenchwoman of to-day, and it must be frankly stated that the introduction whets the curiosity. M. Prevost tells us the book contains the "most disquieting feminine confession that has perhaps ever been written," and the author tells us that "if men should suspect what was going on in us women as soon as we had reached the fortieth year, they would fly from us like the pest or kill us like mad dogs."

What a pity this was not disclosed in the times of Helen of Troy and Cleopatra, before these mature ladies upset men and kingdoms and made their mark on history.

The story of the book is that of a woman of forty-two, who having lived a bromidian sort of life for a score of years with her good husband, is suddenly seized with a vagary or adventure—she calls it a longing for solitude—and divorces him that she may live alone in a lonely country house. Getting tired of it, she, Elsie Lindtner, sends word to a young man whom she has reason to believe is her admirer to come. He comes, sees, and turns away from this neurotic, mature woman. Whatever secret love he had for her, in earlier years flies at sight of her. They part at once—no word of love spoken between them, and then Elsie, regaining her balance, sends for her husband, who gaily replies announcing his engagement to a young girl!

Poor Elsie! She forgot how cruelly Love deals with the woman who has been seared by Old Time.

The full note of the book is that woman is and has always been a profound enigma to man. Elsie comments thus: "One could say that on the whole surface of the globe not one man ever understands a woman. No man ever understands any woman . . . . Between man and women is the truth ever spoken?"

One might as well ask, Does a woman ever understand a man? She affects to treat him as a simple, a childish problem, one easily solved. But when she reveals her furious jealousy over something that is not proved, when she attacks his fidelity, his honour, his courage—as she often in vindictive moments will do—is she showing any real understanding of a being whose desires and necessities differ so entirely from hers, a being who is not her superior or inferior, or equal, but the very complement of her, her other half? Woman is no more or no less of an enigma to man than man is to her. Each sex is made up of human beings. The members of each sex are begotten and born of a man and a woman, therefore each has some of the qualities of the other since both are human.

But we must pause when we come to Elsie's question, "Between man and woman is the truth ever spoken?" Not all the truth, perhaps. And this on the woman's side, whom man and heredity have conspired to make deceitful. We will not grant that they have succeeded, but they have put forth every effort. To illustrate, let me quote Robert Blatchford on Women:

"For centuries men have insisted that Woman is an enigma . . . . They have rehearsed her in a part which her own nature and the general experience convince her as a living lie; they have punished her cruelly if she did not lie well enough; and then they have marvelled at her duplicity, her inconsistencies, her fickleness. How can one act a lie without being deceitful? How can one deceive without being artful? . . . To force a human being to be a hypocrite; to punish her if she does not pretend; to revile her for her hypocrisy when she does pretend? Is that cricket?"

But, you may ask, when did man teach all this to woman? From Cave time out, man has treated woman as an inferior. He has arranged for her morals, her manners, her very dress. She must do this, but never that. If she is unfaithful, she must be stoned; and he has trained her sisters to cast the first stone. She to whom marriage means more than to man, cannot choose her own mate. She has to wait to be asked. She cannot have a voice in the councils of the land when laws to govern her and her children are made; she is taught that her destiny is child-bearing and cooking, and sewing on buttons; she may not tell a man she loves him; she can go out to work, but the wages of a man are not for her, no matter how capable she may be. To quote again:

"If she marries she becomes a kind of superior servant or housekeeper. . . . She has to work hard and manage cleverly; she has no wages. She hardly ever converses on equal terms with any man but her husband. If she wearies of him, be her reasons ever so good, or if she prefers a swan to her goose, she is a bad woman, and all the women and men of her world are shocked."

So you see very plainly that there is little room left for the soul of a woman to grow large, or the mind of a woman broad, or the heart of a woman generous. The marvel of it is that woman is as gentle, and pure, and brave as she is—and you cannot wonder that we pause when we come to Elsie's question, "Between man and woman is the truth ever spoken?"

Some truth is certainly withheld since woman knows that it would not go well with her did she reveal all her soul.
